When he began his ministry in Georgia, he found little missionary enterprise. The state had very little interest in or connection with our great missionary organizations. Through the medium of the Southern Christian, and by his own personal appeals, he stirred the heart of Georgia and brought her in touch with all our great missionary movements. He was also active in all matters pertaining to state mission work in Georgia, and much of the present success in Georgia missions is due to his wise counsel and careful planning.

Bro. Williamson was in demand for lectures and addresses on every public occasion. He was always at the front in movements for civic righteousness. He was a leader in every union work of the churches. He was popular with all the people. During his illness in Atlanta, prayers for his recovery were heard in all the churches, and ministers of other communions were regular callers at his home. One man expressed the public thought when he said, "He is the pastor of the whole city."

One of Georgia's foremost workers said, "Bro. Williamson has done more for our cause in Georgia than any other man." Certain it is, that much of Georgia's present rapid growth is due to his earnest and constant efforts as a preacher, editor, pastor, lecturer and evangelist, while he labored within her borders.

Bro. Williamson was always the young preacher's friend. During my own ministry he has been my constant counselor. I have heard the young ministers of two states express themselves, and I am sure that every young preacher who knew him felt that Bro. Williamson was his personal friend, anxious to help him to do his best.

As a personal worker, I have never known his equal. He could talk with all classes of men, and point out to them the way of life plainly and forcibly. He could rebuke them for their wickedness and sin and yet retain their love. He was pre-eminently a soul-winner.

While Bro. Williamson was always bright and attractive in conversation and manner, and at times even jovial, he never lost his dignity. I have heard a young lady say, "I was never in his company, but that he did me good." This would be the testimony of hundreds of those who knew him, were they to speak.

During his later years he has labored under difficulties from afflictions of the body, of which few knew; yet in all his trouble he retained his perfect faith in God, and made his life a benediction to all who knew him. "He is so spiritually minded" was a common remark.

"He has done what he could." His life will be an inspiration to all who were so fortunate as to come under its influence. The world is better for his having lived.

Corner Stone Laying at Canton.

Yesterday, the weather being most propitious, we laid the corner stone of the new building of Christian University. At ten o'clock the procession was formed in the business part of the city, and proceeded to the college campus, led by more than one hundred free masons, who were followed by hundreds of carriages. The stone was laid by Dr. Kuhn, of Kansas City, Mo., with very imposing ceremony. Seats had been prepared for the audience, and more than fifteen hundred people listened to a magnificent address delivered by T. A. Abbott on "Christian Education," which greatly increased the enthusiasm of those who were fortunate enough to hear him. At the close of Brother Abbott's address Dr. Kuhn spoke briefly on the same subject, after which dinner was served on the campus and in the hotels of the town for all who would partake, no one being allowed to go away hungry.

Among other documents placed in the box which went into the corner stone was a copy of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Aug. 6, 1903.

Everybody was well pleased with the progress made so far in the erection of the new building. The basement story is now completed, built of cut stone, and reveals the outline of a structure which in every way will surpass the one destroyed by fire last March. We are assured by the contractors that the building will be ready for occupancy this fall, and that school may safely begin at the time set for its opening, which is Sept. 22.

I have traveled a good deal this summer through the northeastern part of Missouri, and everywhere I find the brotherhood heartily in sympathy with our movement, and wishing us success in our enterprise. We expect a large attendance of students, and shall be ready to give them better facilities than ever before.

Popular Hymns No. 2.

By C. C. CLINE.

The ruling purpose of the author has been to give to the public a worthy successor of Popular Hymns. He has not sought to duplicate it, but to make a book as well adapted to the new methods of Church, Sunday-school and C. E. work as the first was to the conditions twenty years ago when Popular Hymns was launched upon its long and useful career. POPULAR HYMNS No. 2 is better than its predecessor, not because it contains better music, but because the music is better adapted to the present wants of all the working forces of the army of the Lord.

Evangelists will find the Gospel Proclamation in Song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

Choristers will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations and doxologies specially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

Christian Endeavorers will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-inspiring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing. The Solos, Duets, and Quartettes may be impressively used to enrich every session of the Society.

S. S. Superintendents who believe the Sunday-school should be the nursery of the church, the church at work saving the young, will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church.

Pastors who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed will NOT find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting, for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services. He will find that an expensive hymnal will not be needed unless it be to keep in style.

Like its predecessor, IT IS AN ALL ROUND BOOK.

The Reverent Critics.

That little article of mine in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of July 9, under the heading, "Reverent or Destructive," received a witty, humorous editorial notice in the same paper and under the same heading. The editor in his pleasantry represents me as not knowing that there is "a human element" in the Bible, and then kindly starts a "campaign of education" for my benefit. Of course he doesn't intend to be taken seriously when he credits me with such magnificent ignorance. What I wrote was suggested by an editorial note in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of June 11 in which the editor wrote of the "divine element in the Bible," but said nothing about the "human element." I wrote strictly in line with that editorial note: I simply followed the editor.

In the paper of July 9 the editor tells us (me) that in the production of the Bible "we have the human and divine agencies working together." With this statement I heartily agree, and beyond what the editor says, I believe that the "human agency" has been so controlled and guided by the "divine agency" that the Bible, the whole Bible, is a divinely given, a God-given book. The words and acts of men, good men and bad men, are in the Bible, but they are given under the same guidance of divine wisdom as are the words of Christ and of angels. Possibly I believe more than the editor does concerning the "human and the divine agencies" in the making of the Bible.

It is noticeable that the editor does not use the expression "higher critics" or "higher criticism" when he can avoid it. He seems to think that the adjective "higher" is tired and needs a rest. He writes of the "destructive" critics who do not accept the "divine element" of the Bible and who do not believe that there was a "divine agency" in the production of the Bible; and he writes of the "reverent" or "evangelical" critics who accept the "divine element" in the Bible. By "reverent" and "destructive" critics I understand that he means the same, the "two schools of higher critics." Hope the editor will sort the higher critics and give us a half dozen or more names of each sort or "school"—the "destructive" and the "reverent."

It is not yet plain from what the editor has written whether the "reverent" critics believe all the Bible, or what they believe concerning the authorship of some portions of the Bible. Answers to a few questions might be helpful to hundreds of brethren:

1. Do the "reverent" higher critics admit the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch?
2. Do the "reverent" higher critics believe that Isaiah was the author of the whole book of Isaiah?
3. Do the "reverent" higher critics believe that the book of Daniel was written by Daniel?
4. Do the "reverent" higher critics accept the book of Jonah as true history?
5. Do the "reverent" higher critics believe all the miracles of the Bible? Do they accept the miraculous element of the Bible?
6. Do the "reverent" higher critics believe that Adam, Eve, Cain, Abel and the other antediluvians were real persons or only myths?
7. Do the "reverent" higher critics accept the Bible as infallible authority in religious teaching?
8. What are the most important of the "certain," the "assured results" of higher criticism?
9. Are the "reverent" higher critics more than semi-believers in the Bible?

We presume that such old-fashioned Bible defenders as F. C. Cook, E. B. Pusey, Philip Schaff, W. H. Green and J. W. McGarvey are not to be classed with higher critics of either sort or "school." ALLEN HICKEY.

[Brother Hickey seems to have forgotten the purport of his first article, the whole point of which hinged on the idea that if there were a human element in the Bible as well as a divine, as the higher critics believe, then it followed that part of the Bible was true and part of it false, and he would like to have us tell him which was true and which was false. In our reply we pointed out that no such conclusion follows; that his whole criticism was based on a misconception of what was implied by a human element in the Bible—a lesson which he seems to have accepted. He now asks us several questions which we answer briefly in the order in which they are numbered.

1. Some of them believe in the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch, and some of them do not believe it in the sense that he is the author of the first five books of the Bible, as they now stand. They believe that the basis of legislation was Mosaic, but that it was developed in later times to meet the new conditions.

2. There is a difference of opinion, also, on this point among evangelical higher critics, most of them, perhaps, believing in the two-fold authorship: some in the single authorship.

3. Some of them do; some of them do not. It is a question on which Bible scholars, equally reverent and equally intelligent, differ. Those who hold to the Maccabean date of authorship, admit that there is material in the book which reaches back to the time of Daniel.

4. Some of them regard this book as history, and some as inspired fiction, written to teach a great lesson concerning the universality of God's love and mercy.

5. All reverent higher critics, so far as we know, accept the miraculous element of the Bible, though some would attach less credibility to some of the Old Testament miracles than to others, and especially to those of the New.

6. All of them, so far as we have examined, accept as real persons the men whose names are given.

7. Yes, all evangelical critics accept the infallible authority of the Bible as a guide in matters of religious faith, and duty, when properly understood and interpreted.

8. Some of the most important of the assured results of higher criticism, we should say, are the following:

It has given us a truer conception of the Bible as a record of God's revelation through men, to men, and has made it a far more intelligible book by raising and answering such questions as Alexander Campbell said were essential to a proper understanding of any book of the Bible, namely, Who is the author? To whom is he writing? About what is he writing? Under what conditions did he write? At what time did he write? etc. It has made more apparent the progressive nature of divine revelation, thus removing many difficulties out of the way of honest doubt. It has made the Old Testament more real and vital, by putting its writers into vital relation with the times in which they lived and showing that their messages were addressed to the men of their times, and have a value for us in so far as similar conditions exist. It has refuted and overthrown the doubts raised by the Tubingen school of criticism concerning the authorship of many of the books of the New Testament, and has established on a firmer basis the Pauline authorship of the epistles ascribed to him, and the Johannine authorship of the Fourth Gospel. Finally, it has excited more Bible study and has done more to increase a knowledge of the real contents of the Bible than perhaps any one cause in modern times. Mistakes have been made, of course, and others will be made. Wrong theories have been advanced and overthrown, and some now accepted may share the same fate. But out of all this research and investigation, there has come and will come a more intelligent understanding of God's revelation to men, and a stronger faith in the divine message which the Bible contains.

9. Many of the most devout and consecrated believers of the Bible are classed as "higher critics," who are devoting their time, talents, energies and scholarship to an

Kola Plant CURES HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA.

Free. The African Kola Plant is Nature's Positive Cure for Hay-fever and Asthma. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma in every form. Its cures are really marvelous.

Dr. J. R. Duncan, the oldest physician of Crawfordsville, Ind., writes Jan. 29th, I feel it my duty to tell all I can of the great virtue of Himalya. Dr. W. H. Vail, a prominent physician of St. Louis, Mo., writes March 8th, that he used Himalya on six different Hay-fever patients last fall with satisfactory results in every case. Mr. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes Jan. 31st, that Himalya permanently cured him of Hay-Fever and Asthma and strongly recommends it to sufferers. Mrs. M. A. Scott, Crosby, Mich., writes March 6th, that Himalya completely cured her after fifteen years persistent suffering of Hay-fever and Asthma. Mr. Alfred G. Lewis, editor of the Farmers' Magazine, Washington, D. C., was also cured, although he could not lie down for fear of choking, being always worse in Hay-fever season. Rev. J. L. Coombs, of Martinsburg, W. Va., wrote to the New York World, July 23d, that Himalya cured him of Asthma of thirty years' standing.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should use it before the season of the attacks when practical, to give it time to act on the system. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. investigation of the facts about the various books of the Bible, and we owe them a debt of gratitude which we never can repay. That such men should be looked at with suspicion, and treated as "semi-believers," is only what has been true of all those who have led the advance in religious progress, but better things ought to be expected from those who themselves claim to be reformers, and are seeking, by the very principles which higher criticism has emphasized, to give the world a truer and worthier conception of the Bible.

The first three names mentioned in the last paragraph would hardly be classed as critics, of any kind, as their work was in a different field. The last two are higher critics, of course, and would be classed as reverent, evangelical and conservative.—EDITOR.]

At Chautauqua.

Ten days ago the writer came to Chautauqua, New York, with a large company from Lexington, Kentucky. Since coming they have enjoyed the cool air, the beautiful lake, the delightfully large and shady grove, the lectures, sermons, conferences and concerts, but especially have they been impressed by the sweet, wholesome moral atmosphere of the place. Hats, umbrellas, books, shawls and other possessions are not carried off although accessible. The plane of thought and conversation is not frivolous, fleshly or mercenary, but intellectual, spiritual and altruistic.

The many cottages are well-filled. They are called cottages whether containing one story or four stories each. Very few out of our party from Kentucky had engaged rooms or board before arriving. Our train was delayed by a wreck, making the time of our arrival Saturday evening instead of Saturday morning. Still all were soon satisfactorily located, although the grounds seemed to be crowded. Lodging and meals can be had at from one dollar a day upward.

The amphitheatre, the central and chief place of attraction, will seat probably six or seven thousand persons. It is often crowded. A choir of from three hundred to five hundred singers is located in the rear of the lecture platform between a large pipe organ in the rear and a large orchestra in front.

Last night was called "Old First Night." Since 1875 this commemoration of the beginning of Chautauqua in 1874 has been joyfully observed.

Bright and witty speeches were made last night by men and woman long connected with the Chautauqua schools. The Chautauqua salute given last night, in which seven thousand white handkerchiefs were vigorously waved, was the best imitation imaginable of a stupendous snow-storm.

Judge Aldrich, from Texas, made one of the most fetchingly, witty speeches ever heard by the writer. His manner was as good natured as his images were grotesque.

The speaker said he had learned, like the wild goose, to migrate from Texas in the summer. But the people of New York had not yet risen to the intelligence of the goose.

Instead of going south in the late autumn they pack themselves away in cold storage for the winter. He had puzzled himself to discover the cause of so much rain at Chautauqua. He had found that the clouds in passing over the assembly stopped to listen to the eloquence and music and then shed copious tears of joy.

The lake flies had been a mystery to him, but he now knew they had come that they might rest on the beautiful cheeks of the Chautauqua belles. And the judge declared that if he himself were a lake fly he would travel a thousand miles for the same purpose. He had heard that paint was the only thing that could kill them.

After the judge's address the band played Dixie which always stirs the multitude to shouting and applause.

Bishop Charles F. Fowler delivered on last Saturday a very able and popular lecture on General Grant. He traced the career of the silent hero from his boyhood to his coronation on the throne of world-wide and abiding fame.

There was one serious defect, however, in the bishop's method of treatment. He forgot that the warm-hearted, brave, cultured people of the south are brethren. When he glorified Grant for "pounding" and grinding Lee's army, he forgot to be tender and magnanimous like the great Ulysses himself. As the bishop spoke of how the flower of the confederacy faded and perished under the crushing blows of Grant's superior numbers around Richmond, there were many present whose hearts still bleed in memory of perished kindred and a terrible sacrifice, and in their natural grief have a right to expect that representatives of the north will forever respect with justice and magnanimity, the southern memory, conscience, and heart. General Gordon's lecture on "The Last Days of the Confederacy" to be delivered a week later, is a shining example of the justice and magnanimity meant.

Bishop Fowler preached a splendid sermon last Sunday morning upon "The Centurion's Faith," (Luke 7:8). The ability of the Lord Jesus to control nature's forces and overcome disaster, even as the military commander controlled his soldiers, was graphically portrayed, beautifully illustrated and powerfully impressed. The great privilege of prayer was more highly prized after the sermon than before.

Dr. G. Stanley Hall's series of lectures on the "Psychology of Religion" was very suggestive and intellectually stimulating. He is recognized as a leader in the new psychology and thinks the time not distant when psychology will take the place of theology. He thinks every minister should be drilled in nature-study, pedagogy, child study and psychology. He criticised severely the old theological curriculum and method of teaching.

The Disciples of Christ are well represented here. The congregations at the mid-week prayer-meeting and at the communion on Sunday are too large for the assembly room in the "Disciples' House" which ought to be enlarged. A more spacious and better house would help the worthy cause for which we stand. It is hoped that a building fitly representing a great people and advertising a great plea will soon take the place of the present structure, for there are thousands daily passing its doors who know almost nothing of the religious host it represents and of its great aim in the world.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in 10 minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) 2-cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis Mo.

Association of Pastoral Helpers.

At the Ohio state convention in Lima, last May, the helpers who were present met and discussed the question of organizing an Association of Pastoral Helpers. In order to bring the matter to the attention of other helpers, we decided to choose a president and secretary, whose duty it should be to correspond with all the helpers in our churches and urge their attendance at the national convention in Detroit, Oct. 16-22. At that time it is hoped a permanent organization may be effected.

Such an association, we believe, would prove to be of great value not only to the helpers, but to the churches as well. To the helpers, because through it they would be brought into closer fellowship, and become mutually helpful in many ways. Their methods of work would be improved by conferring with each other and comparing experiences. They would come to know better both their own work and the needs of the field, and hence would become more efficient in their service. To the churches, the association would prove helpful by leading them to understand the value and necessity of such service. Many of our pastors already recognize the value and feel the need of a helper and desire to have such assistance in their own churches, but have not yet been able to convince their churches that it is possible and practical.

If we can rightly interpret the signs of the times, there is a growing tendency to multiply trained workers rather than congregations. It is much the better and cheaper way. The spirit of enthusiasm in a large, wide-awake, growing church has immense drawing power. In all cities we find great numbers passing by the small, struggling mission churches and going miles to work in a large, well organized church. Many, too, when they move away from a large church and break the old associations, become lonely and discouraged, "Where the music is slow, the spirit is low, and you have to furnish all the go." In time they may leave the church altogether.

Since these conditions exist, is it not wiser to multiply the workers sufficiently to take care of the large congregations and keep them organized and at work, rather than multiply small congregations? An additional worker or helper can be employed for $600 to $800 per year, while a new church organization calls for an outlay of several thousands in the beginning, and not less than $1,000 to $2,000 per year thereafter. Even when a mission church needs to be undertaken, the helper may prove invaluable in organizing and establishing the work.

The power and success of your preacher depend in great measure on his having such help. You expect him to give you strong, stimulating food for mind and soul; yet how can he find time for thought and study if he must answer doorbell or telephone every ten minutes, entertain all agents, peddlers, tramps, beggars, and various other "wolves in sheep's clothing," be at the church every time the doors are opened, fly to the bedside of the sick or dying on a moment's warning, bury the dead, marry the young, visit your homes, listen to every tale of woe, and sympathize with all your joys as well as sorrows, attend a half dozen social events and deliver three to five speeches every week, be his own amanuensis, and the church's city directory and cyclopedia combined, not to mention eating and sleeping and an occasional half hour with his own family. When all this has been properly attended to, where is the time for his real work, seeking and saving the lost and building up in the faith those who have already entered the fold?

There has lately been manifested in some of our churches a morbid, unhealthy, deplorable craving for numbers. We have known churches to spend $600 to $700 for a "big meeting" of five or six weeks, resulting in 100 to 400 so-called converts, nine-tenths of whom cannot be found after six months. The same amount of money would have employed a capable, well-trained helper for a year. With such help, the pastor would be able to win for Christ and the church—perhaps not so many—but would hold far more and keep them busy and interested in the work of the church. There might not be such a dazzling show, but there would be a steady, abiding glow.

One of the most stupendous problems before the church of the twentieth century is the evangelization of our American cities. The churches that have been most successful in solving this problem in the past are the churches that have made large use of personal workers or church visitors. Ever since Christ came to the world, God's plan has been to save men and women through the instrumentality of other men and women. The gospel appeal, which often sounds cold and formal from the public platform, comes with tenfold power and influence from the lips of a loving, sympathetic friend, in a heart to heart personal conversation. In a meeting held some time ago by one of our leading evangelists, there were 200 converts. After the meeting the pastor made a careful investigation to ascertain how large a per cent of them came because of the preaching. Of the 200, 197 testified that the chief influence that led them to surrender to Christ was the persuasion of some friend or personal worker. Only three of them had not been approached and won by personal work. How great an advantage is it, then, if a church can have one or more such workers employed and giving all their time to such service.

Again, the Association of Helpers may be helpful to the churches by finding and enlisting suitable young women in the service and encouraging them to make thorough preparation for the work of the future. They will be needed. We predict that in less than one hundred years the churches on all sides will be saying, "We cannot do without a helper." Some, indeed, assert with all confidence that the day is not far hence when every large city church will employ, not one, but several, helpers.

Brother preachers, will you not lend us a helping hand by encouraging all helpers whom you know to come to Detroit next October? If you have a helper in your own church, see to it that she is there. If you have none, get one as soon as possible and bring her with you, or come to Detroit and find one. If you don't believe in helpers, "repent and be converted every one of you," for the helper is here and she has come to stay.

We desire that every helper who sees this will send us at once, by postal card, her address, with street number, as we have something to say to all of you.

Missouri Bible-School Notes.

The recruiting campaign goes right on to the surprise of all, 1,000 buttons going north this week, and 1,000 to the southwest. We hope in Missouri this fall and winter to increase our forces at least 25,000 by this agency in the schools not having yet introduced it, while the others will have their second and third sieges with good results.

Another good indication comes in the inquiry about books on methods of work, and the second year book will answer many of them, for we have a selected list by those well up in such work.

The Boone county meeting on the spur of the moment was well attended, and the interest good from start to finish, especially in Bible-school work, for the round table brought out not only the peculiar needs of the individual workers, but also the very best and most pointed solutions, which many were noting in their scratch books for future use.

J. H. Robinson, always a friend to your servant and this work, sends another token of his thoughtfulness of us, for which we are grateful. Will others?

The Clay county meeting did not lack for interest, notwithstanding the hindrance in the way of rains, but gladly received. F. V. Loos, S. H. Smith, and Pastor Davis had the work well in hand up to my leaving, caused by the Callaway meeting following so close. The crowds were immense and the entertainment first-class, but best of all was the readiness to co-operate in helping relieve the poor brethren of Argentine, prompt and generous as I ever saw. Good for Clay, one of his congregations (Mt. Gilead) shortly before sent in $65 raised by the ladies.

W. A. Moore is now getting the calls that indicate his appreciation by the people, and the demands for his help will grow rapidly, but you must be patient, for all cannot be served at once nor near the same time. It takes time and work.

The Callaway meeting held with Friendship was one of the best of the summer, and the amount raised will enable them to do good work for Christ. An old-time friend sent us an offering for our work, though he could not be with us in meeting. Thanks to Bro. S. T. Moore, and the schools of Callaway that do help.

Another good indication is the promptness with which many of the smaller schools are helping us, Middletown, Wellsville, Bethel (Buchanan), and Linneus, all of whom are doing for us as will help us much in Christ.

The Bible-school cause at large lost a friend in the death of J. T. Duvall, for over thirty years the superintendent of Paynesville, and always a friend to state Bible-school work, and whom God has taken home. God bless his loved ones.

Friends, what will your schools promise our work? Help us toward the fifth man.

The notes last week gave Sept. 13, as the latest date on which reports must reach me, in order to be "counted in." I find the printer must have more time than I allowed him, so Sept. 10, will be positively the latest. I wish I could give the dear workers all of September, but it is impossible with our convention at dates 21-24 prox. Next year we shall convene in June, most likely, and things will be different—better! Time will prove.

The secretary had a most delightful visit with the Lathrop auxiliary, in its August meeting at the home of Sister Goff, mother of their splendid little secretary, Miss Lizzie. This auxiliary is an enthusiastic band of workers, nearly 50 strong. Thirty-three were present. Mrs. Frank Daugherty is the able president. Mrs. Dorsey Fagin, the treasurer. Such visits are seasons of strength and refreshing.

We are glad to report the organization of the state board of colored sisters, who have long been anxious to place the opportunity for service through the auxiliary before the colored churches. The officers duly elected in state convention are: State president, Mrs. Fannie West, Kansas City; vice-president, Mrs. Mattie Johnson, Blackwater; secretary, Miss Geneva Mayberry, Jefferson City; treasurer, Mrs. Fannie Berry, Fulton. They have adopted the state constitution under which Missouri sisters work, with the exception of the addition of one word, in name. These women are intelligent and earnest and we shall hear of faithful works at their hands.

Letter From India.

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON:—I have been reading some numbers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that came last week and the pleasure I find in them urges me to write and tell you how much we appreciate all your labor and thought-work in giving to our brotherhood such an inspiring, helpful paper. I know that you get many grateful words, and yet the messages have come so into the heart life that I feel I want to reach out my hand to you and thank you.

If our paper means much to our dear brethren at home, who are in the midst of many helpful, uplifting influences, it means more to us here. It is good to know that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is in full sympathy with the fellowship of those who love the Lord—by whatever name they may call themselves. If we all love Him and love each other, we are His—His own—and we are brethren and it is good for brethren to dwell together in unity and to work together with noble endeavor. In the light of His glory we are one, and in His presence will there be any memory of differences? How petty they are—these things that keep us from perfect love and fellowship in earth's little while! What grand, noble truths we have in common! How sincerely we all love Him, our Savior and how earnestly we are striving to work His will and how blessed is our hope of His coming!

When we get off among those who do not know our Father, we forget that there are differences, in our joy in meeting one of "The Family." Jesus' test was very simple and yet how high his standard—"By this, shall all men know that ye are my disciples."

I would like to tell you of our work here—our "path in the wilderness." There is a white chapel yonder among the trees and every evening the bell rings out the call to the praise meeting, and those who love Him remember Him to each other then. On the first days the room is more than filled—many—thirty-five have learned of Him in these two years and have taken His name. Many others are learning to love Him.

In Hindu villages near us some Christian families are planted who are teaching the truths while they till their fields. We are hoping much from this leaven. My husband's life is our people's and our home here in their midst is such a dear precious one, we would not change it for any other. We have a dear, golden-haired baby—our white flower in the midst of the brown faces. She is our blessing—our Theodora.

Miss Frost is with us as I close this. It is good to have her for this visit time. In His service,

Yours very sincerely

BESSIE FARRAR MADSEN.

Nebraska C. W. B. M. Convention.

The twentieth annual convention met at Bethany camp grounds, Aug. 6, at 1 P. M., with the president, Mrs. J. S. McCleery, of Beatrice, presiding. With but few exceptions the program was carried out as announced.

Mrs. Janet Marferding, superintendent of young people's work, reported 47 junior societies and mission bands doing active work. The treasurer, Mrs. N. M. Hanna, reported $606.63 raised for state work; the secretary and organizer, Mrs. Calla Scott Willard, reported 66 active auxiliaries, 30 of which were on the roll of honor, and the offering for all purposes for the year $2,909.51, a gain over last year of $843.85.

At the close of the afternoon service, Mrs. Louise Kelly, of Kansas, conducted a question box with which the convention was so well pleased that when the time came for her evening address, she had the attention of a large and appreciative audience. Mrs. Kelly addressed the audience on the theme: "Our Work or Mission." So forceful and helpful were her words that those who heard must value their opportunities more than they have heretofore. During her stay, Mrs. Kelly conducted a second question box and gave many helpful suggestions to the executive board.

Each day during the convention, the children's meeting was under the direction of Mrs. Marferding, and on Lord's day afternoon, the auxiliaries and the juniors met together to observe the "quiet hour," during which Mrs. Rose B. Wilkinson presided. This was a very impressive service since Mrs. Wilkinson and family are soon to go as missionaries to Porto Rico. Mrs. Willard introduced a resolution which was adopted by the convention, stances is worthy both our admiration and consideration. A sermon sandwiched in between two such flurries would, to the most of us, lose its religious flavor. To expect that mother to attend a missionary meeting in the afternoon, and church again in the evening, is to anticipate her early departure to a better land than this. Shall our plan of many meetings continue in the face of these weighty objections, or shall we look for a better way?

Religion is growing daily more personal and practical. In portions of our city, poverty and squalor, ignorance, degradation and vice, are allowed to sow their seeds, and multiply without any counteracting influences being exerted by Christian people. About the only time church members come within easy smell of such classes is at an occasional rummage sale. The gospel of soap and water is needed oftener, perhaps, than the doctrine of Faith, Repentance and Baptism. Our coal miners have souls to save, and Flat Boat City is a mission field.

Talk about planting a mission in some needy section, and the question arises, Where are your workers? The home church has scarcely enough to conduct its own worship in order. Why not, therefore, release the whole company from Sunday morning worship, and send them out in companies to work where the harvest is abundant, and the laborers so few? From companies they would grow into regiments, and the home church would gather them in. What are we here for? Simply to sing by the choir and pray by the preacher, and conduct a funeral of our own? Yea, verily, it seems so. Why not bestir ourselves out of the rut of despond, and climb onto a higher plane, where our anxiety for the salvation of others will cause us to forget ourselves in the consciousness of doing real service.

The future of the church depends upon the children. We should be with them in their Sunday-schools and assist in the molding of their religious impressions. Can we not make it possible for the parents to come with their children, by a change in the time of our worship? I have suggested the afternoon. This might not be best during the heated season, and if not, the hour could then be changed.

In the light of present day customs, some adjustment of our course as a church seems essential. The only apostolic precedent for Lord's day worship is that the disciples met on the first day of the week to break bread. Were that precedent followed completely, we would meet in the evening and in an upper room. Let us never forget the statement of Jesus that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath, and as we plan for the future, let us face conditions as they exist.

Harrison, O., Aug. 13, 1903.

COLORADO.—Salida, Aug. 13.—August 2, one added to the church by letter; Aug. 9, one by statement. On the night of Aug. 10, the church gave us a very pleasant surprise in the form of a social. Church here has run down a good deal not having had a pastor since last September till I came first Lord's day in July. The C. W. B. M., however, is in good condition.—G. W. COFFMAN.

ILLINOIS.—Illipolis, Aug. 14.—Am at Plain View Church, near Macon, Mo., in a good meeting; ten additions so far. People come for miles—everybody talking about the meeting; prominent people added to church; they want some good preacher for one-fourth time. Address Jones Cline, Atlanta, Mo., for work.—HENRY B. EASTERLING.

Watseka, Aug. 10.—Two more responded to the gospel invitation yesterday. Will not preach here again until Aug. 30. Any church building committee needing good art glass windows should consult our trustees before purchasing elsewhere.—B. S. FERRALL.

INDIANA.—State Line, Aug. 12.—Three added at Old Union church, Vermillion county Ill., during my visit over last Lord's day.—CHAS. E. SHULTZ, Minister.

Bedford, Aug. 10.—Our church here reports as the result of July rally on building debt, one thousand dollars raised and paid. In 15 months we have received $3,500 to pay off part of our indebtedness. Current expenses fully met and something over. A good Children's Day netted $35 for the foreign missionary society. No summer audience problem here, of the attendance keeps up in the hottest weather. God is good to us and these are loyal people.—E. RICHARD EDWARDS.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—Pryor Creek, Aug. 10.—Three additions yesterday—one from Baptists and two by confession.—F. H. GROOM.

Allume, Aug. 15.—There were eight additions Lord's day morning, Aug. 9, 8, since, making 16 up to Friday night, 14 confessions.—W. F. FLOWER.

IOWA.—Bedford.—One more addition by confession here Lord's day. I preach at Hopkins, Mo., Sunday and deliver the address at the union Sunday-school picnic near Pickering, Tuesday, Aug. 18.—LEE FURGESON, Pastor at Bedford.

Davenport, Aug. 10.—We had good summer audiences both morning and evening yesterday. One confession. S. J. White, of Missouri, has been called to be pastor here. I will enter on my work at the Central Church, St. Paul, Sept. 1.—C. C. DAVIS.

Blanchard, Aug. 13.—I am just closing my year's work with this congregation, during which time we have enrolled seven new Disciples; relighted the church with ascetylene gas and handsome fixtures. The sisters of the church are refurbishing the audience room at a cost of $100. We have located here the inter-state savings bank principally controlled by our people. J. P. Myers, the cashier formerly from Clarksville, Mo., has rendered us valiant assistance, and the new orchestra of nine pieces at a cost of about $150, is largely due to his efforts. Dawsonville, Mo., where we labored for one-fourth time last year has unanimously called us to serve them another year; we commence meeting there Aug. 17, we will live at Blanchard the coming year. I preach at three points and lecture some. We leave Sept. 1, for New York state for one month and visit our parents, who are in feeble health. The Blanchard congregation gave me a very complimentary letter of testimonials signed by the elders and deacons.—ISAAC S. BUSSING.

Shenandoah, Aug. 17.—Three added here by letter since last report; two of them yesterday.—H. C. LITTLETON.

KANSAS.—Wichita, Aug. 10.—One addition to the South Lawrence Ave. Church yesterday.—W. T. McLAIN.

Potter, Aug. 10.—R. E. Callithon, held us a short meeting, too short to test the field. Two baptisms and two by relation. He may accept a call to Holton, Kansas. This church has called the writer another year half time. We may accept it.—H. E. BALLON.

Westmoreland, Aug. 10.—Twelve baptisms; two from Baptists, three by relation here since last report. We begin a meeting with them Aug. 25. They need some young man all the time—county seat—good church.—H. E. BALLON.

KENTUCKY.—Elizabethtown, Aug. 10.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting at Glendale, Ky., with five additions, all by confession and baptism. Bro. C. B. Reynolds, of New Philadelphia, O., did the preaching, large crowds were present at each meeting, and much good was done to the spiritual growth of the church. I go to Sonora to begin a ten days' meeting with A. C. Tharpe.—CHAS. RICHARD VAWTER.

MICHIGAN.—Cascade, Aug. 11.—Three confessions last Lord's day.—C. M. KEENE.

MISSOURI.—Troy, Aug. 15.—I have just returned from holding a protracted meeting at old Liberty Church in Maries Co., Mo., with three accessions and the church greatly strengthened. It was here, fifty years ago, I preached my first two sermons with three conversions. The friends on Tuesday gave me a grand fish-try.—E. R. CHILTON.

Weaubleau, Aug. 12.—I filled my appointment at Prairie Valley last Sunday. While there a messenger came after me to go to Doolies Bend and preach a few nights in a meeting Bro. Smith had begun. He is very old and broke down after preaching his third sermon. He had two additions, one by baptism when I went, and I preached three sermons and had six more confessions, and left Bro. Smith to continue the meeting. He was very much better after resting a few days. He is 73 years old and is an able defender of the Gospel. We expect to hear of great results yet from the meeting. I begin here Saturday night with home forces.—S. E. HENDRICKSON.

Springfield, Aug. 14.—Eleven added to the First Church recently. We are now engaged in a series of tent meetings, assisted by Ida Simpson, singing evangelist. Seven added; three confessions.—E. W. BOWERS, pastor.

Appleton City, Aug. 12.—We closed a three weeks' and three days' meeting at Center last night with eleven additions. E. H. Williamson, of Sutter, assisted us in the last week. He is a good man and a tireless worker. We will build a new church there this fall.—FRANK JALAGEAS, pastor.

Richland, Aug. 11.—There were two accessions at Swedeborg last Sunday by letter. Our temperance work is still in the front. We knocked the last saloon out of Crocker last week, also gave the petition for a saloon in Richmond a second defeat, and Stoutland is vigorously prosecuting all who are violating the law in her midst. We are in the fight on the promises of God (Matt. 18:19).—J. R. BLUNT.

Quick City, Aug. 17.—Elder A. Sterlings, of Warrensburg, Mo., has just closed a two weeks' meeting at this place with eight additions: six by confession, two by statement.—J. N. FORT, clerk.

OHIO.—Geneva, Aug. 10.—Three were added to the church yesterday by primary obedience.—H. L. ATKINSON.

State Evangelist Geo. A. Ragan just closed a tent meeting in Byessville, O., resulting in the organization of a church of seventy-one members. This congregation and the near by country church of Harmony will co-operate in the support of a minister. J. E. Hawes rendered very efficient service in the meeting both in preparing for it and in conducting the song services. Evangelist Ragan begins a tent meeting in Caldwell, Aug. 16.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.—Lawton, Aug. 14.—Two added last Sunday; 48 since January. I begin a meeting at Temple, O. T., Aug. 27, 1903. A great field here for concerted men.—O. D. MAPLE.

ONTARIO.—Bowmanville, Aug. 14.—Four added by baptism at regular services within the past month.—B. H. HAYDEN.

SOUTH CAROLINA.—Charleston, Aug. 10.—The congregation in this city is still growing. Recently one from the Baptists; yesterday one by letter. Congregation seven years old. Because of their poverty worship in the temporary structure where its initial meeting was held. In this proud, conservative and most characteristically southern of all the cities of the south, our place of worship has lost us prestige and recognition. The cause here has been saved by the A. C. M. S. Eighteen months ago it came to the rescue. We have been inspired with its small help to do what we dared not do before. A loan from the Church Extension Board secured a most desirable lot. Three-fourths of the money for a $2,000 building is raised; all general boards have been contributed to in the past nine months, state work liberally helped; congregation has no persons of wealth; on the very outskirts of the brotherhood; encouragement much desired. Let it be given through the interest taken in general home missions. South Carolina a great and needy field.—E. J. FENSTERMACHER, 1373 E. 22nd St., St. Louis, Mo.

TEXAS.—Whitesboro, Aug. 8.—Have been with E. H. Holmes one week; seven added and good interest. I think we would have a fine meeting if we had a tent.—R. L. MCHARTON.

True, Aug. 10.—Northwest Texas camp-meeting closed. Attendance 3,500; 48 added, mostly by obedience. Meeting goes to Seymour and will be conducted by the same parties.—HADDOCK & MCKISSICK.

VIRGINIA.—Martinsville, Aug. 10.—Two confessions and baptisms yesterday, and a fine worker from the M. E. church.—W. H. BOOK.

WISCONSIN.—Lynxville, Aug. 15.—One noble woman confessed Christ last Lord's day. We will begin a meeting Aug. 23. Recently we paid off our church extension indebtedness and are now raising funds to repair and beautify our church house. I am just beginning my third year's ministry here. This is the center of the great fresh water pearl region of America, and everybody is engaged in clamming and pearl hunting, and some have taken time to find "the Pearl of great price."—ALLAN M. LAIRD.

A Great Fraud.

Having become tired of seeing the innocent victimized, and swindled, I beg leave, Mr. Editor, to use the columns of your valuable paper to expose a swindling scheme, now existing in Denver as never before. While I regret to have to speak so of my own home, yet I will do so.

Restaurant and rooming house dealers are the greatest and most numerous swindlers. I will expose a few tricks for benefit of persons who anticipate coming to this country. Let me say right here that I believe other places in this country are just as bad as Denver.

Persons wanting certain properties will go and find an agent for such properties. The would be purchasers are shown around. For instance, they will go to a rooming house. There the landlady will in some cases hold a bogus telegram summoning her to the bedside of relatives who are dangerously ill. This gives her an excuse for being anxious to sell out. She will rate rooms about thirty percent higher than that for which they rent. Vacant rooms will be partly fitted up by her own personal property until she sells out. She will misrepresent water bills, light bills and almost everything else.

The poor victim, a person as a rule is one who has saved up their earnings for years, takes a chance on the deal. They immediately awaken to the situation, and are forced to sell out, and inside of two or three weeks the same old swindle is repeated. It means more than quit. It means lose several hundred on furniture. And so the old swindle keeps on and no one raises his voice against it.

I doubt if the Denver papers would publish a notice of this character. It would injure the city. The classes to whom I speak, remind me of a certain class concerning whom Christ spoke.

Another Phase of the Educational Problem.

An editorial in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of August 6th under the heading "To College or to Business—Which?" is timely and sensible. It also suggests a phase of the educational question that has long troubled this scribe. It is the part the Business College plays in the matter. Let one case illustrate. A young man of sixteen is within two years of graduation in a city High School. His parents are not rich but well-to-do. He is bright, quick and ambitious. The flaming advertisements of the Business College are handed in at the door every week. For three months in school they offer a position as stenographer, bookkeeper, etc., at $40 per month. The young man catches the craze. He wants to do that. After some debating he leaves High School and goes to the Business College. He spent four months. To-day he is a bookkeeper at $45 per month. He is "doing something;" "Got a job;" "Got my own money."

Well, what of it? What follows from this? To me a most serious sequence.

First, the boy will go through life a half-educated man, and will live a life of regret that he is so.

Second, he will be a machine-man. That is, he has narrowed his life at the beginning-point to one line of work, and he will live and die working for somebody else. He may in ten years get $100 a month, but he will still be a machine-man trotting in his little rut laid out while in his teens. He has cut himself off from all future development, except as practice will make him a better bookkeeper.

Third, this same boy could have gone on through High School, graduated, then by economy and thrift could have taken a college course. A broad foundation could have been laid, and then he could have been a doctor, a lawyer, a merchant, a teacher, or whatever he might choose, and he could have done it well. If he had cared for the Business College then, he could have had it. This instance is not imaginary. Personally, I know a score of young men and women who have done this very thing. I am lead to almost declare that the Business College is a curse instead of a blessing.

What shall we do about it? Let every preacher and college man use his influence personally among young people and parents to prevent such things. Let the editors of our papers speak through their columns to parents especially. 'Tis true we must have bookkeepers and business colleges, but they must not blight so many lives. The basis of this evil is money. Young people must be given a higher ideal of life. So, Mr. Editor, speak to us again on "To a Broad and Liberal Education or the Business College—Which?"

Organization and Life.

I accidentally took up the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of July 9, and my eyes met my heading reversed. I read the article with interest, and rejoiced that a man of the editor's prominence had the independence of thought and moral courage to think and speak as he did. The philosophy of the Disciples, to a damaging degree, has been the reverse of this; rather as I have put it. They have too often put the emphasis on work—ordinance and organization. The divine life does not always run in the same grooves. It is not the same in its enlargement and general acceptance, as at its inception, when everything was to be learned and redjusted; when the people had no books, and all was to be learned by oral instruction; when we had the great truths to be learned and put into life, in book form in every house, and taught to our children among their first lessons, and familiarized with them all their life. A true church organization is but the practical recognition of the fitness of men and women to look after certain needs to be served or interests that require special attention. How often have I seen in our churches men officiating as elders that had not the first fitness for the place, mere functionaries, while others sat by with every qualification, but scarcely recognized. It has always seemed to me that the proper one to serve at the Lord's table was not a factious elder whose only requirement was he had been appointed elder, nor the young man who was recognized as pastor; whose youth disqualified him for the oversight, but the old minister who had lost his aggressive power to do the work he once could, but whose ripe experience fitted him to feed the flock of God, and whose fitness to teach enabled him to say fitting words on such an occasion. It would keep him in touch with the living interests of the church according to the habits of his more active life and be a source of interest to occupy the mind, and a life ministry to the church, and a source of deserved comfort and recognized respect during the closing days of his life. It seems to me the divine order would be: when he has "finished his course" of aggressive work on account of age, he should be recognized a local, permanent pastor, and the strong young man as assistant. How many factious elders I have seen whose officiousness was an embarrassment and whose officiating detracted from the interest of the occasion. But I guess the editor will say all the churches can hear on this theme at present. I only wanted to say amen to his line of thought on this subject as one who has seen and felt what he says from more than three score years in the ministry.

A Fascinating Book

By a California Endeavorer

"A Christian Endeavorer's Working Journey Around the World," by J. F. Anderson, is a unique contribution to the literature of travel. I had the good fortune to make this journey with Mr. Anderson, though I remained in my home in California. He started from my home and returned to my home, and all through the five years he wrote to me frequently. Nevertheless his book is a surprise to me. He saw the world with eyes peculiarly his own. He mingled with people not often seen by tourists. The book is fascinating. It is full of information and inspiration. Mr. Anderson is a Christian Endeavorer with the emphasis on both words. I know of no better book to put into the hands of a boy, or any one, who needs to have the word impossible taken from his vocabulary.

Very sincerely,

Family Circle

The Narrows.

Charles Blanchard.

Swift conflicts there are here of which the world may know Nothing of the heartaches, while they smile and bid him go
Forth alone and conquer the caprices of his fame,
Or failing, still enduring, hiding from the world his shame.

O the conflict, O the suffering of spirit which awaits
The unconquered and unconquering soul without the gates!
Faith and hope too rudely shaken, lotty purposes laid low,
Cast into the outer darkness, while the world cries—"Let him go!"

Burdened souls lie crushed and bleeding in the narrows of the street;
Men and brothers pause a moment, in the trace of trampling feet,
A lone serge onward in the strife for bread that satisfieth not—
Now, too late, they hear the pleading of a soul that they forgot!

"For so the Lord hath willed it?"—I do not say you no!
But once you might have helped and saved this suffering soul laid low!
Perhaps he may be saved by fire, yet ye shall suffer loss—
The Son of Man himself had failed except one bore his cross!

A Good Comrade.

By Jessie Claire Glasier.

It was certainly anything but a radiant smile of anticipation that overspread the faces of the Hilliard twins when they heard that their cousin Claribel was coming to spend the summer at Sunny-bank.

"She'll tag," grumbled Paul, knitting his yellow eyebrows fiercely over mamma's letter. "We'll let her see on the start that we've always had everything together and three's a crowd," declared Lawrence. "And Mum thinks we'll like it! B'm!" "My dear boys," their mother had written, "I have a happy surprise for you. Uncle Doctor and Aunt Sue are going abroad this summer—they hope that the change will make Auntie well again—and Claribel, whom you haven't seen since she was a three-year-old, is coming to be my girl while they are away. She is a dear child and will take the place of the sister that you never had. I know you will help make me her feel at home. She has never been away from her father and mother before, and we must give her such a pleasant summer that she will scarcely have a chance to miss them."

"Just as though a girl could go on long tramps and keep still when the fish bite and camp out in the cave," said Paul dismally. "Hope she won't be falling into the brook and expecting us to be on hand to pull her out, and squealing over every bug and telling how the sun makes her head ache, like that sister of Bradley's," sniffed Lawrence, with a wry face at the memory of the fretful little girl that had spoiled half their fun on a visit last summer.

"If she's that kind we'll get papa to say we can go camping, that's all," declared Paul, tossing his curly blonde head. "We'll not have our vacation plans knocked out this year, now I tell you!" Unfortunately, the boys had never had a chance to find out what a jolly playmate a bright, sensible, healthy girl can be. But before Claribel had been twenty-four hours at Sunnybank, they were quite ready to admit that she was delightfully different from Beatrice Bradley. She had a sturdy little figure and a round happy face very pleasant to look upon in its frame of soft brown hair. Her voice was bright and frank, like her clear gray eyes, and the cluster of freckles on her merry little nose said plainly that here was a girl not afraid of the sun. Her fondness for all living creatures delighted Lawrence, who was a born nature-lover. In a few days the two were spending so much time together in search of some shy bird or new kind of beetle or spider, that Paul was almost ready to complain. "I seem to be the third that makes a crowd," he thought with a queer little grin.

But Claribel's quickness in learning to milk his pet Jersey, and her eager delight in the pretty friendly creature, quite restored the boy's good humor. Claribel was so ready, too, to sew on a button or mend a rip. It was she who was in demand when there was a cut finger to be tied up or a splinter to be extracted. The summer days went by all too quickly and vacation was nearly at an end when Claribel's great opportunity came. Leo, the big shepherd dog that had been from a puppy the boys' favorite playfellow, had been missing for several days to the grief of the whole family. There had been a general mad-dog scare during a long season of drought and sultry weather, and when no trace could be found of Leo, the boys were sadly afraid that he had strayed or been stolen away among strangers to fall a victim to a policeman's bullet. Paul and Lawrence mourned their pet as lost and refused to share Claribel's faith that he would come back to them.

Late one August afternoon the three children were coming home from a black-berrying expedition. At the edge of the village they crossed a tiny brook and Claribel spied a water plant that would look well in the home aquarium. "I'll catch up in a minute," she called to the boys, and turning the berries from her pail into an empty lunch basket she ran down the bank and knelt to dip up the coveted treasure. Paul and Lawrence were quite out of sight down a turn of the road when she climbed to the path again, and what was that noise behind her in the distance? Claribel turned and saw something that set her heart thumping furiously and made her sunburned cheeks flush a brighter color. Down the cross road, chased by a group of yelling boys, a dog was running on three legs, the fourth dangling useless. His coat was rough and white with dust, his mouth torn and bleeding, while a long hard run had covered his panting tongue with foam. Straight toward Claribel he came with frantic leaps.

"Lookout! He acts mad! Run!" shouted the foremost pursuer, and a well-aimed stone made poor Leo's side quiver. For Leo it was. His joyful bark of recognition quite drove away the fear that for one moment had made Claribel look around for a hiding place.

"For shame!" she cried. "He's only tired and hurt and thirsty. See here,"

The Round Table

A NEW WEEKLY FOR GIRLS AND BOYS

EDITORS {W. W. DOWLING, Editor Our Young Folks.
METTA A. DOWLING, Editor The Young Evangelist.

This New Paper is issued weekly and consists of eight pages of three columns each, printed on fine book paper, brand new type, in the best style of the art, and as far as appearance is concerned, will not suffer in comparison with any similar paper in the land.

For Whom Intended. THE ROUND TABLE is a paper for wide-awake, bright-eyed Boys and Girls in their "early teens," who are a little too old for The Young Evangelist and not quite far enough along in years and in their tastes and acquirements to be greatly interested in the material which goes into the columns of Our Young Folks, which is intended for young men and women who are engaged in Bible Study and Christian Work, especially along Sunday-school and Endeavor lines.

Its Contents. THE ROUND TABLE is quite distinctly a "Story Paper," five of its eight pages will usually be occupied with Serial and Shorter Stories, always pure in tone and instructive in character, with fine illustrations. The remaining pages will be filled with Table Talks on a great variety of themes; Odds and Ends of useful information; Outlines of the Sunday-school Lessons and Endeavor Topics; A Puzzle Drawer full of Riddles, Charades and Problems, to exercise the wits of young readers, and in each issue a sufficient amount of Pepper and Spice to keep its readers awake and smooth out any wrinkles that may have a tendency to gather in their faces.

Subscription Price. One copy, one year, 50 cents; in clubs of five, to one address, 40 cents each; in clubs of ten or more to one address, 36 cents each. Quarterly subscriptions at proportional rates.

Address, Christian Publishing Company,
1522 Locust Street, St. Louis, Mo.

and kneeling by Leo's side the little girl held out her pail of brook water. "See him drink? Poor old fellow! You shan't be abused any more!" she promised, her eyes flashing as Leo drained the last drop and looked up into her face with a hoarse bark that told as plainly as words how grateful he was for the cool draught. And at that moment Paul and Lawrence, turning back to see what all the noise was about, gave a great cry of surprise and delight and rushed upon their pet, almost upsetting Claribel in their eagerness.

"His leg's broken, but I believe I can set it," said Claribel, winking fast to keep the tears back. "Let me have your handkerchief, Paul, it's bigger than mine. Lawrence, you find something for splints. I saw papa set a boy's arm once. He let me help him bandage it. You'd better run, you wretched, cruel torments!" she called after the last of Leo's persecutors as they slunk down the road.

"If ever a dog looked mad he did," Lawrence reported when the story was told at home. Claribel is clear grit. And cool as a regular doctor, too. You've got a level head, little Sis."

"I only wish she was our real sister," said Paul quickly. "You've saved Leo for us, little doctor."

"Wasn't I right about his coming back? And I do believe he will get well," the little girl cried, her face beaming.

And he did. On the morning that the boys started back to school the last thing they saw from the village stage was Claribel waving her handkerchief, while Leo, no longer a cripple, his glossy neck decked in a new collar, barked good-by at her side.

The President's Mail.

That amusing letter, by the way, is a sample of many addressed to the President daily. Soon after Mr. Cleveland's marriage, during his first administration, he received an application for a postmastership, and the letter closed by saying, "Moreover, you see, this position would enable me to support a wife, just as the presidency did you."

And President Roosevelt not long ago received an appeal which began, "I suppose you get so many letters that, when you see the postman coming up the street, you do not care whether he is bringing you anything or not."

As a matter of fact, no postman comes up the street with the President's mail. Edward Beckley, a colored man, who served a Union officer at Bull Run, and who has been at the White House ever since, makes three trips a day to the post office, returning in time for the clerks to begin work at nine, and again at noon, and the last time at half past two. He used to go on horseback and bring the mail in saddle-bags, but now at 72, he uses a buggy.

The letters that come are sorted by an experienced executive clerk, who is able to detect those written by the really intimate friends of the President. These are sent to the President's room without being opened, but the rest are run through what is called the "department sieve." Appeals for post offices, pardons, minor appointments, and so on, are referred each to the proper cabinet officer. Then the miscellaneous mail that is left is mostly "briefed." A clerk reads the letter carefully and prepares a short typewritten summary which he attaches to its face.

Every report in the newspapers about the President or White House calls forth a mass of letters containing questions, protest or approval. Sometimes these letters are briefed in bunches. After the "Booker Washington dinner," for instance, one set of letters each day was fastened together, marked as favoring the President's course, and those taking an opposite view were labeled accordingly. After reading the briefs Mr. Roosevelt may go as much deeper as his time permits, but it would be impossible for him to read everything, as he often receives a thousand letters a day.

Every serious communication is answered, though the President rarely writes a letter with his own hand. Many of his replies are dictated to a stenographer, but by far the larger number are turned over to the eight typewriter clerks, who know, from long experience, just what ought to be said in reply.—The Little Chronicle.

Say, pa, what is classical music?

Classical music, my son, is music that you can't whistle, and wouldn't if you could.

Mrs. Brown (nudging Mr. Brown, who snores with his mouth open)—"William! you'd make less noise if you'd keep your mouth shut!"

Mr. Brown (only half awake)—"So'd you!"—Life.

Wise Father.

When Rudyard Kipling was a lad, he went on a sea voyage with his father Mr. Lockwood Kipling, and the London Academy prints this anecdote of that trip which is characteristic of the writer's early grip on things.

Soon after the vessel got under way Mr. Kipling went below, leaving the boy on deck. Presently there was a great commotion overhead, and one of the ship's officers rushed down and banged at Mr. Kipling's door.

"Mr. Kipling," he cried, "your boy has crawled out on the yard arm, and if he lets go he'll drown!"

"Yes," said Mr. Kipling, glad to know that nothing serious was the matter, "but he won't let go."

"Seen Ezry's new horse?" asked one citizen of another.

"I have," was the reply.

"Well, what does it look like?" asked the questioner, impatiently.

"Well, he looks," said the other man slowly, "as if Ezra had taken him for an old debt."—Chicago Standard.

"Bridget," inquired the mistress of the house, "Were you entertaining a policeman last night?" "Sure, mum," replied the cook lady, "'n' it's fer him t' say how intertainin' Oi was. Oi was doin' me bist."

"Don't you know that it is wrong to gamble?"

"Yassir," said Pickaninny Jim, as he shook the dice. "But dishere isn't gamblin'; dishere is a guessin' contest."

Morning Hours.W. S. Whitacre.

The morning hours are sweet and calm
And free from busy care.
Oh, let me then lift up my soul
In simple, pleading prayer
To him who gives the life I live
And this request repeat:
"Bestow on me thy Spirit, Lord,
And keep my spirit sweet."

The morning hours foretell the day—
Will it be bright and fair?
Will sunshine gild each passing hour,
And purify the air?
Oh, let my constant purpose be Through all the days I meet
To manifest the Savior's love
And keep my spirit sweet.
Mt. Vernon, Ill.

Plans.*By Sally Campbell.

Julian and Joe were sitting side by side on a bench in the sun. They had been there for half an hour. The kite which Joe had come over to help fly lay flat on the ground, and their ball had rolled off down the walk. Pussy was playing with it.

Julian's grandmother had been out calling. She stopped, on her way to the house, and took a seat on the bench by the boys. For some reason they did not feel just as glad as usual to see her.

"Why, you two are as quiet as mice!" said grandmother. "What are you doing?"

Julian looked at Joe; Joe looked at a last year's bird's nest up in a tree. It was Julian's grandmother. He would have to answer.

"Oh, only planning something," he said. He did not say that it was something to make Bobby Moore real mad.

Grandmother always knew when anything was a secret. She knew to-day.

"Did you ever think, Julian," she said; "did you ever think, Joe, that some of the loveliest work that is ever done in all God's big, wide world is planning? In this little time since that you have been sitting here, in a great many different places, men and women and little children have been trying to arrange some way to be kind to somebody else. Isn't it beautiful to think of? Often, when my mind is tired, I like to think about it. I have an idea that up in heaven the angels never forget it."

The two boys stole a look at grandmother's wrinkled face. Julian wriggled closer to her on the bench.

"I must go into the house," said grandmother, briskly. "This is too breezy a seat for grandmothers."

When she had gone, Julian and Joe did not find much to say to one another right away. At last Julian began: "Bobby Moore certainly does get mad, but"—

"But he's nice between times," said Joe. "Maybe"—Joe stared up at the bird's nest.

"I mean," he said by and by, "maybe it's better to plan on the nice parts of a boy, and not on his biggest fault."

"Joe," said Julian, "let's let Bobby alone."

"Well, let's," said Joe. "Let's fly the kite."

Pretty soon Julian's sister Mary came rushing through the gate. I am going out to tea!" she cried. "Francis has invited me."

"That will leave such a few for supper," said Julian to Joe—"just you and me and grandmother. All the others are going away."

When Mary came out of the house, Julian and Joe were sitting on the bench, and the ground again.

Before long they were knocking at the door of grandmother's room.

"May I ask Bobby Moore to come to tea?" said Julian. "He can take Mary's place, you know."

The next Sunday, after Sunday-school, Julian and Joe were walking on ahead. Bobby Moore was with them.

"You know about my temper?" he said. "That's my giant, and I'm going to fight it. Only it's hard. I was almost beaten Thursday when you came after me to go to tea. That helped me. It helps you a lot when other fellows are your friends."

The late Mr. Gladstone was much bored with young unknown authors, who sent him their published works for his judgment. So his secretary was instructed to use this ingenious formula of acknowledgment: "My Dear Sir:—Mr. Gladstone instructs me to say that he is in receipt of your book, for which he returns thanks. Be assured that he will lose no time in perusing it."

"I am not much of a mathematician," said a cigarette; "but I can add to a man's nervous troubles; I can subtract from his physical energy; I can multiply his aches and pains, and I can divide his mental powers; I can take interest from his work and discount his chances of success."—Union Signal.

"Ah," she sighed, "the great men are all dead."

"But the beautiful women are not," he answered.

Then she looked soulfully up into his eyes and told him she had said it just to be contrary, and not because she thought it for a moment.

"Tommy, is your mamma at home?" asked a lady caller, coming up the gravel walk. Tommy, who was peeping around the corner of the house, gave a guilty start and then replied meekly: "That's jist wot I waz tryin' t' find out; I've been swimmin'." — Ohio State Journal.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

Horace Neally, New Falls, Mich.: "I am glad Zella Manley explained about shakes. As for me, I don't believe you knew what they were, till she told you! I celebrated the 4th of July by being sick in bed, and I thought then if I had my way, every fire-cracker would be at the bottom of the sea. I guess that would have made them wet enough. But now I am well and have lost my fun; still it's more fun to be well than to shoot. I had scarlet fever. Yes, I read Norah Taylor's other letter, and Edith Searcy's, too. I vote for blue and gold for our society colors."

Mary Haymaker, Wichita, Kan.: "Inclosed you will find my first quarterly report. I estimated my poetry as nearly as I could (7,241 lines), and think it is nearly exact." (That part of the report is right, because I happen to remember what poetry you are reading, Pope's 'Essay on Man' and 'The Lady of the Lake.' But when you say 215 pages of history, it is not enough, because you do not tell what history it is; please let me know, so I can put you on the Honor List.) "I intend to go on with the work. I will soon be going to school, and then it will not be so easy. However, I shall try to keep the rules of the Advance Society."

Maco Chasteen, Pawnee, Okla.: "I desire to join the Av. S., and should like to have my name enrolled at once. I was 12 on the 10th of January. I should like to hear from Bertha Beesley, she seems so jolly. I will begin the rules Aug. 3. I am a Christian minister's daughter and take a good deal of interest in the religious work. I am a member of the church, Sunday-school and Endeavor. I am president of the Endeavor and will try to start a branch of the Av. S. here if I can." (Good for you—that's the way to get things moving—not wait for somebody else to mouse around, but stir it up yourself. I think the reason a great many people are not enjoying themselves is because they are waiting for other people to start them an entertainment. You'll never catch me waiting for others to make me have a good time! If everybody in town were invited to an ice cream and music party except me, and I knew I had been left out on purpose, I could go and sit on a log with a good book and be happy.) "Don't you think gold and blue will be pretty colors for the Av. S. badge?" (I do. Let's hear from all the members. Remember voting on the colors ends with August.)

Ruth E Day, Sparta, Mo.: "I will now send in my 2nd Av. S. report. I would have sent it sooner, but I work in the poultry yard and garden most of the time. Mamma and I have 60 young turkeys, 80 frying chickens and 6 little guineas. When I wrote to you before, I was 10, and now I am 11." (You are doing well.) "My birthday is May 30. Mamma has a sister whose birthday is Feb. 11." (And a very good birthday, as I know from experience.) "Papa is 53; he is a prohibitionist. Oh, yes, we have several pictures of you, one large one that sister cut from Our Young Folks when you wrote that story, 'The Lost Memory.' It was a good story. Why not write another story for Our Young Folks? I am trying for the prize for the most interesting letter. This quarter I read 86 chapters in the Bible. I hope my report will be accepted, as I have done my best." (It is a good one.) "I must close and go feed my poultry." (I hope you keep them well watered this sultry weather.)

Mabel E. Bush, Hannibal, Mo.: "Here I am once more after an absence of three months. Away from home on a pleasant visit accounts for my absence. We had a fine 4th of July celebration with beautiful fireworks. Don't you think Flinch is very fascinating, especially if you get beaten as I did a few minutes ago?" (Nobody has to be beaten at flinch. The way you avoid it is my slipping from under your flinch-pile all the numbers you don't want, and hiding them among the reserves.) "There are several tennis-courts here; one is just lovely. Do you like to play?" (I go over every evening. It is fashionable here.) "I should like to see Harriet Dunn's cat, Pitpaw." (I should think you'd rather see Felix. Felix is not a common cat. He can do whatever Pitpaw or any other cat can do. He catches many mice.) "My cat Dinah had nine kittens." (Well, yes, of course, Felix couldn't do that, I wasn't thinking about kittens.) "They are real cute, so if any one wants them, just let me know." (If no one responds to this offer, you'd better drop Roosevelt a card; he does all he can to encourage large families.) "I am also one of the girls who doesn't like to practice music lessons. I think we lazy girls ought to organize an Anti-Practicing Society. Who will join?" (I think the neighbors will pay the expenses.) "I wish all the Av. S. could ride down the river road to Hannibal. There is such a beautiful view; on one side the Father of Waters, on the other a great bluff covered with green vines and flowers that shed sweet perfume 'in the good old summer time.' (Do you like 'to swim in the pool?') Near Hannibal is the mouth of the tunnel, and a large bridge across the Mississippi to Illinois. Down the river as far as you can see, are great bluffs, mountains in themselves. One of these overhanging rocks bears the good old name of 'Lover's Leap.' Just wait a minute till I get some lemonade and I hope it will ade me to get cool, writing is such hot work. . . It was good—drank two glasses and will now go on. There was a terrible accident happened at the bridge during the great flood." (I hope nothing will happen to you from the two glasses.) "The excursion steamer Flying Eagle sank with 200 on board. Hannibal is a very flourishing little city of 30,000." (Maybe it is, but when I used to ride to it from St. Louis every summer on the Golden Eagle it wasn't. Didn't anything seem on the go there but the river. However, that was long ago, and if it's doing better, I'd be the last one to throw up to it how it used to act.) "There is a cement-plant and a great many manufactures. I correspond with Lois Ely, and would like some one else to write to me. I had lots of fun this summer. Did any of the Av. S. ever 'loop the loop'? But I must stop by saying I agree with Helen Ross that the Av. S. should have colors. I think pink and blue, or yellow and blue would be pretty; also red and blue, but they are so common. My favorite quotation:

'I don't know where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air,
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

—Whittier.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

Current Events

The National Negro Business League met last week in Nashville, Tenn., for its fourth annual session. The meeting was held in the House of Representatives in the state capitol building, the use of which had been tendered to the league by a special resolution of the legislature—an indication, by the way, that white people in the south are ready to encourage such efforts among the negroes. The session was attended by five hundred delegates representing nearly every state in the Union, and almost every line of business. The purpose of the League is thoroughly practical. It aims to encourage negroes to engage in business enterprises on their own account, and to develop in them the capacity for independent industrial and financial operations. The program of the session consisted for the most part of practical discussions of various lines of business and of the opportunities and achievements of negroes in each, by those who have had successful experience. Booker T. Washington is president of the League. The spirit and purpose of the organization are well expressed in the comment of one who has attended several of its meetings: "We are not disposed to discuss the benefit or efficacy of higher education for the negro. We do extend the hand of commendation to these negroes who are succeeding in their industrial pursuits. More of such, and the work-house will be less crowded, and there will be less of activity for the jury in the woods."

Justice Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, in discussing the problem of suppressing lynchings, has pointed out that one measure which would greatly assist in that movement would be such a hastening of judicial processes as would insure the punishment of criminals within a reasonable time after the commission of the crime. The public in general has confidence in the integrity of the judges, but the delays and uncertainties of legal proceedings on account of technicalities and appeals have passed into a proverb. Hence arises the mob, whose moving principle is that a prisoner in the hand is worth two in the jail. Some years ago Justice Brewer advocated the abolition of the right of appeal in criminal cases, on the ground that appeals are usually based on mere technicalities, which do not affect the guilt or innocence of the accused. Even where the criminal does not finally escape, his punishment is postponed until the crime has been almost forgotten. In cases where there is no danger of lynching, such delays are still exasperating and distressing to all good citizens. In Missouri, for example, there have been within the past year nineteen convictions as the result of the boodle investigation. But not one of these convicted criminals is yet in the penitentiary. An appeal to the Supreme Court is always good for a delay of a year or two. There is no danger that there will be any summary vengeance inflicted on these men by lynch law, but the prestige of the courts has already suffered in public opinion because of this obvious interruption of the course of justice. We are not prepared off-hand to express approval of Justice Brewer's suggestion to do away with appeal in criminal cases, but it is certain that some method ought to be devised for enforcing the penalties of the law more expeditiously. The cases must be very rare in which the guilt or innocence of a prisoner can not be finally determined, in so far as human courts can determine it, within say six weeks.

The visit of the czar's squadron to Turkish waters has already had its effect, so it is reported.

Turkey and Russia.

The sultan has promised to do everything that Russia asks in the way of reparation for the murder of the Russian consul, and begs that the squadron be recalled. The incident has given great encouragement to the Macedonian insurgents, in spite of the attempt of the Turks to keep the mission of the Russian squadron secret. An Associated Press dispatch states that important negotiations are on foot among the powers for the formation of a plan to secure reforms for Macedonia and put an end to the revolution. It should be laid down as the first premise that any system of reform to be carried out under Turkish auspices will be a failure. The only practical scheme is the establishment of an autonomous state like Bulgaria. If it is thought convenient to preserve the fiction of Turkish sovereignty, no harm will be done by that, but practical independence, including the exclusion of Turkish troops, is an absolute necessity. These Macedonians, though Christians, are a wild and rough set, but they are of the same blood as the modern Greeks, and there is no reason why they should not be equally capable of conducting an independent government. If it were thought necessary to find them a king from one of the royal houses of western Europe, as was done in the case of Greece, it would doubtless be possible to find some heroic young prince who would be willing to undertake the enterprise.

The G. A. R. Encampment.

18-20. In spite of the distance there was a large attendance of the veterans. The total number of members at present is 255,100, a loss of 9,162 during the past year. Most of the loss, of course, was by death. A suggestion which was received with considerable favor was that Congress be petitioned to pension all union veterans of the civil war who are sixty-two years of age or over. Gen. John C. Black was elected commander-in-chief. The organization was wise in not permitting itself to be used by the excited partisans of Gen. Miles as an instrument for the vindication of that much-criticised officer. Whatever may be one's opinion as to the propriety or good taste of the President's action in retiring Gen. Miles without a word of eulogy, there was certainly nothing in that act which called for a "vindication," and the suggestion that Gen. Miles should be elected commander of the G. A. R. on this account was untimely and irrelevant. Doubtless he himself felt it to be so. The veterans did what was far better in passing a resolution expressive of their respect for the lately retired general.

Mr. Schwab, of the steel trust, has had an experience not altogether unique among the heroes of this fickle republic. A year ago he was being held up to admiration as the ideal of a man who had completely mastered fortune at an early age, and he was being entreated to make speeches and write magazine articles to tell aspiring youth how he had done it. To-day no one is taking any special pains to learn the secret of his success, but the secret of his sudden failure is a topic which is occupying many pens. Ill health is assigned as the reason for his retirement from the presidency of the steel corporation, in which position he has been succeeded by Mr. Corey, but the public has good reason to believe that Mr. Schwab's defect is not so much physical as moral and mental. In the first place, as has been pointed out by many, he exhibited, for example, in his fantastic demeanor in Europe, a lack of moral solidity, balance of character and general sanity which showed his unfitness for a position of large responsibility. Aside from this, Mr. Schwab was handicapped by a fatal lack of training. His was the defect not infrequently exhibited by men whose education has been of the wholly "practical" sort. He had learned how to make steel—had learned it in the finest school in the world. But that school which taught steel-making so perfectly taught nothing else. Mr. Schwab, as a graduate of that institution, knew all the technique of his craft, but his mind was still undisciplined. He had received none of that true education which some men get in college, some in the factory and some never get. The lack of that true training did not prevent him from rising rapidly for a time. He attained the sort of success which is so often pointed at to prove that education is unnecessary. But when he stopped, he stopped with a jerk. He had reached his limit. Since he was so willing a year ago to be pointed out as a pattern for the young, he must endure it now with what grace he may if he is held up as a horrible example of the dwarfing effects of a too narrow training.

Probably the cleanest and most respectable of important sporting events is the international yacht race. For the third time Sir Thomas Lipton is spending in the neighborhood of a million dollars in an attempt to capture the cup which was won by an American yacht in the first international race fifty-two years ago. During the next few days, thousands of persons, some of whom never saw a body of water large enough to float either the challenger or the defender, will wait with eager interest for the outcome of the series of races between Shamrock III. and the Reliance. The first race was scheduled for August 20, but failed for lack of a breeze. The evolution of racing yachts during the past half century has worked a complete alteration of type. The modern yacht is not a boat, but a racing machine. It is as delicate as a thorough-bred horse, must be unrigged and towed with great care to get it across the ocean, and has but one object in its life—to win one set of races, after which its delicate and costly hull of aluminum or bronze is ready for the junk heap. The management of this sort of boat is not seamanship in the ordinary sense; it is a special profession. The old-style yacht—for example the "America," which brought home the cup in the first contest—was a staunch craft which crossed the Atlantic under her own sail, and was seaworthy under any conditions. Her cost was less than a tenth of the cost of the modern challenger, and she is a good boat yet. In short, she was primarily a boat and only secondary a racer. In the development of yachting the inevitable tendency has been toward sacrificing everything to speed. In so doing all of the serious objects which yacht racing is supposed to secure—such as the encouragement of seamanship and nautical architecture—have been entirely lost sight of. Would it not be a gain if in some way the competing boats could be required to conform to some standard of general practical effectiveness before they should be considered eligible to enter the speed contest? A race between a Gloucester fishing boat and a similar craft from England or Norway would have more practical value than the contest between machines which are described as "a spar-deck hung between a bulb of lead and an acre of sail."

When the charter was granted for the erection of the Merchant's Bridge over the Mississippi River at St. Louis, it was provided in the charter that if the ownership or control of this bridge should ever be united with that of any other bridge over the Mississippi, the property should be forfeited and the Secretary of War should take possession of it in the name of the federal government. That the ownership of this bridge has been consolidated with that of the Ead's Bridge and the ferries, is a matter of common knowledge which is beyond dispute. In view of this fact, the Terminal Association has been called upon to show reason why the Secretary of War should not take possession of the bridge as provided in the charter. The answer is to be returned Sept. 4. It is hard for one not versed in the technicalities of law and politics to see any possible escape from the conclusion that the bridge property must be forfeited. The Terminal Association has been so confident that its management would never be challenged that it has not even taken pains to employ those familiar tactics under which there may be practical combination while preserving the form of competition. The Terminal Association has not even the benefit of such technicalities, and if the case is pressed, there can scarcely be any issue short of the confiscation of the property. But what the government will do with the bridge after it gets it, is another problem. It will be impossible to operate it except in connection with the tracks owned by the Terminal Association; and it is not quite apparent how the public will be delivered from the clutches of that monopoly. So long as all trains go into one station and all the tracks leading to that station are owned by one company, there is not much to be gained by attempting to maintain competition between the bridges.

A contributor to one of the current magazines advocates a new sort of musical education, which in his opinion, should begin in the lower grades of the grammar school and should be continued through the college. The object of this course should be not to train performers, but to develop intelligent and appreciative listeners. It is a fact that there is a much greater dearth of hearers than of performers, and that a great many first class appreciators are spoiled to make fourth-rate players and singers. Why should there not be as this writer suggests, a course of training more or less elaborate, as time will permit, to teach the gentle art of listening to music and understanding it? Surely it would be worth while. The average audience yawns over Beethoven, and, if it endures Wagner at all, does so only on the good-natured assumption that probably he is not so bad as he sounds. Just so the average audience would yawn over Aeschylus in Greek. The trouble is not with Beethoven or Wagner or Aeschylus, but with the audiences which do not understand the languages which these artists employed. There are few who can ever become masters of technique enough to perform the great work of the masters of music, just as there are few who have the dramatic talent which enables them to be interpreters of Shakespeare's greatest characters. But we all study and read Shakespeare. Why should we not all (except those who are actually stone-blind) study music in the same way? The value of art lies in the appreciation of it and it has sometimes happened that those who have little talent for technique and performance have great capacity for intelligent appreciation.

The Trans-Mississippi Congress is holding its fourteenth annual convention at Seattle, Wash. The purpose of the organization is the advancement of the industrial and commercial interests of the territory west of the Mississippi.

Lord Salisbury, Ex-Premier of England, died Saturday, August 22. He was seventy-three years old and retired from office only a year ago, after almost fifty years of service. He entered the House of Commons when he was only twenty-three years old.

The Value of Public Worship.

In the beginning of this series of articles of a practical character bearing on the church—its life, organization, worship and work—we stated that life was not only before organization, but was the cause and determining factor in organization. Life, therefore, is vastly more important than organization. For the same reason worship, which has to do with the development of spiritual life, is more important than any particular method of organization; and yet, of the two, worship has perhaps received the less care and attention. Compared with preaching, too, it is too frequently regarded as less important than the public proclamation of the Word, and has often been given a too subordinate place in the public services of the church. Sometimes the reverse is true, and there are extremes in both directions. Religious reformations have all had their beginning in a revival of preaching in which the sermon bulks largely, and often at the expense of the devotional spirit. This has been true in our own reformatory movement. We hope never to see the time when the public proclamation of the gospel will not hold an honored place in the Church, but the time has certainly come when more attention should be given to the public worship.

Christianity is pre-eminently a spiritual religion. This was clearly foreshadowed in what Jesus said to the woman of Samaria: "But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and truth: for such doth the Father seek to be His worshipers. God is a Spirit: and they that worship Him must worship in spirit and truth." It is clear from this language that Jesus sought to introduce a purer and more spiritual worship of God than that which had prevailed up to the time of His coming. The apostle Peter (1 Peter 2:1-5) teaches us that the church built up of "living stones" to be "a spiritual house" has, for one of its great purposes, "to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ." Hence all the members constitute "a holy priesthood," for each one is to offer his own spiritual sacrifice to God. This is the New Testament idea of priesthood—that all the members are equally priests because all of them are permitted to approach God with their spiritual sacrifices, which are acceptable through Jesus Christ. In so far as men are true worshipers of the living God, they belong to the "holy priesthood." Of any other kind of priest on earth within the Christian Church, the New Testament knows nothing.

It belongs to the preachers and elders of the church to lay increased emphasis upon the public worship, and to seek to develop the spiritual life and the devotional spirit of the membership. The preacher who attaches more importance to his sermon than to his prayer, must correct his own estimate of the comparative importance of the different parts of the public service, before he is likely to lead a reform in the direction indicated. What can be more important than the leading of the minds of a congregation of worshipers into the Holy of Holies, seeking for light, strength, forgiveness and peace? At no time does a minister of the gospel stand in a more sacred or more responsible position than when he is bearing on his heart the sorrows, the sins and the needs of the people to whom he ministers in earnest prayer before the throne of the Almighty, whom we may call our Father. A preacher can better afford to neglect his sermon than the preparation of his heart and of his mind for the public prayer.

And then how much edification, spiritual aspiration and sincere worship, may come from the singing of hymns and spiritual songs, if only the congregation be taught to "sing with the spirit and with the understanding." The ministry of music is not yet well understood in its power to lift the soul up into communion with the invisible and the eternal. It gives to the soul wings by which it may soar to heights of love and devotion otherwise unattainable. Attention should be called much more frequently than is the case to the sentiment of the hymns, and only such hymns should be selected and sung as have sentiments and literary form which comport with the dignity of public worship. Perhaps this is as good a place as any to say what we have long felt, and that is, that we ought to have a great church hymnal containing the cream of the world's best religious music and its best hymns—a hymnal for the whole brotherhood—for only a wide patronage would justify the publication of a hymnal of the highest order of merit. Perhaps when we attain to the unity which we preach and too little practice, we may be able to unite in the production and publication of such a hymnal.

As far as possible the responsive element should be used in the public worship. The congregation should actively participate not only in the singing, but in the reading of God's word and in the prayers. The "Lord's Prayer" might be more generally and extensively used as a part of the public worship in which all could unite, orally, as well as in heart, in presenting the same petitions. It should be the constant effort of those conducting the public worship to make it as impressive and as spiritually uplifting as possible. The very atmosphere of worship should pervade the church from the time the people enter the house of worship until they depart, and all social visiting, gossip or other conversation in the house of God, together with all unseemly levity and laughter, ought to be regarded as an intrusion upon the public worship, and out of harmony with the spirit of the occasion. The spirit of reverence, when it is once developed, will effect a cure of all these irregularities which now too often mar the worship in our public assemblies.

There remain some other features in connection with worship in both its private and public aspects for future consideration.

What is New Testament Baptism?

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, DEAR BROTHER:—In your reply to my article of several weeks ago entitled, "A Glimpse into History," in which I contended that immersion ought not to be made a test of church membership, you seem to assume that immersion is the only New Testament baptism. I do not believe this, and would be glad for you to state the reasons or passages of Scripture on which you ground this view of baptism. I will reply to such statements in the spirit of Christian fairness and candor, and in order that we may see more clearly where lies the truth; and this, with the design of gaining no victory, but for truth itself; and in this way fulfilling the Scripture precept, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

Fraternally yours,
GEO. C. HICKS.

Sidney, Ia., Aug. 13.

It is quite true that in the article referred to we did assume that the immersion of a penitent believer in water, into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, is the baptism of the New Testament. We were writing for those who, as we supposed, accepted that view of baptism. It appears that there was at least one exception in the person of the writer of the above. We therefore comply with his courteous request and state, very briefly, the ground of the view of baptism stated above.

1. The first reason for such conclusion as to the form of baptism, is the meaning of the Greek word used in the New Testament to indicate that ordinance. We must assume here that our brother is sufficiently acquainted with the history of the discussion on this subject to know that the classical lexicons, without exception, so far as we know, and the vast majority of Christian scholars, regardless of their religious affiliation, hold that the primary meaning of the word baptizo is to immerse, plunge or dip. We will, therefore, not undertake to quote the authorities on this subject, which could easily occupy an entire issue of the paper. Suffice it to say, that if the New Testament does not teach that the form or action of baptism involves immersion, it would have been impossible to have conveyed that idea in the Greek language. Other Greek terms have the specific meanings of sprinkle and pour, but they are never employed in connection with the ordinance of baptism. Why should we depart from the usual, not to say the universal, meaning of the term employed to express a divine institution without good reason for so doing?

2. The apostles and first preachers of the gospel evidently understood what was meant by the Greek word enjoining baptism. What they did in rendering obedience to the great commission which commanded them to baptize believers, is the best commentary on the meaning of the term. This is true of John's baptism as well as of Christian baptism. It is hardly necessary for us to refer Brother Hicks to the familiar phrases which occur in connection with New Testament baptisms, which are entirely without meaning on any other supposition than that the parties were immersed. John's converts, for instance, were baptized "in the river Jordan;" Jesus, when he was baptized, "went up straightway from the water;" John baptized in Enon "because there was much water there;" and when Philip baptized the Eunuch "they went down into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch; and he baptized him;" then "they came up out of the water." It is unnecessary to point out that this language, and the action it describes, are meaningless, except as interpreted in the light of the original meaning of the word as stated above.

3. The allusions to baptism in the New Testament, showing its symbolic significance, convey most convincingly, to the unprejudiced mind, the same conviction concerning the form of baptism. The briefest reference to some of these passages must suffice. In meeting an objection which some had urged against Paul's doctrine of grace, that since grace abounds where sin abounded, why not continue in sin that grace may abound? Paul answers: "We who died to sin, how shall we any longer live therein? Or are ye yet ignorant that all we^o who were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? We were buried, therefore, with him through baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life" (Rom. 6:1-4). Here is an allusion, in an incidental way, to the significance of Christian baptism that requires no technical knowledge of language to see that baptism, as Paul knew it and practiced it, was something that symbolized death to sin, a burial, and a resurrection to newness of life, on the part of believers, and that it was in the likeness of Christ's burial and resurrection from the dead. Incidentally, it shows also that only those were baptized who had died to sin, that is, they were penitent believers who had resolved in their hearts to turn away from their old sins and live a new life. No amount of sophistry or learned logical legerdemain can obscure the plain meaning of this language. To the same import is Col. 2:12: "Having been buried with him in baptism, wherein ye were also raised with him through faith in the working of God, who raised him from the dead." Thus New Testament baptism was a witness to the great fundamental fact of the gospel—the resurrection of Christ from the dead, as well as a standing monument to the fact that the believer had ended his old life of sin and had risen to walk in newness of life. Hence John says: "For there are three who bear witness, the Spirit and the water and the blood: and the three agree in one." These three witnesses agree in testifying "that Jesus is the Son of God." In no other way does "the water" bear witness to this proposition, except in the ordinance of baptism.

We might refer to such passages as John 3:5; Titus 3:5; Hebrews 10:22 and others, but these will suffice. On this threefold chain of evidence—the original meaning of the word, the circumstances connected with obedience to the ordinance of baptism in the New Testament, and the allusions to it in the epistle—we are willing to rest the case as to the action or form of New Testament baptism.

A Young Man with Vision.

There is nothing that distinguishes men from each other more clearly than their difference in capacity for seeing things, and the kind of things they see. Some men can look at a landscape and see dollar marks all over it; others look and see beautiful pictures of quiet vale, or rounded hill, or winding stream. Some men look at a map and see nothing but railroads and cities and real estate opportunities, and possibilities of wealth and of personal aggrandizement, but the young man in the picture we print elsewhere, is gazing at a map on which he sees something different from all that. He sees the kingdom of God at work in our great and beloved country. He sees spots on it that indicate centers of religious activity and growth, where the strong arm of Church Extension has reared a fortress for truth and righteousness. His heart is stirred by the vision, and he longs to be a part of this great beneficent force that is working for the extension of the kingdom of God among men. He wonders why some one has not called his attention before to this map and its significance. But perhaps his pastor or the elders of his church may have looked at the map but saw nothing on it, except that it was broken out with red spots; but the meaning of these spots they did not comprehend. They did not seize the idea that the red blood, from the very heart of the brotherhood, is pulsing through the churches, showing its color visibly at all these points on the map. This is what the young man sees, and his only regret is that none of his life-blood has helped to redden the map of his country, as evidence of the visible progress of the kingdom of God. May the vision of this young man become the vision of every business man, of every preacher and of every church official, until our whole brotherhood is enlisted in this magnificent enterprise of taking and holding this great country for Jesus Christ! Let us hope that by this time all our pastors and church officials have "got to it" and are ready to point out to their congregations the spiritual significance of that spotted map of our Church Extension secretary, so that there may be no more regrets on the part of any that they have had no opportunity for participating in this campaign for the extension of Christ's kingdom.

Notes and Comments.

In a little passage of arms between Rev. J. W. Lee (M. E.) and Rev. C. G. Adams (Episcopalian) in regard to the exclusive catholicity of the Protestant Episcopal body, Dr. Lee says:

"The Episcopal Church, standing on its merits and its good works, is entitled to all reverence and respect, but when it puts on airs and claims something that belongs to no church, and especially not to the one started by Henry VIII. during the sixteenth century, then it deserves to be ridiculed and rebuked and taught to know its place as a small but well-dressed battalion in the ranks of God's million hosts. If the angels in heaven are ever amused at anything that happens on earth, this scene of a few Episcopal rectors, self-exalted and self-inflated, looking down with pity and an occasional prayer for unity upon Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist preachers, who have civilized, evangelized and educated in the new world nearly a hundred million of the most strenuous and enterprising young people known to history, must fill their shining souls with uncontrollable laughter."

The last issue of our esteemed Cincinnati contemporary, The Christian Standard, presents about the worst case of journalistic hysterics we have ever known. It is absolutely distressing. Something ought to be done to save its readers from the nervous strain which they must be undergoing in view of the impending calamities which that paper depicts as hanging over the brotherhood. An astronomer was once deceived in announcing the discovery of a new planet or comet by a fly-speck on the lens of his telescope. Is it possible that something like this has occurred to the spectacles of the editor of the Christian Standard? Several weeks ago we received an innocent little circular, as we supposed, coming from a Cincinnati publisher concerning a proposed company for publishing better and cheaper Sunday-school supplies than the brethren were now getting. We read it and cast it aside as one of those harmless but well-meaning efforts which are ever and anon being made to "meet a long-felt want." But the editor of the Standard sees, in this little circular, the signs of a great "trust," a huge octopus, which is to swallow all our Sunday-school supplies, our weekly papers, our colleges and our missionary societies, and then to handcuff the editor of the Standard, who alone stands, as a modern Casabianca, on the "burning deck" of our ship of Zion—the sole champion of the liberty of the press and of the churches! And this diabolical scheme, it seems, has been hatched out in Cincinnati right under the nose of the Christian Standard, which only at this late day sounds the note of alarm to the brotherhood. Is this a new double-tailed comet which is threatening the destruction of a defenseless brotherhood, or is it a speck of some kind on the glasses of our valorous contemporary that blurs his vision? For the peace and assurance of the brotherhood, we give it as our confident opinion that it is the latter, and not the former, and it would all be very amusing if one could consider it apart from some of its inevitable consequences.

Macatawa Musings.

Lake Michigan is on one of its tantrums to-day, and our ears are filled with the roar of its multitudinous waves as they break in white foam along the shore. The scene, as one looks out upon it is one of agitation and unrest, but the song which the billows are singing is one which they have sung since the icebergs of the glacial epoch scooped out the beds of these northern lakes and they became inland seas. How brief is the life of man when his three-score years and ten are compared with the great geologic ages of the earth! And yet there is in man that which will live and think and love, when there shall be no more sea. Human society to-day presents a scene not unlike the restless and murmuring billows of this vast inland sea. Indeed, in the sublime imagery of the book of Revelation the sea symbolizes humanity in its turbulent and restless movements. The beasts which the seer of Patmos saw coming up out of the sea were forms of government rising out of humanity. But may we not look forward to the time when the noises and the tumults of the people shall cease, when their agitation shall be quieted, when wars and revolutions shall be no more and the great tired heart of humanity shall rest in God? Perhaps this state of society is symbolized by that "sea of glass mingled with fire" which John saw before the throne of God, the likeness of which we saw last night when the sun, descending in a cloudless sky, transformed the placid lake into a molten sea.

One does not have to put his ear to the ground to hear the sounds of movement, agitation, conflict and the tread of advancing hosts in our own Zion. Would that it were all but the sound of religious activity, earnest aggressiveness, of conflict with the powers of darkness, and the shouts of victory over evils defeated and wickedness overcome. But mingled with these notes of religious activity and aggressiveness are heard harsh and discordant sounds which do not come from the harp of love. These latter, we regret to say as a journalist, come chiefly from our religious journals. How human we editors are, and how difficult it is for us to place the peace and prosperity of a great brotherhood above our personal interests and ambitions! If ever there were a time in our history when our editors needed to write their editorials on their knees, or when they needed the prayers of their brethren for the wisdom that cometh down from above, that is easy to be entreated and that is full of mercy and good fruits, it is now. Our numbers are greater, our resources are greater, our influence is greater, and our responsibility is therefore greater than at any former period in our history. If only those who lead among us will themselves be led of Christ into all the truth and grace which He has for us, nothing can prevent a glorious future for this movement. But if we are to be torn by factions, weakened by internal strife, and influenced by ambitious leaders who have no adequate conception of the breadth and spirit and dignity of our high calling, as religious reformers, then our history will but serve to illustrate how difficult it is to hold fallible human beings up to high and worthy ideals.

We have just been looking through the last issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to see what there is in it to unify, edify, uplift, comfort and strengthen our readers, and whether there be anything of the contrary kind. It is gratifying to note the perfect harmony of spirit that prevails in its large corps of contributors, and how much there is to help, and how little, if any, there is to hinder progress in the Christian life. We are glad that our contributors understand that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST covets the best gifts from its corps of writers, and that it wants nothing but that which will be helpful to its readers and will contribute in some way to the success of our great cause. All dark suspicions, all criticisms that call in question the fidelity of any of our leading men, all seeds of dissension and strife, all appeals to prejudice and to ignorance—let it be sent elsewhere, preferably into the fire, the only place where it can create any light or any warmth. Help us to make the paper, what it is our supreme ambition to have it be, a messenger of light and love, a bond of unity and fraternity, an inspiration to high thinking and pure living, a beacon light leading ever onward to higher attainments in Christian faith and nobler achievements in Christian service. Such a religious paper has a divine mission in the church and in the world. And its value can scarcely be exaggerated. To help every worthy cause, to oppose whatever is evil and injurious to men, to seek for the highest and the best, that is our aim. As we write we see through our study window, looking out into the woods, a golden-haired, curly-headed boy gathering daisies. His young eyes and pure heart hunger for the beautiful. Why should not we, like this innocent child, be looking after and seeking to acquire the true, the beautiful and the good? The habit of looking for these qualities will serve to cultivate them in our own hearts.

One task at a time. It is thus that characters are formed and great fortunes built up. One task at a time, well done, is what makes a church great and prosperous. Just now we are confronted by the duty and privilege of swelling our Church Extension fund in order that its resources may be drawn upon by needy churches, to assist them in building houses of worship all over our wide national domain. We give large space, this week, to this great enterprise, for it is one that interests all our readers and that has to do with the general prosperity of our cause. No enterprise among us has been more wisely managed, and has vindicated its usefulness to a greater degree, than the work of Church Extension. There is no good reason why all the churches should not have some part in this beneficent work. It has in it the very qualities that ought to attract the sympathy and co-operation of Christian people: it is unselfish; it is ministering to the actual and pressing needs of our brethren; it is economical; it is business-like, and it looks to permanency. May we not hope, therefore, that the month of September will witness a very general as well as a very generous response to the appeal which we make this week in behalf of Church Extension?

Speaking of September, we are reminded that it is almost upon us. The summer rushes to its close, and autumn, with its new duties and responsibilities, is here at our door. Our first Macatawa Chautauqua is now in progress here, and, like all new enterprises, it has obstacles to overcome, but it is to be hoped that its management will be such as that it will serve to develop the moral and intellectual life of the place, while it affords rational and innocent amusement for the people. Since our last our colony here has been increased by the coming of Mrs. W. T. Moore and Mrs. L. W. St. Clair, of Christian College, the latter being for the present year the Principal of Hamilton Female College of Kentucky University. We had a pleasant call also from George F. Hall, of Chicago, who came over on a day's visit to the Park. He reports his work at the Temple of Music as growing in interest and paying its way. This has certainly been a triumph of faith and of the power of the gospel. Bro. Guy Hoover of the First Church of Chicago, has also been visiting friends at the Park for a few days. But the vacation season is rapidly nearing its close.

Church Extension Day September 6

"I Have Had No Part In It."

By W. F. Richardson.

The secretary of the Board of Church Extension, in his visits among our churches, spoke recently in a congregation with about 150 members, illustrating the work of that board by his map, which showed the location of seven hundred houses of worship erected through the aid of that fund. After his address a prominent young business man of the church came to him and said: "And to think, Brother Muckley, that all this work has been done and I have had no part in it! Why have not my pastor and elders told me about this work?" This consecrated young man is one of very many who have been deprived of the joy of fellowship in a good work, through the neglect of those in responsible positions of leadership. There are not less than fifteen hundred churches that take regularly the offerings for home and foreign missions, which never contribute to the work of Church Extension. Yet every one of them would gladly help if the opportunity was only given. Thousands of the members of our churches are kept in ignorance of this work by the criminal neglect of their pastors or elders. That this neglect is criminal I want to prove by a few plain considerations.

First, it is a sin not to help our weaker brethren in all laudable and practicable enterprises. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and thus fulfill the law of Christ." So long as we have 2,500 congregations of disciples of Christ without houses of worship, we cannot claim to meet the demands of brotherly love, except as we do our utmost to remedy this condition. Not for the mere comfort and pleasure of these homeless flocks does the Good Shepherd urge our loving assistance, but that they may become centers of moral and spiritual power in their various communities, such as will be impossible in their present condition. The church must have a "local habitation," as well as a name, before it can exercise its proper influence upon the world.

We must help them, in order that they may become pillars beneath all our other mighty spiritual enterprises. Every well established congregation enlarges the base of supplies for all our co-operative work. Especially is this the case where it has itself been aided by missionary funds. Rarely does one of the churches that worships in a building erected through the aid of Church Extension funds refuse to contribute to any of our missionary enterprises. The more quickly we house all our unhoused congregations, the sooner will we receive their generous help in our evangelizing work at home and abroad.

Every church ought to co-operate in this work, because of the sure and lasting results of the Church Extension plan. No sooner does the money granted for the building of a house of worship return to the treasury of the board than it goes forth to build another sanctuary, and in this manner the gifts of the brethren are kept perpetually at work. Never will a dollar given to this cause cease its beneficent ministry until the Master returns and says, it is finished. By all these considerations ought every preacher and elder among us see that his congregation is given an opportunity to have a part in the work of Church Extension on the first Sunday in September. Count it a sacred privilege and duty before God, and make the most possible of it for His glory.

The church building becomes the focal point of hallowed memories, the radiating center of beneficent activities.

A Better System Needed.

By G. B. Townsend.

The Church Extension Fund is a necessity if we are to make our missionary work in America permanent. We must assist the weak churches to build houses of worship if we expect them to gain a foothold on the community and become self-supporting.

The method of the Church Extension Society is the best way to accomplish this purpose. They enable the struggling band to secure a neat house of worship sooner than they otherwise could, then the money is returned to do a similar work in another community. In this work the Church Extension Society should be made the agent to distribute the gifts of every church in the entire brotherhood.

Why contributions should be made to other missionary societies and this cause neglected, is a mystery.

The necessity of giving Church Extension a larger place is apparent to all. If this is to be done, our ministers must be thoroughly aroused to the importance of the work. This will be an easy task if every minister will carefully read the literature sent out by our corresponding secretary. Then the cause will be so presented to the people that they will liberally respond to the call for help from the thousands of unhoused churches.

We must also settle down to the business of giving. The Church Extension Fund should not suffer for funds for the next year if the first Lord's day in September should be a stormy day.

I believe there is something better than keeping all our offerings for missions and appointing a single day for our giving. I also believe there is something better than having one day in the year for each of our missionary enterprises. Why not settle down to systematic giving and have a missionary offering at least once per month and make a proportionate distribution of the funds among our various Boards? This system will put the work on a solid basis, and funds will be available through-out the year. Pledges should be taken just as we do for the support of the local work, to be monthly or paid weekly as the case may be, and remittances should be made quarterly.

The minister should preach on missions as a Christian duty and teach the people that they should lay by their money for this great work as they do for the support of the home church.

The boom method should be laid aside for the more systematic, more business-like, more Christian method.

The Troy Church has used this system for the past three years and we would not think of going back to the old practice.

The Offering for Church Extension.

By Richard W. Wallace.

In his beautiful story called "The Other Wise Man," Dr. Henry Van Dyke represents a Persian nobleman as saying that "Those who would see wonderful things must often be ready to travel alone." How important it is that every Christian should learn this lesson! Jesus Christ does not invite us to a life of ease and of selfish indulgence. He calls upon us to toil and suffer and sacrifice for him. He did not hesitate to tell his disciples that a career characterized by the greatest of hardships awaited them; and out of the greatness of their love for Him they did not hesitate to enter most joyfully upon that career. Great indeed are the blessings which he may obtain who gives himself heartily to the service of Christ, but the possession of these blessings depends upon the character of the service which he renders.

I am glad that Brother Muckley speaks of the offering for Church Extension. There is a vast difference between an offering and a collection, and only the former is worthy of men and women who profess to love the Savior. And then the man who makes an offering for Christ is himself the recipient of a blessing at least equal to that which he, by making the sacrifice, is instrumental in bringing into the life of another. Indeed, our Saviour himself said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

There are many reasons why the gifts of the Disciples to Church Extension should partake of the nature of an offering.

Undoubtedly, when we give to Church Extension, we are obeying the commandment of Jesus to preach the gospel to the whole creation. We cannot exaggerate the importance of the relation sustained by the Church Extension Society to our home missionary work. It is this which gives meaning to home missionary work; it lies back of it, and makes it possible for that work to be in the highest sense effective. Experience has taught us that it is all but useless for our evangelists to organize congregations and then leave them without the means of erecting for themselves a church home. It is inconsistent, to say the least of it, for any church which gives to home missions to neglect the cause of Church Extension. And how much worse than inconsistent it is for any church to fail to give to either! The paramount motive in Church Extension work, as in all work for our Master, is love for him. "The love of Christ constraineth us."

Then again, the demonstrated success of this work should appeal to us for our hearty support. Church Extension is no longer an experiment whose call for support we answer with feelings of uncertainty and doubt as to the final outcome. On every hand are to be seen evidences of the wisdom of this enterprise. What splendid work has been already accomplished! And how joyous and hopeful the prospects that lie before us! To July 1, 1903, 705 congregations had been assisted in building houses of worship, 290 of which had paid back their loans in full. By reason of the splendid business methods employed by the Board of Church Extension, the fund of $370,000 now in their possession has already done the work of $660,000. Many strong churches scattered throughout the brotherhood owe their existence to-day to the help afforded them in an hour of need by the church extension work. The small amount of interest paid by the churches which receive help pays the expenses of the Board, so that every dollar given goes into the fund and goes on building churches indefinitely.

It is the desire of the Board to have at least $400,000 in the fund by Sept. 30 in order to reach a half million by 1905. This is a worthy ambition. If we love our Saviour and his cause; if the excellent work already accomplished by Church Extension counts for anything; if we are really in earnest about our plea for the union of the followers of Christ; if we deem the faithful man who is at the head of this movement, and his co-laborers, worthy of our encouragement, let us make a real offering for Church Extension in September.

Meridian, Miss.

A Case in Point.

By Edward B. Bagby.

Our experience at the Ninth Street, Church, Washington, D. C., leads us to believe that Church Extension is one of the very best forms of missionary effort. The Vermont Avenue Church bought a lot and erected a chapel at an outlay of $5,500. Sixty-five members of the mother church formed the nucleus of the new congregation and assumed an indebtedness of $1,000. This little band paid all expenses from the start and has now grown to over a thousand strong.

If our Church Extension Board had the funds to buy lots in desirable localities in our eastern cities, building small chapels donating a part of the purchase price and loaning the balance, this history could be duplicated many times.

The Endeavor Societies of our four churches in this city have completed the payments on a valuable lot in southeastern Washington and have applied to the Church Extension Board for $2,000 to help erect a chapel. If the September offering is a generous one, this appeal will be granted and the Fifth Church in the capital city will be a reality.

Washington, D. C.

A Comparison.

By W. H. Martin.

Not by way of self gratulation (for that would indicate a poor appreciation of our responsibility in the matter of Church Extension) but as a means of inciting our brethren in the "effete east" to greater endeavors in behalf of this branch of missionary enterprise, I wish to submit a few figures by way of comparison, in which California shall figure as one number and the brotherhood taken as a whole as the other.

To begin with, the number of churches in California is 146; the number contributing to Church Extension was 56, about two-fifths of the whole. The whole number of churches of the brotherhood is 11,709. The number contributing to this same cause was 1,109, or nearly one-tenth. As compared with the whole number of churches, the ratio of contributing churches in California was four times that of the churches of the whole brotherhood.

Again, the number of members in California is 20,000; the amount contributed to Church Extension last year was $1,294; that is, six cents a member. How paltry! Yet if the whole brotherhood will average as much at the September offering, the amount realized will be $75,000 instead of the $30,000 asked for. Verbum sap.

GOT TO

Have Sharp Brains Nowadays or Drop Back.

The man of to-day, no matter what his calling, needs a sharp brain, and to get this he needs food that not only gives muscle and strength, but brain and nerve power as well.

A carpenter and builder of Marquette, Mich., who is energetic and wants to advance in his business, read an article about food in a religious paper, and in speaking of his experience he said: "Up to three years ago I had not been able to study or use my thinking powers to any extent. There was something lacking and I know now that it was due to the fact that my food was not rebuilding my brain."

"About this time I began the use of the condensed food Grape-Nuts, and the result has been I can think and plan with some success. It has not only rebuilt my brain until it is stronger and surer and more active, but my muscles are also harder and more firm, where they used to be loose and soft, and my stomach is now in perfect condition. I can endure more than twice the amount of fatigue, and my nights' rest always completely restores me. In other words, I am enjoying life, and I attribute it to the fact that I have found a perfect food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Value of a Scapegoat

[The following letter was written before the one published last week, but was "delayed in transmission."—EDITOR.]

Moses provided that the goat "on which the lot fell to be the scapegoat shall be presented alive before the Lord, to make an atonement with him." Upon its head Aaron symbolically laid the sins of the people, after which it was sent away into the wilderness. In some form this idea has found its way among all nations. We are told of a custom in Abyssinia, when factions are ready to tear each other in pieces, to make a camel the representative of their mutual animosities. It is agreed on all hands that nobody has been to blame on either side, but the whole mischief is the work of the camel. The camel set the town on fire; the camel threatened to burn the Aga's house and cattle; the camel cursed the Grand Seignior and sheriff of Mecca; in short, whatever evil was done, was done by the camel. The mode of settling the poor camel is for every man to transfix him with a javelin and go his way.

Some such a scape-camel as this is usually needed in society. Ever since Adam said in the garden, "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat," men have been prone to lay their sins at the door of others. If we can shift our responsibility to something outside of our own doors, we are happy. Up here in Colorado everything is charged to "altitude." If a man over-eats or overdrinks and is laid up for a time for repairs, it is the altitude. If a woman overdresses, overdissipates or overdoes in any way and suffers for it, it is the altitude. If people overstate things—a common sin—the altitude is to blame.

Stratton is a name to conjure with in this region. Stories are told about him and his achievements that are of incalculable aid to the dealer in mining stocks. Stratton is a poor carpenter; he walks into Colorado Springs; he spends all he has in prospecting; he borrows as a last venture $20 and gets out some ore which is pronounced worthless, but which is afterward proved in the assay to be of great value; he sells out the stuff to an English syndicate for eleven millions, and the Independence mine yields its present owners two millions and a half yearly. What one man has done, another may do; and so the fever grows, and the stories are told of the fellow who struck it rich, while the thousands who failed are forgotten.

And these stories are not well authenticated. I said to the clerk in the Brown Palace Hotel, "Will you tell me the cost of this hotel?" "One million and a quarter, sir," was the answer. Going up three stories, I asked one of the housekeepers, "What did this building cost?" "Two millions to build it and two millions to furnish it, and how many millions to run it I can not tell."

All this exaggeration is chargeable to the altitude. Altitude here is like malaria down at Washington. Nobody knows just what malaria is, but it is a mighty convenient thing to use as a scapegoat. Vague, shadowy, spectral, it is still intensely real and becomes a pack-horse or Rocky Mountain burro for all ailments not understood. They have discovered the lazy germ—uncinariasis—which is made tired, no doubt, by its name—but the microbe of malaria eludes the keenest vision. If a member of Congress has a spell from heated discussions, big dinners and long vigils in the interest of his constituency, it is malaria. If a leading society woman gives in after the wildest dissipations of the season and has to go to Atlantic City for a time, or rest six months in Europe, it is malaria that must bear the burden. If Professor Langley's air ship bursts up or goes down at Widewater on the Potomac, it is malaria—bad air which was unwilling to carry this additional weight and at last, like the worm, has concluded to turn upon its vilifiers. If the world is out of joint in any way, and statecraft, diplomacy, society, the post office department or anything else goes wrong, it is malaria that is the scapegoat.

So in religion. What a terrible overtaxing the good word "dogma" has received at the hands of men! "Beware of dogs," saith the scripture, and in some mysterious way this thing called dogma seemed to be comprehended in the apostolic prohibition. Anything in this hideous shape that showed its head must at once receive a blow from the shillalah set for the defense of the faith. "Carve that canine!" was the slogan of the big fellows, and "Carve that canine!" was immediately taken up by the little fellows, and no guilty dog escaped. The veriest religious demagoguery and most intolerable dogmatism would often be cloaked under the denunciation of dogma, but the scapegoat was needed and so every poor, innocent little puppy ma had to be sent out into the wilderness.

How much we have overworked the organ and the missionary society! All ills, real or fancied, that have afflicted the body ecclesiastical have been charged up to these innocent burden-bearers. The wilderness and the solitary place have resounded with the pathetic notes of organ pipes and missionary secretaries as these much maligned institutions have borne away the sins of the people.

Who shall say that even the higher criticism is not a greatly abused issue? Many of us have not known the difference between higher criticism and lower, but it did not matter. The thing was obnoxious, and even if we could not recognize it coming down the street, we knew its place was in the wilderness. We forget how monotonous things would be if the whole land were level; if there were no Rockies, no Alps, but one eternal, illimitable plain. The Oklahoma editor is quite right, when noting the assertion of a scientist that if the earth should be flattened the sea would be two miles deep all over the world, says: "If any man is caught flattening out the earth, shoot him on the spot, and don't be particular what spot. There's a whole blamed lot of 'us in Oklahoma that can't swim." We need the higher and the lower, radical and conservative, Pike's Peak and the prairie. Thus we may hope in the realm of thought and of religion to approximate the perfection which God has reached in nature.

Federation is another of these overburdened, caprine, hollow-horned ruminants that some folks are determined to send into the wilderness. In using your scapegoat, be sure of your animal. Israel was to make no mistakes. A German of humane disposition who kept a boarding house up among the mines was greatly agitated on hearing that some miners intended to send a hydraulic ram to their mine, and exclaimed with much concern: "It's too bad! These people don't know this country. Some one should write and tell them that before they could get that ram half way up the mountain, he would be eaten by panthers!"

A genuine scapegoat is without question a comfort to the flesh. It recalls the boy's definition of a lie—"An abomination unto the Lord and a very present help in time of trouble." As the cuttle fish for protection blackens the water about it, the scapegoat conceals many things. Old Caleb Balderstone was accustomed to cry, "The fire! The fire!" as excuse for any lack of food or drink on the table of the master of Ravenswood.

Of many of these scapegoats, however, we cannot but wish when once sent out into the wilderness, they might remain there. Some of those used by the Jewish priests to bear away the sins of the people, had a disagreeable habit of returning, and the time came in their history when instead of directing the goat into the wilderness, they provided that he should be cast over the rocks and destroyed. For some of the long-suffering, overworked animals commonly accepted among us we devoutly desire a like destiny.

The Battle Begun In England By W. Durban

At length the expected conflict has been precipitated. I have in these articles somewhat fully explained the scope and meaning of the great struggle forced on the nation by the fatuous action of the powerful and unscrupulous Tory government. The attempt of the High Church clergy to capture the schools is one of a great series of efforts in the reactionary direction undertaken by the aristocratic and clerical sections of society to undo the work of Liberals and Progressives in the last half century. A Tory party in power means several things all equally obnoxious to friends of popular progress. It means favor to the brewers and publicans. It involves doles to the landlords in the shape of lighter proportionate taxation for the upper than for the lower classes. It signifies the snubbing of non-conformists and the favoritism of patronage in various ways for the state churchmen.

Passive Resistance in Operation.

My readers must have noticed the words "Passive Resistance" rather freely sprinkled in quotations from English papers. The English organs are now full of this momentous topic. The great threatened resistance has fairly commenced. What will be the results no man can venture to say excepting that many are predicting that the reckless government will be tremendously punished when the day of reckoning comes at a general election. Extraordinary incidents are happening this week. The storm has burst and is at once raging furiously. At Sheffield in Yorkshire yesterday forty persons who pleaded conscientious objections to the payment of the education rate were summoned before the court, and orders were made for distress warrants. The defendants included a member of parliament and several non-conformist ministers.

At Wimbledon, a beautiful London suburb, distraints were yesterday actually effected. For the sake of conscience many persons were despoiled of the goods. From the residence of the Rev. C. Ingram, Baptist minister, a presentation bicycle was taken, and from the Rev. W. H. Farquhar, Congregational minister, was taken some presentation silver, given him by American churches with which he had been formerly connected. The goods are to be sold by an auctioneer. It is to be specially noted that this momentous trouble is not only a non-conformist grievance. At Belper police court in Derbyshire, Mr. Henry Walker, a member of the Church of England itself, and a commercial traveler, was one of several passive resisters against whom distress warrants were levied. He assigned as his reason that the act of last year tends to Romanize the English Church. All over the land the summonses are being issued and distraints are being levied. Public meetings are being arranged and uproarious scenes are expected. One minister's organ has been sold by auction in the market place at Nottingham, the auctioneer disappearing to the strains of the Dead March in Saul.

Ready for Prison.

"You can take my furniture and when that is gone I am ready to go to prison." Such is the cheerful view taken by many of these passive resisters. Among the persons summoned is the Rev. W. J. Spriggs Smith, a well-known reformer and temperance orator, vicar of a Norfolkshire parish. He is the first clergyman of the Church of England to become a passive resister, but his example is sure to be followed by many of the Liberal clergy.

Beer in Politics.

Another departure by the government is creating consternation amongst all right minds. The prime minister has made a statement in Parliament to the effect that in the next session the brewers and publicans will be released from some of the most stringent checks of the law. Nobody as yet knows what is intended, for Mr. Balfour does not explain. We are not told whether publicans are to be compensated out of the rates whenever their licenses are taken away, or whether they are to be pensioned by the state. But he spoke with horror of the action of many of the magistrates of late in depriving drinksellers of their license where too many saloons were in existence. Now, we have lately been assured by Mr. Moseley and his famous commission, that drink is at present the chief cause why English workmen lag behind the Americans. But Mr. Balfour is not ashamed to set up in business as the drinkseller's premier. It is a curious coincidence in this old country that political championship of the established church should always go together with the championship of the infamous drink traffic. The late eloquent John Bright said that a beer barrel should be hoisted on the top of every church steeple in the land. The same prime minister who has been pouring the people's money into the pockets of the priests, is now going to cram what is left into the pockets of the publicans.

Drink and Lunacy.

Concerning this eternal drink problem a lurid light is being flung on the physiological phase of the subject. Dr. Forbes Winslow, the great psychological expert, has contributed to the London papers a column on the startling connection revealed in the report of the lunacy commissioners between lunacy and drink. Of the total number of registered lunatics in England nearly one-third, or 36,000 out of 113,000, have become mad through drink. How vast a mass of misery do these figures betoken. The truth is that the government is playing a mere electioneering game, and does not scruple to pander to the lowest interests with a view to perpetuating its lease of power. And on the side of these mercurial ministers of state are ranged masses of mercenary and selfish representatives of vested interests, together with more high-minded but narrow and prejudiced supporters of effete institutions which had their use in days gone by but are entirely out of date now.

SUBURBANITES

Breakfast on Coffee, a Roll and a Rush for the Train.

The commuter who bolts down a few mouthfuls of food and hurries to catch the train usually catches dyspepsia as well.

The "coffee and roll" road to ill health is not necessary, for there is an easy, pleasant way to get back to health and shake off all the coffee diseases by shifting to Postum Food Coffee. "For a number of years I was a business woman, rising early and swallowing a roll and a cup of coffee just in time to catch a train. A feeling of nausea or palpitation and a continual dullness in the eyes and head invariably followed my coffee breakfasts, until one day a good angel in the guise of a woman friend bade me try Postum Food Coffee in place of coffee.

"Always trying to be progressive in my daily life I accepted the advice, and the result was I found Postum a delicious, clear, coffee-colored beverage suited to the stomach and satisfying to the appetite. After using Postum faithfully for a month I was surprised at the result in my health. All symptoms of dyspepsia or nervousness had disappeared, and because of this marked benefit I reasoned that if such a simple and inexpensive remedy could prove such benefit in my case, why was it not my duty to let other sufferers know about Postum? So I began to try to help my friends, and I have helped many to shake off sickness by recommending Postum in place of coffee.

"There was one who was a victim of nervous dyspepsia and who craved coffee to such an extent that he invariably drank it in spite of medical advice not to do so, and I could not persuade him to change, so I got his wife to give him Postum in the morning for a few days without saying anything to him about it. The result was really wonderful. He did not detect the change, but noticed that he got over his indigestion. Then we told him the truth about it, and now he takes his Postum regularly and is so far relieved of his nervousness that his physician predicts a speedy cure. He likes the Postum just as well as he used to love the coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH, TACOMA, WASH.

75x120 ft., raised about four feet above the street. Graded from the brow of the hill it looks down over a beautiful park and a large district filled with handsome residences. It is not far from the center of population of Tacoma proper, and is in the midst of the present activity in the building of the better class of residences. Probably 30,000 of the present population of Tacoma, estimated at 50,000, could reach it by electric and cable cars with a five cent fare. It is surrounded by a population which for culture, intelligence and morality, will compare favorably with any in the land.

Tacoma, with two colleges and a splendid female seminary, has a right to claim a place as an educational center. As a commercial and manufacturing city Tacoma is attracting the attention of the world; her commerce goes out to the end of the world. She is the terminus of the longest regular steamship line in the world, from Tacoma to London. Aside from her strategic situation in the line of commerce of the United States with the Orient and Alaska, Tacoma has tributary to it a vast territory rich in timber and mineral products and splendidly adapted for agriculture and grazing, which has hardly begun to be developed. We were helped by an $1,800 loan from Church Extension, all of which is now paid.

CENTRALIA, WASH.

Centralia is on the Northern Pacific main line and is a great inland lumber town of western Washington, with fruit and agricultural products around it. There are 3,000 people here and the town is growing. We have a good church building and a worthy congregation. This is a Church Extension building.

VANCOUVER, WASH.

G. W. MUCKLEY.

Vancouver, Wash., is a beautifully located city of 3,000 people, across the Columbia from Portland, Ore., and connected by street car and steamer with the latter city. It lies on the long gradual slope of the north bank of the Columbia. The government has an army post here. Many soldier boys find a church home here. The finest prunes in the world are grown here, though I hear now California loudly protesting. We have a good building centrally located, built by Church Extension funds, all of which has been paid back.

PULLMAN, WASH.

Pullman, Wash., is perhaps the most important point for immediate attention by our home board or the C. W. B. M. in eastern Washington. Next to Spokane, it is the most important. Here is the Agricultural and Scientific College, the great experiment station for Washington. The state and federal governments put $100,000 here annually.

This year 700 of the brightest and best young men and women of Washington were here. Our church is crowded when we have preaching. We have a beautiful and well located church, built by aid of the Extension Board. The Congregationalists, Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians keep the best men here as pastors by aid of their home boards. We must not neglect this field. The students flock to hear our plea when it is properly presented. Converted here they would go out to be missionaries to plant the truth elsewhere.

WALLA WALLA, WASH.

J. M. MORRIS.

The Church of Christ at Walla Walla, Wash., knows the value of our Church Extension work. Being organized in an old hall with a small and financially poor membership, it moved from place to place for years and made but little growth. In 1892 W. F. Cowden came and inspired the brethren with hope. Encouraged by a $1,000 loan from the Church Extension Board, and other help, they erected the present excellent house of worship. The church was poor, but the Extension Board was patient until the debt was paid.

Walla Walla is a fine field for us. The church now stands among the seventeen churches of the city about seventh in wealth, third in numbers and first in progress. Walla Walla, the "Garden City," has 11,000 people.

CHURCH AT WALLA WALLA, WASH.

the fourth city in the state, and is making a large and steady growth. Many of our brethren are among the new citizens. It is in the rich and beautiful Walla Walla valley in southeastern Washington, near the center of the "Inland Empire." Beautiful homes, shaded streets, orchards, gardens, and farther out, great wheat fields impress the eye. Last year three hundred carloads of fruits and garden produce were shipped from Walla Walla. A United States military post, the state penitentiary, and the state I. O. O. F. home are here. Whitman College (Congregational) an Advent College, the Empire Business College, Catholic and Episcopal Seminaries, and an excellent system of public schools provide for education. The climate seems nearly ideal and the water supply is from clear and cool springs. Splendid mountain streams irrigate the lands and turn the mills. A company has been formed to transform the power of the Walla Walla river into electricity. The city is likely to have a great future, and the Christian church will do a worthy work. The value of Church Extension here will never be fully told.

COLFAX, WASH.

Coifax is a village a mile long, situated in a valley. It is in the rich and famed Palouse country. We have some excellent people there, and amidst difficulties and successes they have kept the church alive. Church Extension saved our building here at a crucial period.

OLYMPIA, WASH.

Olympia, the capital city of the great state of Washington, is built around the shores of the extreme inland arm of Puget Sound, and nestles in a forest of orchard, sitting in lawns of perennial green, adorned with flowers and shrubs of every kind and color known within the temperate zone.

There are many artesian wells of excellent water in the city of Olympia, varying in depth from 80 to 150 feet. The fresh waters of Thurston county, of which Olympia is the county seat, whether from springs or wells, rivers or lakes, are always sweet, soft and cool.

The Church Extension Board loaned Olympia Christian Church $900, saving our work at a critical period. Olympia is the home port of a line of steamers that make daily trips between the capital and down-sound cities. Two railroads, running daily trains, make connections with the trans-continental lines, the Northern Pacific Railway at Tacoma, Great Northern Railway at Seattle, Canadian Pacific at Seattle, Union Pacific Railway at Portland, and Southern Pacific at Portland.

Our church has the most desirable location in the city and is only one block from the capitol building now being erected at an expense of $350,000. The church has a membership of 225, and all lines of work in a prosperous condition.

CHURCH AT VOLLMER (NOW TROY), IDAHO.

G. W. MUCKLEY.

Vollmer, Idaho, now called Troy, because the numerous Swedes persisted in saying "W" instead of "V," is in a basin of the uplands. You must go uphill in any direction to get out of Vollmer. But for this very reason all things flow into Vollmer and make it a great center for foresters, miners and agriculturalists. It nestles within the pine forests.

CHURCH AT VOLLMER, IDAHO.

Our little church is a noble band, and we are standing by the work. It is building enough for all needs. The foresters would not go to church if the building were more pretentious. It suits the people, and it is saving them from vagrancy. The church was aided to build by Church Extension funds, which have been returned the past year.

LEWISTON, IDAHO.

J. A. PINE.

Six years ago, fifteen brethren began to hold regular services in Lewiston in the interests of the primitive gospel of Christ. Five years ago, by the aid of a loan of $500 from the Extension Board, they were able to build a neat house of worship in the best part of the city, on what is known as Normal Hill. Lewiston is growing rapidly, and the church is destined to be in the midst of a fine residence district.

The church now numbers seventy. It is recognized as the best church in Lewiston. The Christian character of our people here and their splendid growth have become matters of general comment. I am told that fully two-thirds of the people of Lewiston are in sympathy with the Christian church.

Lewiston is a strategic point. The Lewiston State Normal, situated here, is growing rapidly and affords a splendid opportunity to reach the young people of Idaho. We have also fine public schools that attract many families from abroad. Lewiston is the commercial center of a great and rapidly growing country. It stands at the head of navigation and is the gateway through which all railroads must enter northern Idaho. A few years hence will see a town of 200,000 people here. This is a strategic point for the Disciples of Christ also because of its strong influence in central and northern Idaho. Already the church here has husbanded a missionary enterprise in Idaho that will result in planting a score of churches. The church at Genesee, Idaho, already nearly as strong as the Lewiston church, has been established through the direct influence of the Lewiston brethren.

I know there are many other splendid fields that have been occupied by the Home Missionary and Church Extension Boards in the great northwest, but it seems to me none could have been more wisely chosen than this.

REDLANDS, CAL.

G. W. M.

This picture does not show the Redlands church to the best advantage. The church and lot cost nearly $6,000. The work has been fostered by the Southern California Board, and though the days looked dark for its success for awhile, a faithful band of Christians kept working constantly and never lost hope in the ultimate triumph of the pure gospel. I remember, when in California in 1900, how Bro. Paul McReynolds was nearly exhausted with work and anxious watching over the little band of Disciples, and he felt that unless a creditable building was erected very soon, the people of Redlands would discredit the Christian church. He reasoned and pleaded manfully for a loan of $1,200 from the Extension Fund. Already the church had purchased one of the best located corner lots in town for church purposes. Our board promised the loan of $1,200, and it acted as a stimulant. The house is now completed, and with the assistance of A. C. Smither, of Los Angeles, the church debt was provided for on dedication day, outside of what the extension loan would pay.

Redlands is one of the most beautiful spots on earth, and is growing very rapidly. It is in the midst of the best orange growing section of California. On account of its beauty, Redlands was chosen as the place where President McKinley should get his first impression of California. It is safe to predict that Redlands has a great future before it, with its salubrious and health-giving climate, its wealth and enterprise with great reaches of productive orange groves.

ALAMEDA, CAL.

G. W. M.

On June 1, 1896, the Board of Church Extension made a loan of $1,900 to the Alameda Christian church with which to purchase a lot. The brethren agreed to put a $1,500 building upon the lot. They did better and put up a chapel costing over $2,000. The work has been steadily growing. Bro. A. R. Hathaway did a successful work. He was followed by the lamented Brother Ingraham, who was called to his reward in the glow of success. His death was a great blow to the work at Alameda. The church sought long for a wise and successful man to lead them into wider fields, and found him in the person of Bro. P. C. McFarlane, who is doing splendid work there.

Alameda is a field of great opportunities. A suburb of San Francisco just across the bay, connected by two suburban railroads, it is a popular resident suburb of over 25,000 people. Ours is the best location, central, on a corner lot facing a beautiful park. A great work can and will be done here.

MOSCOW, IDAHO.

G. W. MUCKLEY.

Moscow, Idaho, is the seat of the Idaho State University, a most flourishing school. Students from all parts of the state come in touch with our church here, and no more important place in Idaho could be named. It is big with opportunities. We must cultivate this field unflinchingly. A faithful band of seventy members are supporting a good minister, and our work is prospering. While the exterior of the church is plain, the interior is beautiful and homelike. This church was built by aid from the Church Extension fund. The loan is, however, all paid back and the church free from debt.

EAST EIGHTH STREET, LOS ANGELES, CAL.

H. ELLIOTT WARD.

Church Extension has been a priceless boon to this young church in the days of its weakness. Coming to our aid as the board did when the few members were overwhelmed in debt and discouraged. The loan gave a feeling of confidence, and in the pastorless periods that are all too apt to occur in the life of young churches, there was no danger of the property being lost, and when the principal payments were not made when due, the board kindly waited until the church was ready. On two occasions, when he was in these parts, we had the services of the secretary without cost to the church, to assist us in raising our annual payments.

When I became pastor three years ago, I found that $400 of the $1,000 loan was past due and unpaid. In May, 1902, we paid the last of the debt, six months before it was due. In the meantime, the church has been approaching self-support, and has been, also, a regular and liberal contributor to all our missionary causes, and the membership has steadily increased until it is now past the 200 mark. All those most familiar with our field and its conditions predict a great future for this church. It will, I am sure, remain a loyal helper of its generous God-mother, the Church Extension Society.

Southwest Missouri.

A. J. Williams, of Marionville, our district evangelist, is holding some fine meetings. J. T. McGarvey, of Carthage, our district president, is already at work on the program for our convention which meets at Republic in November.

The church at Marionville, under the leadership of F. J. Yokley, has sold the old building and will erect a $3,000 brick structure. Brother Yokley has also worked up a "school for preachers," with D. R. Dungan as chief speaker. It meets there Aug. 25 and continues two weeks.

The church at Neosho has called Bro. Geo. E. Dew as pastor.

E. M. Barney, pastor at Webb City, is preaching on crutches as the result of a fall.

Chas. E. Robinson, one of our Joplin boys who is studying for the ministry, is spending his vacation by supplying the pulpits at Carl Junction, Smithfield and Cartersville. He will soon return to the State University and Missouri Bible College.

J. P. Davis, of Golden City, will preach one-fourth time for Sarcxie.

The brethren at Seneca, where Joseph Gaylor recently held a fine meeting, will build a new house.

The Carthage church has the peculiar distinction of having a surplus income each week. It goes into a building fund. Look out for a new stone church there one of these days.

The fall campaign will begin in Joplin with a meeting in the South Joplin Church, conducted by W. A. Moore, of St. Louis, beginning Sept. 6. It is hoped that this meeting will result in a full-fledged congregation, pastor and all. Honor to J. W. Baker, who gave the house and who has given his services for several months.

This meeting will be followed by one at the First Church, beginning Oct. 4. Harlow and Ridenour will be our helpers, and we are planning and praying for great things.

Nebraska.

The Nebraska state convention for 1903 was held in camp at Bethany, Aug. 4-9. The total enrollment was over 1,100. The largest in our history. The enthusiasm was steady and could not be cooled even by the occasional dashes of rain. The extra number of tents were all filled, and the grounds never looked so well. The dining tent, under the efficient management of E. W. Kerr, of Omaha, after the first morning was a successful feature, supplying with cleanliness and promptness the wants of the guests. There were an unusual number that drove to the camp this year. Transportation service was good, save for a couple of hours or less on Lord's day morning. The hack man, living in a Methodist city, was led to think that the hard rain of the morning would prevent the people from the city coming out. The result was a congestion at University Place, which hurried him to clear up. Will we have a street car line of our own by next year? Let us pray fervently that we may.

The program was carried out as printed very closely. Only a few members being absent. The only possible objection raised to this feature of the convention, was that it was overcrowded. We try to do too much, or else take too short time for it. Must we begin a day earlier? Some of the addresses assumed splendid proportions. The meaty and carefully prepared address by N. S. Haynes, on state missions, was a paper worthy of a wider hearing. J. H. Bicknell's paper on Christian unity, was a gem in its class. These should both be in print. The convention concert, Saturday night, was the finest we have ever had. Clean, delightful, hearty, full of most excellent numbers. Bro. J. W. Hilton, the director, is to be congratulated. The Lord's day sermons, A. C. Corbin, the veteran bishop of southwest Nebraska, W. J. Lhamon, and R. A. Schnell, the preachers, were all food for the souls of the hundreds that listened. The communion in the afternoon was an inspiring hour.

From outside the state we had as preachers, Mrs. Louise Kelly, of Kansas. W. J. Lhamon, in a daily lecture on the Bible. M. B. Madden, from Japan. R. H. Waggoner, of Kansas City. G. W. Muckley, of the United States. Japan will be nearer to Nebraska because of Brother Madden's visit. Three of our own state workers, now under appointment to foreign lands, were present—Brother and Sister H. G. Wilkinson, Porto Rico, and Dr. C. L. Pickett, Luzon, P. I. The programs of all the departments received high praise, that of the C. W. B. M. eliciting a public resolution from the brethren. No more may be said here of the program.

The business reports showed large gains in money matters, in both the missionary society and the C. W. B. M. The total receipts from all sources of the N. C. M. S. were $3,836.98, of this amount $962.45 were trust funds. The total expenditures were $2,999.74. The apportionment receipts were $1,378.52, almost double that of last year. There was an increase of 16 churches in the number paying on apportionments. There is yet not less than 47 that are able to give, that do not do so. There were 215 baptisms, and 155 otherwise as a result of the work of our missionaries. Two churches organized, and three re-organized; 27 places were assisted aside from the general work of the secretary. He reported four new houses dedicated by him since last convention. The total reported number of additions in 106 of our churches is 2,043, 1,110 of them baptisms. These churches report 13,337 members. Estimating the others from old reports there are 15,500 members in the churches. There are scattered members in the state that will swell the total to perhaps 18,000. Liberal pruning has been done in church lists this year. The new board elected is practically the same as last year, with some changes of position. The corresponding secretary was retained for another year. A. L. Ogden has been called to evangelize. Work has already begun.

Altogether the convention stands as a record maker in Nebraska history.

The state secretary has leave of absence until Sept. 1.

W. A. BALDWIN.

India.

Once again the monsoon season has come and the rains are very much delayed. In this country where a majority of the population always lives from hand to mouth, and a very large part of it, perhaps the larger part, is always underfed, the question of rainfall assumes an importance difficult for one to realize who has never lived outside of the United States. Now, although one-third of the monsoon season has gone, the rainfall has been inconsiderable. To add to the troubles of the people, in many places the wells and streams are dry, and there is great difficulty in obtaining water for domestic purposes.

The work of the mission is moving slowly along. Last year there were 280 baptisms reported, and the total number of baptized believers were 891. We are reaching out to take up new work and to open up new fields. Mr. Rioch, who has for several years been working in the boys' orphanage at Damoh, and who for the last year has had sole charge of the industrial department there, has now been transferred to Hatta, some 24 miles away from the former place, and is busy getting the new bungalow erected there. Should he meet with no obstacles, he will be able to move into it during the coming cool season and to carry on preaching there. Mrs. Rioch will engage in medical work. Last cool season Mrs. Rioch, in company with Mr. and Mrs. McGavran, itinerated in that part of the country, and treated a great many sick persons. Of course the preaching of the gospel was carried on simultaneously with the medical work.

Mr. Menzies is also at work at Rath, near Mahoba, on another new bungalow. This, too, is nearing completion. Mr. and Mrs. Menzies made their home in Rath during a large part of the year, and while the building was going on, also engaged in evangelistic work. Two day schools and two Sunday-schools were organized, and a number of children at once entered. Besides this, regular services were held every Lord's day, while other religious services were held when opportunity offered. As the bungalow is not yet completed, they have been compelled to return to Mahoba for the hot season.

Another new bungalow is planned for the Ohio station at Maudha. Mr. and Mrs. Davis will have charge of this. As these are new missionaries, they are spending this season in the hills, studying the language. They hope to be able to get to work as soon as the rains are over. The town has been selected in which it is proposed to open the station, but so far they have been unable to get the land to build on. It is hoped that this difficulty will soon be removed.

Recently the work has also been somewhat extended in Mungeli. A piece of ground has been secured in the town, and a book shop will be opened there for the sale of Christian literature. Of course, there is not a very large percentage of the people of that vicinity who can read, but there are some, and in this way it is hoped to sow the seed of the gospel. Already a Sunday-school has been opened on the spot.

We are hoping to enlarge our work in India still farther in the near future, and trusting to receive re-enforcements in the current year.

G. W. BROWN.

Harda, July 14, 1903.

Washington.

Let it be remembered that Sunday, Sept. 6, is Christian Endeavor day. There should be a general and genuine Christian endeavor to continually enlarge the Church Extension permanent loan fund. But upon this one day in the year, special effort should be put forth in the churches, and an offering of such magnitude as will honor a mighty people such as we, should be sent to Geo. W. Muckley, 600 Waterworks Bldg., Kansas City, Mo. Remember that the annual offering from the churches is the chief means of building up this much needed fund.

State Evangelist and corresponding secretary Morris is doing good work and the churches are liberally backing him in his efforts.

H. K. Pendleton, of the Central Church, Tacoma, has been taking a vacation and was one of a party who recently climbed to the summit of Mt. Tacoma. Mrs. Pendleton is spending the summer in the east. Walter S. Crockett, of Olympia, is taking his annual vacation and will spend a part of his time on his wheat ranch in eastern Washington. J. S. McCallum and family, of Eugene, Ore., but for many years at Olympia, are spending a month with friends in the latter place. This is the vacation season, and many of the workers from the First Church, Tacoma, are away, yet our work keeps up well for the summer, and we have additions almost every week.

Bro. J. S. Gray, of Detroit, Mich., Sundayed with friends here and gave us a most interesting and helpful sermon the first Sunday in August, and last Sunday the Hon. Volney B. Cushing, of Bangor, Maine, spoke eloquently in behalf of the victims of strong drink. There is need of much education on the question of temperance on all of this Pacific Coast.

With September a new era of evangelistic work will begin in this state, and it is not too much to hope for very large increase the coming year. Last year the state employed no evangelist, but applied its resources to aiding in pastoral care of churches. Whitman county had an evangelist in the field a part of the year and with good results. The eastern Washington churches did a little missionary work and the western Washington churches a little, but this year with three evangelists regularly in the field, we should make great advance, and we shall.

This is a time of great commercial activity on this coast. The value of the glacier-fed streams that rush down from Mt. Tacoma is attracting money for development. A new $3,000,000 electric plant is directing the long wasted power of the Puyallup river into manufacturing channels as the Cataract Power Company has long done with the Snoqualime. Almost every week some new factory or mill is established in Tacoma. Our dinner pail brigade is becoming a great host, and a very great number of the working men are securing homes for themselves. This makes a happy and contented people and a prosperous and beautiful city, for the home owner naturally takes more pride in the appearance of things than the one who rents and feels the uncertainty of his tenure.

The writer very greatly enjoyed a day's visit with Bro. N. K. Griggs, of Lincoln, Neb., who was visiting his daughter, recently married and located in this city. Brother Griggs is attorney for the B. & M. Ry. Co., but he is one of the few busy men who finds time to get the real and the good of life in passing. He is a poet of no ordinary ability and a composer whose works will abide; and best of all, he and his wife are true Disciples who love the church and delight in her services. An incident that may help some one else, will illustrate: A friend had planned a Sunday drive to one of the many delightful resorts so restful and inviting that are found all about in the vicinity of Tacoma. Brother and Sister Griggs made it known to the friends that it was their custom to attend church on Sunday, and they did. The carriage called for them at the church after service. Such loyalty is of itself a sermon. MORTON L. ROSE.

Kentucky.

A number of our Kentucky churches are now in the midst of protracted meetings, with fine prospects.

The meeting at Newtown, Scott county, in which the minister, Jos. Severance, was assisted by Pres. B. A. Jenkins, of Lexington, closed with nearly 50 additions.

The church at East Union, Nicholas county, has just closed an excellent meeting with Geo. P. Taubman, of Portsmouth, O., as evangelist. One hundred and six were added. E. R. Clarkson is the pastor.

Geo. W. Hilderbrandt is in the midst of a successful meeting with home forces at Mortonsville, Woodford county.

Our state convention will meet in Paris, Sept. 21-25. It is earnestly hoped that every congregation will be represented. Ample provision will be made for entertainment.

H. D. Smith, of Hopkinsville, recently closed a meeting at Campbellsburg, with 24 additions.

E. W. Elliott, of Eminence, is in a good meeting with the White's Run church in Carroll county.

D. G. Combs, one of our most successful evangelists, recently held a meeting in Estill county, which resulted in 68 additions.

Wm. Phillips, a recent graduate from the College of the Bible, Lexington, has located with the church at Fredericksburg, Va., and has begun his work there under very favorable circumstances.

H. P. Atkins, formerly of Harrodsburg, has succeeded the lamented C. P. Williamson as editor of the Christian Monthly, published at Richmond, Va. This will not interfere with his work, however, with the West End Church of that city, where he is doing such an excellent work.

W. S. Gambre, of Ashland, is in a meeting with the church at Smithfield, with 13 additions at last report. T. Q. Martin, of Winchester, will serve this congregation monthly, beginning Sept. 1.

Robert N. Simpson, of Lexington, recently closed a twelve days' meeting at Antioch, Montgomery county, with 28 additions.

W. T. Brooks, of Ladoga, Ind., is assisting his brother, A. K. Brooks, in a meeting with the Ruddle's Mill church, Bourbon county.

R. B. Neal, of Grayson, is the "busiest preacher" in Kentucky and is doing a grand work. He is constantly on the go, preaching here, there and everywhere, and during his spare (?) moments finds time to edit two papers and keep the Mormons in eastern Kentucky on the go. God is richly blessing him in this work.

E. L. Powell, of Louisville, is expected home next week from his European trip.

The College of the Bible, Lexington, has just received a $20,000 donation from Bro. C. L. Garth, of Scott county, for the purpose of educating young men for the ministry. The funds are to be placed in the hands of a trust committee composed of one of the trustees of the Central, Broadway and Chestnut Street churches, Lexington, and one from the Georgetown church. President McGarvey will also be a member of the committee.

W. R. Jinnett has begun his new work at Earlinton under favorable circumstances.

R. A. Havions, evangelist of the Casey county co-operation, recently held a meeting at Windsor (Bethany church) which resulted in 43 additions.

C. B. Reynolds, of New Philadelphia, O., assisted Chas. R. Vawter in a meeting at Glendale, with 5 confessions.

Chas. E. Powell, of Stanford, assisted J. Q. Montgomery in a meeting with the Green River church, Casey county, which resulted in 13 additions.

G. G. Bersot, of Louisville, closed a meeting at Turner's Station recently with 8 baptisms. B. H. Cox is the regular preacher.

Z. T. Williams, of Montpelier, assisted by R. A. Staley, of Burkesville, recently closed a meeting at Irish Bottom schoolhouse with 29 baptisms.

The writer expects to begin a meeting with the Millville church, Woodford county, on the night of the 30th inst. GEO. W. KEMPE.

Texas.

A move. My father used to say that "two moves were as bad as a burn." Those who have tried it will grant they are bad, for the nerves, for the body, for the purse. The board which called me to be corresponding secretary of Texas missions thought it best that I should make my home at Dallas, a railroad center, the home of the majority of the State board, the home of our State paper, the Christian Courier, and one of the largest and most central cities of Texas.

So here we are. While we have received a cordial welcome from the Dallas Disciples, we cannot forget the dear friends at Palestine. The Palestine church will celebrate its fifty-fourth anniversary this coming autumn. It has more than five hundred names on its roll. It is an exceptionally harmonious church. In the almost three years I was with them I heard not one member say anything derogatory of the character of another. There was never a serious difference between the members of the church board. They paid me promptly on time and increased my salary twice without any kind of request on my part. You will not wonder that I was loth to leave them. I believe that such a church should have a letter of commendation and hence this word is given.

We are now situated on the high rolling prairie eighty feet above the courthouse in Dallas, on car line, one and a half miles out. We are working now for the largest missionary offering in November that Texas has ever made. The demands are very many and urgent. The doors which we and our fathers prayed might open are now spread wide and we are urged to go in and possess the land. This we are doing, but must increase our forces until instead of only 40 men we shall have 100 missionaries, telling the old, old story to the destitute places. This will we do if the liberality of the brethren permit.

George L. Bush, of McKinney, has just closed a splendid meeting at Melissa, with pastor E. S. Holmes.

J. W. Holsapple, of Sherman, one of our best pastors, has just closed a fine meeting at Lancaster. Forty-eight added. Money raised to employ a preacher.

A second church at Houston with fifty-four members, has been organized at the Fifth Ward Mission, where a neat chapel was built and paid for while the writer was a missionary in that city.

Pastor M. M. Davis, of Dallas, has much of the evangelistic fire and power. He has just closed a great meeting at Detroit, Texas.

J. B. Boen is now aiding the intrepid John A. Stevens in a meeting at Chickasha, I. T. The sinners of that community might just as well surrender, for neither of these preachers ever fail. J. C. MASON.

J. G. M. Luttenberger will dedicate the church at Elvins, Sept. 6. We are sorry to hear of J. T. Craig's resignation. He leaves Poplar Bluff, Nov. 1.

The Southeast Missouri Convention meets at Malden, Oct. 6-8. J. C. Bennett is the efficient minister at that place.

The writer will assist in a meeting at Libertyville, beginning Aug. 31. W. H. Crockett is preaching for this historic old church.

Fredericktown and Cape Girardeau are without preachers.

Dr. Stanley is now living at DeSoto and preaching for the church there.

The work here is progressing nicely; additions are frequent. Six last Lord's day. We expect Wallace Tharp, soon to be of Allegheny City, Penn., to assist in a meeting in October.

The writer will preach to-morrow afternoon at Hospital for the Insane, No. 4. This will be the second sermon preached at the institution. Recently 120 patients have been brought here from Brother Hart's parish at Fulton, making about 200 in No. 4.

Pres. Albert Buxton is the new president of Dexter Christian College. The college will open soon under promising conditions.

We hope the Church Extension Board will be made happy by a largely increased offering on the first Sunday in September. We long, yea, yearn for a surcease of editorial combat. R. M. TALBERT.

DEATH OF SAUL AND JONATHAN.— 1 Sam. 31:1-13.

David among the Philistines.

Very often in the world's history it has happened that a reform party has been compelled to have its headquarters in a foreign land so that it might be safe from the hostility of the government which it wished to reform. So the Chinese reformers to-day seek safety in Japan. The progressive young Turks find asylum in Bulgaria. The English revolution of 1688 was hatched in Holland. So David, as his reform party grew more numerous and more popular, sought safety first in Moab and later among the Philistines where he took with him his six hundred men. The Philistine king received him with great respect, for he was glad to see his ancient enemy, Israel, weakened by the loss of such a powerful champion. So he gave David and his men a city where they dwelt with their wives and families for more than a year. Meanwhile David increased his fame by successful raids against the nations to the south of Judah.

The Witch of Endor.

Encouraged by the defection of David from Saul's forces, the Philistines planned an attack upon Israel and it was arranged that David should fight on the side of the Philistines. Saul was frightened at the prospect, and with his cowardice his old superstitions revived. Israel had formerly been infested with witches and wizards and a variety of such charlatans, but Saul had prohibited all such practices. The objection to necromancy and witchcraft among the Hebrews was never the modern objection that they are senseless superstitions and frauds, but that they were wicked. The commands directed against these things (e. g. Deut. 18:10-12) exhibits a belief in witchcraft, as at Salem two and a half centuries ago.

But Saul, anxious now to pierce the veil of the future and learn the outcome of the impending battle with the Philistines, seeks a woman who has a "familiar spirit," that is, one who was supposed to have power to call up the spirits of the dead. He went in disguise, but the woman recognized him and was afraid, for Saul himself in his better days had driven out people of her sort and had prohibited the practice of the black art. But Saul assured her that no harm would befall her. So the witch called up the spirit of Samuel, who told Saul that the kingdom would be taken from him and given to David and that on the morrow Israel would be defeated by the Philistines and he and his sons killed.

Belief in Witchcraft.

How shall we understand this story of necromancy? Can the dead be called back to answer questions about the future? It is nowhere claimed that the witch of Endor had any special endowment of divine power to enable her to perform miracles; she was just "a woman that hath a familiar spirit." Are there really familiar spirits ready to do the bidding of necromancers and sorcerers? We must at the outset admit that the writer of the narrative evidently believes firmly in witchcraft. He does not doubt the reality of Saul's interview with the spirit of Samuel. The Old Testament writers were never skeptical in regard to such points as this. They took it for granted that the claims of such charlatans were true, just as they took it for granted that the world was flat and that the sun went around it. The absence of scientific knowledge in these matters did not in the least interfere with the value of their religious teachings. God can take a man who is very ignorant of scientific matters and make him a vehicle for communicating religious truth to the race. Even in comparatively modern times some great religious teachers have cherished the crudest scientific notions. John Wesley said: "The giving up of witchcraft is in effect the giving up of the Bible." Is it surprising that thirty centuries ago the men of Israel should have believed in it and that the one who was chosen to be the recorder of this part of Israel's history should have shared this belief?

So far as this particular episode is concerned, it is of course quite possible to suppose that, for the sake of showing the folly of wishing to read the future by unhallowed means, God used this witch as the means of conveying to Saul the dire prediction of his own death. In any case, the incident teaches one important lesson—the fact that God often makes use of very imperfect agents for the accomplishment of his purposes. If the narrative is literally correct, then God used a witch and a familiar spirit as the agents for delivering a prophecy. If the narrative merely reflects a current superstition about the power of witchcraft, then God used a historian who was not free from the scientific errors of his time and who did not always keep these out of his history.

David had gone up with Achish, king of the Philistines, to fight against Saul. But the Philistine nobility, jealous of David's prowess and of his favor with the king, protested against allowing him to participate in the battle on the ground that he might suddenly turn against them in the fight, thus turning the tide of the battle and winning the gratitude of Israel so that he might return to his own land. It was a shrewd suspicion; whether justified or not, we cannot tell, for the objection prevailed and David and his six hundred men were sent back to their city of Ziglag.

When they reached Ziglag they found that the Amalekites, in return for the raid which David had made against them (27:8), had attacked David's city and had carried off all the women and much spoil. There was great despair and some spoke of stoning David for having left the city unprotected. David, moved by an impulse not unlike that which took Saul to the witch of Endor, had the priest bring the ephod, which was used in a sort of sanctioned divination for foretelling the future and casting lots, and learned by it that if he pursued the Amalekites he would catch them. He did so and the raid was entirely successful. All that had been taken was recovered. It was on this expedition that David established the principle that, in dividing the spoil, "as his share is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his share be that tarrieth by the baggage." By way of preparing the way for his return to his own country, David sent some of the plunder from this raid to his old friends in Judah.

The Death of Saul.

While David was pursuing the Amalekites, Saul and Achish were encamped against each other. The battle was joined and Israel was beaten. There was a wild flight, but even flight could not save them. Mount Gilboa was covered with the slain. Saul and his sons, with their immediate followers, made a last stand, but in vain. They were surrounded. The old king, brought to bay at last by his life-long enemies, prefers to fall into their hands dead rather than alive. He falls on his sword, and the troubled reign of Saul is ended. Three of his sons fell that same day, and the news of this great defeat spreads such panic through the nation that even the tribes beyond Jordan forsook their cities and the Philistines occupied them. But when the bodies of Saul and his sons were exposed by the Philistines on the wall of Beth-shan—after the custom of the ancients who gloated over the corpses of their slain foes—there was still enough spirit in Israel to move the men of Jabesh-gilead to go and rescue the bodies and burn them.

So ended the dynasty of Saul, begun in faith, humility, strength and victory, ended in distrust, willful pride, weakness and defeat. And Israel lay under the foot of the Philistines waiting for a deliverer.

Sept. 6.

THE ARMY OF CHRIST. John 17:20-23.
1 Cor. 1:10-13.

The religious world grows into a consciousness of essential unity, and there is much to encourage those who hope and work for a practical expression of it in organization and administration. No one defends sectarianism; there are some who are bold enough to attempt a defense of denominationalism; but something has already been gained when denominationalism is put on the defensive.

I. Misconceptions. The phrase, "Christian union," frightens some sturdy Protestant souls, because they misconceive it; they think it means a consolidation of denominations into one great ecclesiasticism, like the old Roman Catholic church, with its pride and arrogance and apostasy. To be sure, there might be such a union, but it is undesirable and altogether improbable, not to say impossible. The Disciples of Christ understand by the expression, such a union as is seen in the primitive church, when organization took whatever form was most desirable and practical, but the different congregations were one in faith and doctrine and life.

Neither does the idea demand the merging of one religious body into another, or of all into one. Gradually the problem will be worked out, as each separate body draws nearer to the divine ideal of the church. Separating lines will grow dimmer and dimmer, and eventually disappear.

II. Popularity. No plea is more popular to-day; the time was when it aroused virulent antagonism; but now there is no great evangelical body of believers without cordial sympathy for it, and eloquent voices to advocate it. Some time ago the New York Churchman (Episcopalian) said: "He (Christ) binds up the world's faith, and consequently, the world's hope, with it, 'that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.' A fact with such an issue can neither be reasoned down nor scoffed down. Looking at the subject from the scene of that upper chamber, is it not amazing that it can even be held in abeyance for a day by any Christian body? Is it not worth while at least to consider whether the practical overlooking or rejecting of our Lord's principle as touching the world's acceptance of his divine mission may not account for much of the well-intentioned labor that seems 'laboring for the wind,' much of the gathering that gathers to 'put into a bag with holes?'"

Utterances as strong can easily be multiplied from all the various religious bodies, many of whom are making overtures toward union.

III. A Distinctive Feature. Historically and practically, the plea for union is a distinctive feature of the Disciples of Christ. And the method proposed seems to be eminently practical—to restore the Christianity of Christ and the apostles, to go back to the time when the church was one, before schism had brought forth its deadly fruit. The trend of the times gives vast encouragement in this work. We have every reason for redoubled diligence in pressing the plea, and for a faith growing in vigor and triumphant energy.

We should be leaders in all interdenominational work; we should cultivate the irenic spirit; we should fraternize with our religious neighbors whenever possible; we should work on the common features of Christian teaching and practice. Above all, we should avoid the spirit of party. A universal peace shall reign at last; a universal language shall be spoken; and the song of universal redemption shall ring round the world.

PRAYER.

We thank thee, O God, for the Savior; for his gospel of redeeming love, which unites our souls with thee. May we be united also with one another, and with all who are born again, whatever their name or banner. Amen. (Topic for Sept. 9: Caleb; or Courting Difficulties.—Josh. 14:6-14; 15:13-17.)

Many times in the New Testament the Christian relation to the forces of evil is spoken of as warfare, the individual Christian is called a soldier and the whole body of Christ's followers is referred to as an army. But an army is more than a body of fighting men; a mob may be that. An army is a body of men who fight together under a common leader, according to a common plan and for a common purpose. If the followers of Christ are not such a body, they are not the sort of army he needs, nor are they the sort that is likely to be effective in doing any great work.

The army must be united. Even if we did not have the record of Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers, and if we did not have Paul's exhortation to the Corinthians to stop their strife and heal their schisms, still a moment's thought would suffice to show the necessity of unity. The church is in the world to do a work. If we speak of that work under the figure of warfare, the army must be united under one leader, so that its force may all be directed against the enemy and not be dissipated in struggles among the several regiments. If it be considered under the figure of a great business enterprise, its work must be so systematized that the various departments shall not be engaged in cut-throat competition. Unity is required not only by Christ's authority, but by the most elementary common sense.

Apologists for denominationalism sometimes speak complacently of the church as one great army, in which the various denominations are so many regiments, all under a common commander. The parallel breaks down when one remembers that the different regiments of an army do not commonly spend upon each other the ammunition furnished for fighting against the common foe; nor is it usual for one regiment to esteem itself so highly as to consider itself the whole army and look upon the other regiments as aliens and outsiders. An army so organized would be a very imperfect and ineffective instrument.

Fortunately such foolish arguments are less frequently heard than formerly. It is pretty generally conceded now that the church ought to be one; that division is a sin and that a divided church is bound to be a failure. The question that interests people now is not, ought we to unite? but, how can we unite?

Two things must be remembered in all attempts at re-union. First, the requirements must be reduced to the simplest terms and these such as are supported by the clearest divine authority. Second, unity must be worked out, not merely thought out. No ingenious scheme of compromise will ever bring about real unity. To unify an army, there is nothing like getting in a hard fight where they must all stand together or be lost.

The church has its enemy before it. The more time and energy it spends in fighting that enemy the less fighting there will be between the various groups within the army. The more the church lays emphasis upon the practical things—fighting evils, helping people that need help—the more it will work out a unity of spirit.

For this reason all co-operative efforts among churches are to be encouraged. Let us unite in so far as we can unite. If we cannot unite in one congregation with the same ordinances and the same forms of worship, perhaps we can unite in rescue mission work or in fighting the saloon and other organized evils. The more we work together, the more we discover the practical interests which we hold in common, the nearer will we approach to the realization of that complete union which will make the body of Christ's followers in every respect a united army.

Our Budget

—Church Extension this week.

—Please read, ponder and inwardly digest.

—If we are going to be a permanent as well as an aggressive force in the religious world, we must build houses and occupy the ground we gain.

—Church Extension stands closely related to both the home and foreign missions. It is the right arm of the former, re-enforcing the evangelist and the young church with a house of worship, and strengthens the base of operations for the foreign work.

—Let the churches which have contributed hitherto stand steadily by their guns while many new ones, who have never joined hands in this work before, enlist and become co-workers with their brethren. Nothing imparts more life and vigor to a church than the knowledge that it is a factor in the great movements of the brotherhood for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom.

Snively, 903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, for full information concerning this gracious ministry, than which none is more apostolic.

—Richard W. Wallace has accepted a unanimous call from the Cameron, Mo., church, and will take up the work there Sept. 20. The church at Meridian, Miss., has not yet chosen his successor. On a recent Sunday morning Brother Wallace and his congregation worshipped with the Central Methodist Church, both preachers and people joining in the Lord's Supper. The visit will be returned shortly. A similar exchange of courtesies is arranged with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. This does not indicate any "southern prejudice."

—One of the activities of the Monroe Street Church of Christ in Chicago that has brought, and is bringing good results, is the work of the Employment Bureau. The difficulty of bringing just the right employer and the right worker together has been recognized by many. The loss of time and money on the part of young men and women who have to support themselves and who are not well acquainted in a great city, is a known feature of the labor world. The Employment Committee of the Monroe Street Church sets itself the task of finding employment, not only for all members of the church, but for any who really need assistance. Young men and women outside of the city who are seeking employment here, and have no acquaintance, make their application direct to this committee. Pleasant homes are found for them, and some remunerative labor secured at once. Then, after they are settled in the city and know just what they can do or want to do, changes can be brought about to the benefit of all. The assistance of this committee is not given wholly to young people. Business men desiring to change their locations or to better their condition can also make their application through this committee. Firms desiring to secure the services of Christian young men and women who can be relied upon, may apply to this agency for helpers. Prof. Edward Amherst Ott, who organized the committee and started this work, is in hopes that it will develop into something very useful to many. It has already done much in saving loss of time to a number of people. All of the appeals for charity that come to the church are turned over to this committee. No money is given to people who should be earning a livelihood. To those who wish to work, employment is given. Others need not apply, except in case of sickness. Any who are interested in the plans of the Bureau or who need its assistance, can address the Employment Committee of the Monroe Street Church of Christ, Corner of Monroe Street and Francisco Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

How I Spent My Vacation.

The Christian Publishing Company kindly gives its employes a two weeks' vacation during the summer months. As my work in the office is of such a character that I could not well be absent for the whole time in succession, I divided my vacation up into three parts. My first trip from home was to Boone county, Mo., among "my wife's people." Here I spent four days. The old Dripping Springs Christian church is located on the farm of my brother-in-law. It so happened that the Lord's day I spent on the farm was their monthly meeting day. Early the farmers began to gather at the large frame church, which they more than filled with earnest, anxious listeners for the truth. A. W. Pasley, the regular preacher, appeared in due time and claimed illness, and the writer was implored to preach. We discoursed to them on Christian union for one solid hour to a most appreciative and attentive audience. More than twenty years ago the writer held two very successful meetings for this old church. Many of the young who became Christians then, are in middle life now and have the full responsibility and care of the church on their hearts, and most of the active workers of that day have gone to their long home. Brother Pasley is doing a good work for them and the church seems prosperous. They were all delighted with the fact that Chas. H. Winders, of Columbia, was to begin a meeting for them. We heard him preach a good sermon on Lord's day night.

Our next outing was to Chicago and Macatawa Park. After spending two days in the city, attending to some business, visiting C. A. Young at the Century office and our correspondent, R. L. Mildon, and family at their home, your writer crossed the lake for the park. It was after 10 P. M., and yet before the boat landed, the benevolent face of J. H. Garrison, our editor-in-chief, was clearly visible in the crowd on the shore. While tarrying here the writer was the guest of Edgewood-on-the-Lake, and Sister Garrison did everything to make our stay both comfortable and happy. On Lord's day morning we made a visit to the cottage of T. P. Haley, Kansas City, and A. B. Jones, Liberty, Mo. Both of these men, who have been a power in our Missouri work, are living on borrowed time, but the climate of the park seems to have invigorated them, and they will return to their work greatly built up for the duties that await them. In the afternoon we attended the Bible school and heard A. B. Jones deliver one of his old-time, strong sermons on the "Unanswered Prayer." In addition to the above, we met J. S. Hughes, J. G. Waggoner, H. S. Earl, Geo. H. Combs and others. On Lord's day the writer, along with others, spoke at the beach meeting, where over 600 persons were sitting on the sand and listened over an hour to addresses.

On Monday the writer was taken by his host on a fishing trip. It was not long until your humble scribe was literally surrounded by the three great men, Garrison, Haley and Jones. They knew where the haunts of the black bass were, and with their fine fishing tackle and newly caught minnows, were sure to tempt them into their boats. By the kindness of Mr. Garrison, we also had a nice, modest rod. We humbly pitched it out of the back end of the boat, and behold when evening came it had caught as many as the rods of three great fishermen.

It was then insisted before leaving the park that I must take a bath, for I had never done such a thing before in all my life in Lake Michigan. A company was soon improvised of both men and ladies, and we all went in together. The only regret lingering in our minds in regard to this matter was, we were not present when Bro. A. B. Jones took a bath under similar circumstances and we did not get to see him arrayed in his robe.

We greatly enjoyed the kindness of Brother and Sister Garrison, and now understand how this genial climate builds up the overworked body and mind in the summer months. Then all these people, about 2,500, are good, Christian people who spend their summer here. It is a delightful place, and everything is conducive to health of body, mind and spirit. But this article is of sufficient length and we close.

Fifty Years of Ministry.

Fifty years ago, this month of August, I began preaching the gospel. The gospel I preached was all right, but the manner of preaching it was very poor indeed. I remember one of my first efforts. As I now think of it I cannot help laughing. I was deeply in earnest, but I made a fool of myself nevertheless. It was in a neighborhood where I was well-known. Two experienced preachers were holding a protracted meeting. They were getting on very well; but some of the young people were clamorous to hear me. The older preachers gave way to the pressure and insisted on my preaching at night. At first I persistently refused, but at last gave my consent.

I remember that I went out into a blue grass pasture which was well shaded by sugar trees. I sat down under one of these, and, with a good supply of paper, began to write out a synopsis for my sermon that was to be. My text was the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus. I had an idea that a sermon largely consisted in the number of "heads" into which the subject could be divided; so, when I had finished, I had the parable divided into seventeen heads. It was a monster and way ahead of the animal which the prophetic seer saw come up from the sea.

But the fun of the thing began when I arose to preach the sermon I had elaborated in the sugar camp. A large crowd was present. The night was intolerably hot. I gesticulated furiously, but "bodily exercise profited little," as the Apostle Paul says. I got on fairly well with the first "head," but, when "firstly" was exhausted, I found it difficult to say how "secondly" differed from it. I was simply going over practically the same things I had uttered so vigorously under "firstly." When thirdly was reached, I was absolutely back again where I had begun. I made a bold dash for new waters, but my boat would not move in the direction I wished. I then tried "fourthly," but had little better success.

By this time I was wet with perspiration, and most of the audience, who had not left the house, were either asleep or so disgusted that they kept awake out of pure "cussedness." Perhaps my loud screaming and violent gesticulation had something to do with saving them from visiting dreamland.

At last one good brother, who occupied a seat on the front bench, took out his large Hunter watch and snapped it at me with all the power he could command, while, at the same time, he gave a significant gesture which reminded me that my time was already more than exhausted. But I was not going to be scared off of the track in that kind of fashion. I had a sermon before me with seventeen heads and I had gotten rid of only four of them. I could not think of throwing all the rest away after all the labor I had put upon them in the sugar camp. Consequently I struck out for "fifthly" in lovely style, and began to flounder as I had while dealing with the other "heads." It now became evident to the audience that it was a race between my powers of endurance and theirs, and in such a race it was clear that the audience would win. I suddenly became conscious of this fact, and closed before I had finished even "fifthly," to the great delight of my friends, who had now nearly all become my enemies.

Here is where I got one of my first lessons. Another was like unto it. The latter was at the church where I had confessed Christ and where I was received into fellowship. It was a church of hallowed memories. My mother was a member there. Some of my most intimate friends had long been pillars in the church. There was great anxiety to hear me preach, so it was arranged that I should take a Sunday evening service. My text this time was the Prodigal Son (I had, in my early ministry, a passion for parables, but have steered clear of them every since the night I am now considering). I was careful to avoid "heads," and so determined to deal with my subject, as the French would say, en bloc. I thought it might be better to shoot a canon ball than to use shot and shell, as I had done in my former experience. I concentrated all my power on one special point, but it was not long until I found myself physically exhausted in my efforts to drive home the great thought on which my mind had centered. Just at the time I reached a crisis, it began to pour down rain, and, being a country church, the people rose en masse and went out to look after their horses and vehicles. I remember that I profoundly wished that they would never return again. My sermon was only fairly commenced, but I felt if it could only end right there and then I would be saved from a second disgrace, for I had not the slightest idea what I ought to say or could say next. In a little time, however, the people returned, and when quiet was restored, I tried to take up the thread of my discourse, but this had already "gone glimmering like a school boy's tale" and, though not the "wonder of an hour," it was evidently the mistake of the hour.

All this may seem somewhat humorous to the reader, but, to me at that time, it was anything else than funny. I was deeply mortified; but these two occasions furnished me a practical lesson which I never forgot. I found out by experience that it is much easier to plan a sermon than to preach it, and that preaching is, after all, an art which cannot be jerked into a man by some pious gesticulations, or thrust in to him by the open door which the kindest friendship may make for him. Real preaching comes from genuine agony of soul, and these two occasions helped me through the agonizing period, and were not without their influence upon my whole ministerial career.

Fifty years! Both how long and how short this period seems! When measured by the usual length of such public service, the period is long; but, as I look back over these years, the whole length is but as a hand's breadth.

There is one thing, however, that impresses me most profoundly. While I would mend my ways and mend my preaching, if I could live these years over again, I would not change my avocation. The noblest calling on earth is that of a preacher. Indeed, I am so impressed by its dignity and usefulness that I would not exchange it for even the presidency of the United States, if, by giving up one, I could gain the other.

Another thing is suggested, as I review this long ministry. No man can be a preacher in any real sense who makes preaching a profession. He must feel as Paul did, "woe unto me if I preach not the Gospel." Perhaps no one should attempt to preach if he can help it. He should preach only because he is impelled to do so under the deepest conviction of privilege and duty.

I have much to be thankful for during these fifty years of ministry. My brethren have been kinder to me than I deserved. I have always been liberally supported. I have no complaint to make with respect to treatment by those whom I have served. They have always been considerate and liberal toward me. They have vastly more to forgive in me than I have in them.

The best thing about my ministry is it has been progressive from the beginning. I have tried to make it better year by year. I know that in some respects I am a stronger preacher to-day than I ever was. This is as it should be; but I fear that some will not believe what I say. They will suppose that a man who is seventy-one years old has seen the end of his usefulness. But this ought not to be so, and it is not so in my case. I thank God for the strong old age he is vouchsafing to me. Indeed, I want to make my last years my best and most useful. I certainly do not want to retire from the field in any sense whatever. When my ship goes down I want the old flag still to be up and every sail turned to the breeze.

I have said these things, first, because I want to say them out of a grateful heart to both my Heavenly Father and my brethren; and secondly, for the benefit of the rising ministry who ought to profit by the experience of the older men. My greatest desire is to see an army of earnest young preachers

Montgomery County Convention.

The annual convention of the churches in Montgomery county was held at Price's Branch last week, the opening sermon being preached by Elder J. Thomas, of Fulton. In addition to the ministers of the county, all of whom were present, W. H. Lhamon, of Columbia, A. W. Kokendoffer, of Mexico, and H. F. Davis took part in the program which, by common consent, was the best in recent years. The amount of money pledged and paid for county work was over $125; a much larger amount than has been raised for a long time. Elder G. F. Assiter was elected president of the county board; E. M. Vermillion, of Middletown, vice-president, and I. W. Jacks, of Montgomery, city secretary.

New Orleans.

S. M. Martin is in a good meeting at Crowley, La., with W. O. Stephens.

J. L. Haddock is expected home from Texas to push with vigor the work at Baton Rouge.

Work in this city has kept up well this summer with additions at regular services.

O. P. Spiegel and wife are spending a few days at Greenville, Ala., with friends, and he is preaching nightly.

The Birmingham church began a twenty-five thousand dollar house on their beautiful lot, this month, A. R. Moore, minister.

W. P. Crouch, Athens, Ala., is to assist Belt White in a meeting at Anniston, beginning Sept. 20.

D. R. Piper, Hartselle, Ala., has had over one hundred additions at Cottondale, one of his appointments, this year.

All southern disciples feel keenly the loss they have sustained in the death of C. P. Williamson. He was a wise counsellor.

O. P. and S. P. Spiegel are to begin a ten days' meeting in the large college chapel at Fresville, Ala., their old home, Sept. 13.

The whole southern field is catching more and more the spirit of co-operation and hence is improving very rapidly. We need a gulf states convention or lectureship.

Among the many good things in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Aug., 13, "The Strength of the Hills Is His Also," by F. D. Power, and "The Preacher at Forty," by F. W. Grafton, were specially helpful to me personally. I wish every body could read the former; every preacher ought to read the latter. S. T. Willis' article on "New York's Hotel Chaplain," was also interesting. He says of this office, "it is believed, does not exist elsewhere in the world." Yes, Chicago has a hotel chaplain, also. S. P. Benbrook, a native Mississippian, who is identified with the Disciples, is chaplain.

Missouri Bible-School Notes.

Recruiting campaign goes right on. Over 1,200 buttons going out this week and nearly as many membership cards. Let all get in touch for the fall and winter.

Let all the Missouri schools begin their plans for girl's and boy's Rally Day on Sunday, Nov. 22. Order supplies (free) from B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio, and have a great harvest entertainment.

In your recruiting campaign use the membership cards, only 30 cents per 100, and they will save you trouble in the enrollment of new pupils some times.

Shelby County meeting at Hunnewell was up to expectations in attendance and beyond in work done and will aim this year to make every congregation self-sustaining with a Bible-school in every church house. Good for Shelby.

One of the country schools always first in good works is Linn Knoll, Lincoln, where B. G. Reavis is doing such good work. The teaching and training work of the school has constantly in mind the conversion of the children, as it should, while their co-operation in good works, trains in the giving habit.

Butler is one of the growing churches and Bible-schools, beginning the year with 166, and now it has 243 and better still, are planning for 300 by 1904.

The annual Roll Call in connection with the Cooper county meeting at Bunceton was one of the most delightful services known to me. As the membership was called, scripture quotations were given in answer, and of the one taken home during the year, a very suitable memorial was had. Officers of the congregation and Bible-school were stood before the audience, and to them was given the hand of sympathy and co-operation, while Brethren H. E. Monser, Thompson, Patterson, Prof. Norvall and others made very fitting talks, and the entire congregation pledged themselves more devotedly to Christ. The music was exceptionally fine and every person was ready to covenant with the Master for a great year's work. It was the close of J. H. Allen's fifth year and a petition was circulated urging him to remain another year with them, and after serious consideration, he consented to do so. Brother J. T. Todd, of Boonville, was the chief speaker of the occasion.

Salem, in Lawrence, got more good out of their recruiting campaign than most schools do, and our work gets the best results of the year from such source, over fifteen dollars. Superintendent J. H. Bacon is delighted with the results.

Liberal orders, more equipment, saying all are interested, and have increased membership from 75 to 125, and the end is not yet.

Arcadia, Kansas, reports a membership of 120 when campaign opened, now 200, and the work going right on, both blues and reds determined for the first place.

O. J. Gary sends us $2.50 each from two little mission schools in Lincoln, being Highland and Moscow, at both of which he is working so acceptably. If Missouri's schools would all give in proportion to those two, we would take the state for Christ.

At the invitation of W. W. Watts, I gave one evening to Elsberry, and a more generous people have not met lately, giving me more than double their apportionment. They are led in all their giving and living by pastor B. G. Reavis.

F. N. Calvin, of Santa Ana, Cal., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Compton Heights Church, to begin Oct. 1.

The Fourth Church has taken steps to establish a branch Sunday-school at North Broadway and Salisbury. The merchants and residents of that vicinity will give it a hearty welcome.

J. Frank Merryman, attorney-at-law, occupied the pulpit of the Hamilton Avenue (West End) Church, Sunday evening, Aug. 23. His subject, "The Trial of Jesus," was ably handled from a lawyer's view-point.

One addition by letter at Hamilton Avenue Church, Sunday, Aug. 23.

At the Lord's day services, Aug. 23, Carondelet reported one addition by letter, Central one by letter, and the Fourth, two confessions. At Hammett Place, a member of another church in the community, who was dissatisfied with a substitute for baptism, was immersed upon a public confession of faith.

Three Things.

1. Railroad rates to state convention. We have assurance from Missouri Pacific, Wabash, M. K. & T., Frisco, Rock Island, Burlington, Santa Fe, Chicago & Alton, Kansas City Southern and Q. O. & K. C., that they have made a rate of one fare for round trip plus 50 cents. These lines cover the whole state so that wherever you live you can reach Columbia at this rate. This is a fine rate, we ought to have a great convention.

2. I don't say if you are going to Columbia, we eliminate the if entirely and say, you are going to Columbia, now to save you trouble and the church at Columbia trouble send your name on a postal card at once to C. H. Winders, Columbia, Mo. Neglect of this means trouble for you and the Columbia people.

3. Has your church sent in its offering? Your board needs it now if you would have us come to Columbia with a clear record. Be sure and take the offering, take it now, and send at once.

A FORTUNE IN EGGS.

I get so many letters from my old home about preserving eggs, that I will answer them through your paper. I started 1888 with $36, bought eggs at 8 to 10 cents in summer, preserved them and sold in winter at from 25 to 30 cents a dozen. I preserved eggs 12 years and made $30,000. My niece started in 1894, with $10, which she reinvested each year, with the profits and now she has $16,346, all made from $10, reinvested for eight years. You can buy eggs very cheap now and sell them from 25 to 30 cents; figure the profits yourself. To preserve them costs a cent a dozen. I can't answer letters as I travel, but any person can get desired information by addressing the PEOPLE'S SUPPLY CO., No. 5 Moore Block, New Concord, Ohio; they started me. Michigan Notes.

Church Extension is the backbone of our missionary achievements. The larger this fund, the more rapidly will we be able to extend the borders of Christ's kingdom. It insures permanency. Last year only twenty-one of Michigan's 112 churches gave anything to Church Extension. In view of the fact that Church Extension has aided in building twelve churches in Michigan to the amount of $10,400, and that there is immediate and pressing need for further help from this fund in our state and, above all, in view of the fact that no Church of Christ should be satisfied with anything less than being an all round missionary church, we should do much more for this worthy work than ever before. Remember, Sept. 6 is the day for the offering.

The first assembly of Michigan preachers, held at Cascade, Aug. 17-22, was a success. While the attendance was not large, all expressed themselves as being delighted with the place and greatly helped by the fellowship, conference and Bible study. We hope for larger things next year.

W. B. Taylor, of Ionia, will spend a few days in the seventh district and speak at several points; also attend the seventh district convention at Wexford.

L. O. Drew begins a meeting at Wayland, Aug. 23.

F. T. Porter begins a meeting at Yale, Aug. 30. Two baptisms at Benton Harbor recently by F. T. Porter.

One baptism at Owasso, Aug. 16 by Brother Coultdar. The work at Owasso is growing. E. Ellis is in a good meeting at Georgetown, with six confessions to date.

One baptism at St. John's, where D. Munro ministers, a lot has been purchased in an excellent location, and the outlook for the work in this new field is encouraging.

The meeting at Belding closed with 84 additions. This is a great victory in an entirely new field. Brother Kindred will continue with the work until it is thoroughly established.

Two confessions at Pierson, Aug. 16, where G. W. Dains ministers.

The third district convention will be held with the church at Trowbridge, Sept. 1-3.

There were four baptisms at Cascade, Aug. 12. All lines of work prospering.

Important to Kentuckians.

STATE CONVENTIONS.—Our annual conventions are to be held this year at Paris, from September 21 to 25. On the evening of the 21st, the C. W. B. M. will begin its sessions and continue until through Tuesday night session. Wednesday will be devoted to the K. C. M. C., Thursday the State S. S. Convention and Friday we go to Cane Ridge for a Centennial meeting. We ought to have one of the greatest meetings in our history.

R. R. RATES.—As yet announcement can not be made as to rate and plan of ticket. We are hoping to get the lowest rate in our history. This is not yet settled. Announcement will be made at an early date with reference to this.

K. C. M. C. PROGRAM.—For the session of September 23 we have one of the best programs that can be prepared, in the writer's judgment. We hope to see a great meeting on that day and believe that we will.

ENTERTAINMENT.—As is always the case in our state meetings, entertainment will be entirely free. The Paris church will take care of us in true Kentucky style. Such as expect entertainment are asked to send their names to the one who will be designated in next week's papers. We ought not to expect entertainment unless we give due notice that we are to be guests.

OUR ANNUAL REPORT FOR KENTUCKY MISSIONS.—This is in course of preparation now, and the material out of which to make it assures us of a record of a victory, and really a great victory in the field. Much has been accomplished in the mission fields of our state. The report that must be made of the churches as to their support of this work is far from the record of the work. Daily assurance is being given that we will yet receive help from various quarters. The time is short. Only four Sundays intervene between this date and the meeting. What we do must be done promptly. Delay is dangerous. To put the matter off a single Sunday is to court defeat.

GRAVE DANGER AHEAD.—Unfortunately a large number of our good churches have fallen into the habit of waiting until just before the convention to raise and send in their offering, a considerable number of them sending the offering to the convention. Upon these we are forced to rely in these closing weeks and days. If these fail us, we will be compelled to make a report of our state work at Paris that will cause many of us to hang our heads in shame. Our danger is the final neglect of this important matter by many of these congregations.

A FINAL WORD TO OUR PREACHERS.—Brethren, we crave your help. You can help to close our year in a creditable way. Without it we must fail. With your influence and work we will go to Paris rejoicing and full of hope for the future. If you will urge the delinquent churches for which you preach, even at this late hour, all will be well.

M'CLINTOCK.

Miss Mary Isabel Fitzhugh was born near Danville, Montgomery county, Mo., March 31, 1843, and died at her home in St. Louis, Mo., August 11, 1903, of paralysis. On January 1, 1861 she was married to Reuben F. McClinton, who survives her. She leaves two children, William and Miss Fannie, both of St. Louis, and two brothers, E. H. and S. J. Fitzhugh, of St. Albans, Vt. To the bereaved family a host of sorrowing friends extend their heartfelt sympathy. At the age of fifteen she united with the Christian Church under the preaching of Dr. W. H. Hopson and continued to be a faithful disciple while life lasted. She was one of the prominent members of the Hamilton Avenue church of this city, and a leader in the C. W. B. M. work, having been the treasurer of the local auxiliary since its formation. While we shall sadly miss her, yet the memories of her noble life will not soon perish and the influences for good set in motion by her sweet, Christlike life will move on until they sweep the shores of eternity. Though she has passed beyond, yet such as she can never die. Her life of sacrifice and self-denial is a present inspiration. May she rest in peace. F. J. NICHOLS, pastor.

The Quiet Hour.

Baxter Waters.

"In the morning will I order my prayer unto thee, and will keep watch." "What I say unto you I say unto all, watch." "As oft as thou canst during the day recall thy soul into the presence of God," says Saint Francis.

The morning watch is kept by the student volunteers; it is an agreement to spend at least one half hour each day in quiet, prayerful meditation, and study of the divine word and in communion with God.

This will have a transforming and sanctifying influence over every disciple who thus practices the presence of God. A few moments spent in the companionship of Christ every morning will change the whole day.

1. It is a time of quietude and rest.

In our busy, bustling age we need the quietness which comes with secret prayer. "Be still and know that I am God." We hurriedly pass from one duty to another, eagerly grasp and pursue, and this feverish anxiousness disqualifies us for the best and richest life, for the clearest and purest thought. We need the peace of God fresh every morning—"My peace I give unto you," and this peace will drive out petty care and corroding distrust, and bring in serenity and self-control, hopefulness and the trust in all things high. "Rest in the Lord."

2. It is a time of fulfillment.

The body must be nourished by food and drink, the mind must have thought and the heart must have its inflowing of the divine Spirit. "Not self-renunciation, but self-fulfillment," says one. The heart is the rich repository out of which the good man brings the good, but it must first be filled. "Freely have ye received freely give." We exhort to give let us also heed the injunction: "Receive ye the Holy Spirit." They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. The spirit of God comes into open doors, and is given to them that ask. He guides the meek and lowly into truth and beside waters of restfulness. "Do not expect your religion to be hard. If there is hardness in it, count that hardness to be your own making not of God's sending."

3. Gathering of one's powers.

How much we lose by lack of definiteness and concentration. The wise general marshals his forces and marches orderly into battle. "I will order or direct my prayer unto thee." Attention is the key-note, putting one's whole energies into active play. Let nothing be dormant or misdirected.

In the quiet morning hour when the mind is fresh the scattered thoughts are gathered, the spiritual life is quickened and focused, our wills are made his, conscience is enthroned and this "little flame is made to be the star of our life;" the whole being is bathed in the dew of his presence, energized and endowed. Thus are we specially fitted in frame of mind.

"'Tis the heart, and not the brain
That to the highest doth attain."

4. It is a time of thoughtfulness.

"Think on these things." The only time that many people take life seriously is when they are cast down and despondent, hence their estimate of life is morbid, sickly and insane; they are given to light-heartedness and levity on the one hand, or on the other to dejection and pessimism; they are unacquainted with the plain, even serene paths. We should face life, with its trials and problems, seriously, earnestly and prayerfully. We should build upon well formulated principles. In the fresh morning hours when the mind is strong and unwearied let these principles be wrought out at the forge of life. We should trust God and not be afraid—never strike sail to a fear. Come into port bravely or "sail with God the seas." Every morning gladly take up life with new resolution for better things, and rejoice that we are allied with him that gives and doth all things well. To look God squarely in the face and live, to work because he worketh hitherto; or, by faith and faith alone to embrace, this is the privilege of the sons of God.

ESCONDIDO, CAL.

Escondido is about a hundred miles north of San Diego, and twenty miles in from the coast. When the town was growing, some years ago, the Extension Board loaned $300 to help the Christian church secure its first home. The loan was worthily bestowed and has all been returned to the board. Escondido would have been a most flourishing town to-day, had it not been for the "Eight water law." This caused many to move away, including a large number of our most substantial members. The brethren have no regular preaching now, but meet regularly to observe the Lord's Supper.

HANFORD, CALIFORNIA.

T. H. LAWSON.

The Extension Board has been the first to recognize the needs and claims of this western field. The secretary has made a thorough study of conditions and possibilities, and in this way the board understands the field. The work of the secretary on this coast during the year 1902 has been an inspiration and great encouragement to our churches. We have felt that he was not here simply to get, but that the board might better know where and when to give.

The mistake at Hanford was that the church did not first call upon our Extension Board for help and instructions. Some mistakes would not have been made if the church had done this. The advice of our Extension Board is often of more value than what it is willing to loan. Building committees make some great blunders. I have often said that in erecting a new church building it would pay to have a loan from our Extension Fund, if for no other purpose than to have the safeguards of the society thrown around the building committee. Larger experience deepens this conviction.

For more than five years the Extension Board has stood by the work here at Hanford. During this time the board has patiently waited for either principle or interest, trusting that the return would come in God's time. Two years ago, the return began and over $1,500 in cash and notes were secured on the debt. In January, 1903, the last of the debt was paid. Had this been a private loan, the church in this thriving county seat would doubtless now be extinct, and a property worth at least $5,000 lost entirely. Instead of this, we now have a growing church free from debt, with splendid possibilities for the future. I feel like quoting the Indian's poem to our Extension Board:

"Go on, go on, go on, go on,
Go on, go on, go on;
Go on, go on, go on, go on,
Go on, go on, go on!!!"

And I will do my best to help you go.

THE FINAL WORD.

JOHN J. HANDSAKER.

Has not the final word been said on Church Extension? Is not the "pump" worn out? The "ferris wheel," "perpetual motion," "the two forests," "the chain letter scheme"—are not these worthy of rest? Has not the final word been said on Church Extension?

Brother Muckley says, "No, we are just beginning to talk about it in earnest." Missionary pastors and evangelists, sustained by our 127 boards, who see their work crippled or dying for want of a permanent home, shout, "No! Give us a reasonable amount of money for Church Extension, and we will double and quadruple our power."

On the foreign field, men, turning expectant eyes to America for reinforcements, cry out, "No! Build more permanent churches aglow with missionary zeal that knows neither home nor foreign limit."

Has the final word been spoken on Church Extension?

Yes, Jesus Christ, when he left us directions not for the temporary evangelization of the world, but for the complete subdividing and holding of what we gain, spoke the final word on this and every other missionary enterprise.

"A half million by 1905" is surely but the beginning of obedience. If the churches, urged by faithful pastors and elders, meet their apportionment, we should go beyond this mark.

Do You Know What It Means to Cure Constipation?

It means to turn aside and throw out of the body all the woes and miseries caused by a clogged up system, and they are many. Constipation means that the bowels are weak, so that they cannot keep up that constant motion the doctors call peristaltic action. When that stops passages cease, the blood begins to absorb the poisons through the walls of the intestines and thus disease is scattered everywhere. Death often lays its foundation in this way. Torturing diseases like dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney troubles, liver complaints, heart disease, headaches, and a hundred and one other complaints start that way. A cure must come through toning up, strengthening and invigorating the bowels. This can be easily, gently and permanently done by Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine. It is a tonic laxative of the highest class. It builds up the bowels, restores the lost action and adds new life and vigor. Only one small dose a day will positively cure constipation of any degree by removing the cause of the trouble. Try it. A free sample bottle for the asking. Harrison, O., Aug. 19, 1903.

ALABAMA.—Mobile, Aug. 17.—There have been eight additions to the church here since last report—two yesterday. Our services are well attended. On Sunday, July 11, I addressed the Young Men's Christian Association in Mobile.—CLAUDE E. HILL.

COLORADO.—Grand Junction, Aug. 20.—While spending the summer vacation in Colorado I have been supplying at this place. There have been additions each Lord's day. Six have been added as follows: Two from Congregational Church, 1 from Prot. M. E.'s, and 1 from another denomination. Also others by letter and baptism. This is a wide field and a good working church. The church has given me a call to remain, but I must reject it and go to Kentucky University at Lexington Sept. 14, for special work in school.—NEWELL L. SIMS.

ILLINOIS.—At the Clear Lake Christian Church near Springfield, Ill., a three weeks' meeting closed August 16th with 23 additions. The song service was conducted by evangelist Ernest D. Turley and the preaching by the pastor, Z. M. Brubeck. The meeting was a grand one and we have arranged for another year's work.—Z. M. BRUBECK.

Rushville, Aug. 20.—Three added at regular services last Lord's day; one by confession.—C. B. DABNEY.

Mattoon, Ill., Aug. 20.—Thirteen added since last report: four by letter, three from M. E.'s, six by baptism. Net gain to cause, nine.—X.

INDIANA.—Waynetown, Aug. 17.—Closed a two weeks' meeting here with 30 accessions—21 by confession and 9 by letter, 1 from Baptists. We will dedicate a new building at Ridge Farm the third Lord's day in September. We have organized a church at that place and have been conducting it as a sort of mission work, but it will soon be strong enough to take care of itself. We will begin a meeting there just after dedication.—H. O. PRITCHARD.

Jeffersonville, Aug. 21.—On last night I closed a meeting at Solon, Ind., with 17 additions—twelve confessions, 4 by statement and 1 from the Baptists. One of the confessions came from the Presbyterians. Four new families were reached by the meeting.—F. E. ANDREWS.

Knightstown, Aug. 20.—The church kindly grants me a vacation, which I shall spend in a meeting with the Berea Church, Brazil, Ind. The meeting begins Sept. 16. Why do not more churches and preachers adopt this plan to help build up the weaker churches?—ALLEN T. SHAW, pastor.

Columbus, Aug. 20.—I begin a meeting at Exira, Ia., the first Lord's day in September, and will be with Brother Otto at Shelbyville, Ill., in October, and with Brother Street at Danville, Ill., in November. My time is entirely taken until July, 1904. Strong, good men like A. Martin, of Muncie, Ind., or Samuel R. Hawkins, of Murray, Ky., have a few months not taken, I understand.—JAMES SMALL.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—Chickasha, Aug. 20.—Bro. — just concluded a meeting of days at Nineka, I. T., resulting in 25 additions and a church organized. John O. Stevens, our pastor, just returned from a 10 days' effort at Tecumseh, O. T., resulting in 28 accessions; 18 last night. Rained out. This was his second meeting within a year; 164 in all. Are finishing a tabernacle here to begin a protracted effort to-night. Bro. Bowen, of Texas, doing the preaching. Particulars later.—J. SPRINGER.

Purcell, Aug. 22.—The writer has closed his second month with the church at this place. Eleven have been added to the congregation, with others to follow soon. The church is assuming good shape, and we expect to give good reports from this field in the near future. Pray for us.—C. E. CHAMBERS.

IOWA.—Whiting, Aug. 21.—We are just beginning a meeting here. We have an open date. Would like a meeting to begin about Sept. 13. As time is short, write definitely and quickly. Address us at Whiting, Iowa.—LAWRENCE WRIGHT AND L. R. SMITH.

Woodbine, Aug. 22.—We are planning for a meeting to begin August 30. V. E. Ridenour will head our song services. I had hoped to secure an evangelist but have utterly failed, and expect now to do the preaching myself. Twenty men, for various reasons, declined to assist us. We have a good, united church and regret that none of these thought our field of enough importance (apparently) to come to us. We shall use our tent or church building as the weather may indicate. Dr. Pickett and wife will be with us Sept. 6. They served this church three years and are now en route to Manila under appointment as medical missionaries.—J. H. WRIGHT.

Moulton, Aug. 22.—During my vacation I am trying to help the little church at West Grove, Ia. They have been weakened by deaths and removals until unable to support preaching. Bro. F. E. Haughey has stood by them as best he could for two or three years. We are having a good interest and are hopeful of good results. From our small country churches and the smaller towns go the best workers, both financially and otherwise, to our cities and larger towns to strengthen and build up these larger points. This is being done all the time, and will be done on and on. Are we doing just the thing to neglect these in order to the enlargement of our city work?—S. B. ROOS.

Ames, Aug. 21.—Returned from my vacation Saturday, August 8th. Three additions to the church this week. One who had found the way of the Lord more perfectly, buried with her Lord in baptism last night. A bright young man of sterling worth and a highly esteemed mother united with the church Sunday morning last by letter and statement.—F. D. FERRALL, pastor.

KENTUCKY.—Louisville, Aug. 20.—We have just closed a two weeks' meeting at Dry Ridge, Grant county, Ky., a prosperous church in a prosperous community, with 14 additions. L. B. Haskins is the efficient pastor, a young man splendidly equipped for the work of the Master.—P. H. DUNCAN.

Walton, Aug. 19.—At my last appointment at Claysville two took membership—one by letter, the other by statement. All lines of church work on the upward grade. In a few days' meeting at Sunrise by Bro. W. S. Willis, of Falmouth, Ky., 2 joined by statement. The preaching was strong and scriptural.—J. W. ROGERS.

MINNESOTA.—Eagle Lake, Aug. 17.—God continues his blessing in the work here. One more addition yesterday.—J. P. CHILDS, minister.

MISSOURI.—Downing, Aug. 14.—The Sunday-school at Cincinnati, Iowa, where I preach half time has just closed a very successful red and blue revival. The last quarterly report preceding the beginning of the revival showed an attendance of 66 and 1-13; While the secretary's report for the last five Sundays was as follows:

July 12, attendance, 149	offering, $ 3.51.
" 19, " 170	" 3.40
" 26, " 166	" 3.95
Aug. 2, " 165	" 4.53.
" 9, " 174	" 10.00.

One very noticeable feature of this work is that there was no falling off in the attendance on the alternate Sundays when there was no preaching. The result of the revival is seen in the quickening of life and energy of every department of the church work, and in the largely increased audiences attending preaching services. Two young men have recently united with the church.—W. H. COLEMAN.

Dexter, Aug. 18.—Dexter Christian College, three additions Aug. 15.—ALBERT BUXTON.

Garden City, Aug. 18.—We have had seven additions at regular services since March and five in a meeting just closed.—CLYDE SHARP.

Hunnell, Aug. 21.—Am in a meeting here: additions every Lord's day for past three months. County meeting closed last week. All was a success. Brother Clemons, of Canton, our chairman, raised $135 in 30 minutes for county work. All the churches in Shelby county reported. This church sent about $100 worth of supplies to the flood sufferers of Kansas City care Brother Abbott. County meeting last week at Mt. Joy church for Monroe county. Dinner and supper every day to all who came. Church prospering. Here and at Hunnell we have the best people in Missouri; they do what the preacher asks to be done.—T. WALLACE.

Knox City, Aug. 17.—I assisted Bro. J. H. Jones two weeks in a series of meetings in which there were 28 additions; it was a great meeting. Twenty-two of that number were confessions, mostly heads of families. Brother Jones is a strong preacher and is doing extra good work at his preaching points, Knox City and Labelle. I leave for my home at Springfield, Indiana, to-morrow. My next meeting is at State Line, Indiana. I begin there Sept. 6. Chas. E. Shultz is their pastor.—CLARENCE E. WAGNER, singing evangelist.

Canton, Aug. 21.—Closed a two weeks' meeting at Union in Ralls county, Aug. 16; 11 added, nine baptized, two from Baptists. Brother C. C. Hill, of Richmond, did the preaching. Five years ago Brother Hill organized the church. Few men are able to do so great a work in the community in which they were raised as Brother Hill has done at Union, and the people are proud of him.—E. E. FRANCIS.

New Hampton, July 29.—A lady made the good confession at the morning service here yesterday. Another united with us by letter.—J. T. ALSUP.

MONTANA.—Dillon, Aug. 17.—Set in order a congregation here yesterday of 25 members with one elder and two deacons. We are taking steps to secure suitable lots.—E. H. KELLAR.

OHIO.—Carthage, Aug. 10.—Another splendid young man and his wife made the confession last night. The out doors Sunday night services are very popular.—CHAS. M. FILLMORE.

Bellaire, Aug. 16.—One baptized; one from the Baptists and three confessed faith in Christ here yesterday—all mature young men. The attendance and interest in regular Sunday worship, Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor, prayer-meeting, has not suffered at all through the hot weather.—SUMNER T. MARTIN.

Alliance, Aug. 19.—"Dear Brother Pike: Our meeting closed with 18 additions and one since at prayer-meeting. The meeting was a good one." This letter was received to-day from the church at Sweetwater, Texas. I was pastor of this church for nine months and stopped my work suddenly in July to return to Ohio on account of sickness. We left one week before the meeting began. There was no loss of interest because there was a change of pastors at that seemingly critical time. During my stay with the brethren over $250 was raised for missions and more than $900 for lot and parsonage. This from 65 members makes all of $4.25 per member for the former and $15 for the latter. Would that all our churches could show a like record. Is it too much to say, they could if they would? Brothers Waugh and Douthitt were the evangelists for this meeting. They move things wherever they go. Brother Miatt is their present pastor. He is a good man for this important field. On account of my wife's illness I will not be able to locate as pastor, but would be glad to serve churches within easy reach of this point. Address Alliance, O.—GRANT E. PIKE.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Waynesboro, Aug. 19.—Herbert Yeuell, pastor at Uniontown, Pa., is conducting a short meeting at Waynesboro, Pa., under the auspices of the Maryland district missionary board. J. A. Hopkins is singer. W. S. Hoyer, of Beaver Creek, prepared the way. Brother Yeuell lectured three times at Bethany College Assembly and four times at Bethany Beach on Ben Hur, Quo Vadis, In His Steps, Ethics and Theology, and The Lost Chord. He will dedicate the new Beaver Creek Church Sept. 6, following with a short meeting. During July he preached to four secret orders of Uniontown, the crowds overflowing the church. Mrs. Yeuell and Donovan will remain at Bethany Beach until September.—HERBERT YEUELL.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—Oacoma, Aug. 20.—There have been 44 added in a five weeks' meeting at Oacoma. It is a meeting of widespread influence in an entirely new field.—W. J. DODGE, Armour, S. D.

TEXAS.—Cisco, Aug. 19.—Since last report seven additions in my field of labor.—R. E. MCKNIGHT.

Sherman, Aug. 18.—I closed a meeting at Lancaster last night, in which there were 46 additions to the church.—J. W. HOLSAAPPLE.

VIRGINIA.—Martinsville, Aug. 18.—Just closed a week's meeting at New Hope, in Brunswick county. There were 20 confessions and a large number reclaimed. George E. Owen is the pastor and he is a thoughtful young man. C. O. Woodward recently closed a great meeting at Perseverance.—W. H. BOOK.

THE PULPIT

Multum in Parvo

By Edgar D. Jones

1 Peter 2:17.

My text is laconic. "Honor all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honor the king." See how much the apostle has put in four simple sentences. Have you not seen paintings in which the artist's skill was so consummate that you said, "Here is perfection; here is a masterpiece?" Have you not heard strains of music so sweet, so harmonious that you cried, "Here is the very soul of music?" Well, I believe when you examine this Scripture you will say, "Here is the gospel, the whole gospel for the Christian. Here is Multum in Parvo. Here is the standard of living for those who are new creatures in Christ Jesus."

"Honor All Men."

What a big thought! What a Christ-like conception! "All," that sounds like Jesus himself. Honor all men? Why not? Is not God the Father of us all? Did not Christ die for all? We are to esteem all men whether they be members of our religious body or not; we are to value them at their worth whether they be professed Christians or not. Here is where so many fall pitifully short of their duty. The world, to some people, is bounded by the precincts of their home, their denomination and their circle of friends. They pray something after this fashion: "God bless our church; God bless our preacher; God bless our Sunday-school." There they stop; there they stay. Such lives are lived in a groove, and it was the Ram's Horn man, I think, who said, "The only difference between a groove and a grave is the length and breadth." But you cannot draw circles around Jesus Christ. You cannot build a Chinese wall about Christianity. God taught from the beginning the great principle embodied in the text. But the Jews grew narrow in their vision and prejudiced in their hearts. It was as though they said, "We are the people and wisdom will die with us." When on the mountain side Jesus said, "Ye have heard it said, Love your neighbors and hate your enemy, but I say unto you, Love your enemy and do good to them that persecute you," I suspect the Pharisees frowned. When they learned the Nazarene talked with a Samaritan woman their frowns doubtless gave way to white anger. Jesus answered, for all time, the question "Who is my neighbor?" in the parable of the good Samaritan. The only aristocracy of the New Testament recognizes is the aristocracy of character, and it ceases to be when it selfishly refuses to bless. The gospel is the emancipation proclamation that releases men from the bondage of selfishness and prejudice; it is God's dynamite exploding false theories of society and religion. It broke the shackles of prejudice that once bound the author of this text and made him big enough and broad enough to say, "Honor all men."

"Let me live in a house by the side of the road

Where the race of men go by—
The men who are good and the men who are bad,

As good and as bad as I;
I would not sit in the scorner's seat,
Or hurl the cynic's ban—

Let me live in a house by the side of the road

And be a friend to man."

"Love the Brotherhood."

The apostle is coming closer home. Here is a circle within a circle. He is in the church of our blessed Lord now, and his exhortation is sweeter and more tender. "Love," he says, "love the brotherhood." When the apostle wrote this Scripture the brotherhood was one in Christ. To be sure there were a number of congregations, but they were all churches of Christ, and their members were all disciples of him. To-day there are scores of sects and divisions among God's people. When Peter wrote this text one application sufficed. To-day preachers apply it generally and particularly; first, to all Christians, secondly, to their own denomination; or, perhaps, they reverse the order. Speed the day when the one application will again suffice! Christ prayed for the oneness of all who believe on him. It is one of the blessed signs of the times that preachers are preaching Christian union and people are beginning to practice it. Dr. Hillis' recent sermon on the union problem, and those of his fellow Brooklyn ministers, Henson and Harlan, send a thrill of joy through the hearts of thousands. "Brotherhood!" The word has a warm, mellow ring. It suggests strong arms on which to lean, and helping hands stretched out to aid. "Brotherhood!" It puts us in remembrance of such fraternal words as these: "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ," and these, too: "Brethren, even if a man be overtaken in any trespass, ye who are spiritual restore such a one in a spirit of meekness, looking to thyself lest thou also be tempted. "Brotherhood!" Here the church is spoken of as a great fraternity, and such it is. Rightly understood and patiently applied the teaching of this fraternity does away with the necessity of any other. How august indeed is this brotherhood! For Grandmaster it has God's own Son! For Emblem the Cross where Jesus died! For ritual the New Testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ! For benefits exceeding great and precious promises, one of the most beautiful being, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." To become a member of this great brotherhood is to pass from death unto life, and all men are to know its members by the love they manifest, one toward another.

"Is it worth while that we jostle a brother
Bearing his load on the rough road of life?
Is it worth while that we jeer at each other
In blackness of heart—that we war to the knife?
God pity us all in our pitiful strife!

"Were it not well in this brief little journey
On over the isthmus, down into the tide,
We give him a fish instead of a serpent,
Ere folding the hands to be and abide Forever and aye in dust at his side?"

"Fear God."

The apostle sums up our duty to the Lord in one word. "Fear God," he says. Long ago the wise man wrote, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." Like red lights of warning all through God's word the signals flash out, "Fear God." Through prophet and priest and apostle, over and over again, we are exhorted, commanded and urged to godly fear. Fifty and an hundred years ago this was a favorite topic with ministers. It ought to be so now. Has God ever changed his estimate of sin? Has he ever ceased to hate it? Has the law, "The wages of sin is death" ever been repealed? Doubtless the word "fear," when used in this sense, has a meaning of reverence and homage. Very likely it is the fear, not so much of God's wrath as it is the dread of his disapproval. Still it is not right, neither is it necessary to emasculate this good old Anglo-Saxon word "fear." A wholesome fear of God is a most commendable trait in the character of men and women. One of the noblest of all the epitaphs in Westminster Abbey is that on the tomb of Lord Lawrence: "He feared man so little because he feared God so much." An eye that never sleeps is watching us. Our secret sins are in the light of His countenance. Along with the text, "God is love," place "Thy God is a consuming fire;" and let it be known that while his goodness leads us to repentance, the certainty of his judgment day is a factor, too.

"Honor the King."

Primarily, of course, this refers to the Roman government under which the early dis-

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA"
Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial, postpaid. Call or write us about your case. We give advice free and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Prof. Wilson's 100-page Dictionary of Disease, Free. ciples had their political being. To us it means, honor the President! Obey the laws of the land! Be a good citizen! The Bible is not silent regarding our duty to the state. "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's," said Jesus. "Let every soul be in subjection to the higher powers; for there is no power but of God; and the powers that be are ordained of God," says the apostle Paul. "Be subject to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake," exhorts the apostle Peter in the same chapter from which I get this text. Yes, honor the President. Let respect be shown high officials even in the cartoon and caustic editorial. One may be respectful without being sycophantical, and democratic without being uncouth. That story of Admiral Dewey that is going the rounds of the press is to the point. An utter stranger to him rushed up, grasped his hand, and said, "Hello George, I wager you don't know me." The Admiral hastily disengaged his hand and stepping back replied grimly, "You win your wager." "Honor the King." Here is good citizenship in a nutshell. Christians, be active in affairs of state. By all means have a hand in the making of your country's laws. Have a civic pride like that of Paul who said, with a burst of feeling, "I am a Jew of Tarsus in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city." Have the patriotism of William Pitt who said with dying breath, "Oh, my country! how I love my country!" It is a noble thing to die for the flag, but it is a nobler, and oftener a harder, thing to live clean, courageous lives for it. A standing army of soldiery may serve as a protection to a nation, but an army of ruggedly honest men daily going about their business is the salt of the Republic. A higher regard for law by Americans is a crying need of the hour. The time is come for judgment to begin at the house of liberty. Englishmen who come to our shores are amazed at the indifference and, indeed, the disrespect, of the many of our citizens for law and the courts. "Honor all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honor the King." Multum in Parvo! Four short sentences! Only eleven words! But they point the fourfold duty of the Christian toward society, the church, God and the state.

"APOLOGETICS, OR CHRISTIANITY DEFENSIVELY STATED." By A. B. Bruce.

I have just finished reading this work the third time.

It is an apologetic presentation of the Christian faith with reference to whatever in our intellectual environment makes faith difficult at the present time. It is an aid to faith against such doubts as are engendered by philosophy and science.

It sets forth the Christian facts and the Christian theory of the universe. It discusses Pantheism, Materialism, Deism, Modern Speculative Theism and Agnosticism. It gives 200 pages to the Historical Preparation for Christianity, tracing the development of the religion of revelation through Mosaism, Prophetism and Judaism. The Christian Origins are given 180 pages. There are chapters on Jesus, Jesus as Founder of the Kingdom of God, Jesus Risen, Paul, The Synoptical Gospels, etc. Crowning all is the final chapter on Jesus the Supreme Authority in Religion.

This book combines ample learning with simplicity, clearness and beauty of diction. The reasoning is close and effective—all the more so because of the delightful fairness and candor of the author.

The work is valuable.

1. It is based on the higher criticism, and gives a view of the Bible and apologetic problems from that standpoint. It serves to correct current misrepresentations.

2. It faces modern problems squarely. In the readjustment of faith to modern scientific knowledge, as dispensed in the universities and elsewhere, it meets the demand.

3. It is an aid to faith. I know because I have tried it. It is so because the Scotch professor was a man of tremendous faith.

"WITH THE THIBETANS IN TENT AND TEMPLE." Dr. Susie C. Rijnhart. (Fleming Revell Co. Cloth $1.50.)

The appearance of a book in the literary world is the author's challenge to the attention of the public. It is to be presumed that, in his own mind at least, he has a message that others should hear. They, on the other hand, have a right to expect that he will not disappoint them, but will give them something worthy of their time and thought. This the author of the book bearing the above title has done, in a most fascinating story covering 392-12 mo. pages.

The book possesses peculiar merit in that it is a record of the daily experiences of the author during a four years' residence among a peculiar and little known people. Mrs. Rijnhart informs her readers that she has not aimed at literary finish, owing to the necessity of writing amid a press of many public engagements, and yet she has attained to it in that her simple story is told in the clear English of the common people without affectation and with unconscious humility.

Books of travel are always interesting. Next to visiting a country one's self is the pleasure of reading what others have seen. But not all books of travel are equally profitable, for many who go sight-seeing receive false impressions from a brief sojourn in a place and their descriptions of people and customs are faulty. Mrs. Rijnhart possesses the advantage of being able to say of the things of which she has written as Judge Tourgee said of one of his novels so popular a quarter of a century ago, "All of which I saw, part of which I was."

This story of life among the Thibetans is more fascinating than mediaeval romance. It tells of things real. It deals with the daily lives of a people who have hitherto been shut up to the outside world by barriers of their own erecting, and yet the author's experiences give ground for the hope that the day is not far distant when they will receive and gladly welcome the gospel of the son of God.

The present narrative is one of heroism which parallels any of the experiences of the great missionaries of the cross of Christ. Mrs. Judson visiting her husband in a Burmah prison, Hannington in the hands of the savages of Ugarda, or Paton pursued by savage Aneitumese could not have endured more excruciating physical and mental torture than did this brave woman in burying her little babe in that strange land of unfriendly people, waiting patiently for days for the return of her lost husband, and then making her way alone to civilization and home at last. The story is fascinating, informing, inspiring. It will prove a tonic to anyone's faith in the son of God.

"TARRY THOU TILL I COME."

Everyone is interested in the Jew—the miracle of the ages. That he is with us today with all his distinctive features and characteristics after centuries of buffetings and persecutions among all nations, is sufficient to convince anyone of the truthfulness of the scriptures.

In ancient times it was God's will that they should be punished for their idolatry and in later times for the crucifixion of Christ, yet it was said, woe unto them who offended his people. Who can say that the same curse does not rest upon their persecutors to-day?

"Tarry Thou till I Come," or Salathiel, the wandering Jew, by George Croly, is but a new name for an old but popular story first published in 1827. It has since then appeared at different times under various titles.

The scenes of this romance are in Palestine; the time, from the crucifixion of Christ to the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus. Salathiel the Jew represents the Jewish race and was chief conspirator against the life of Christ, and because of Christ's supposed words to him, "Tarry thou till I come," he is doomed to immortality upon earth.

Mr. Croly tells his tale in a lofty and interesting style, vividly describing the awful phenomena in earth and sky at the crucifixion, Salathiel's realization of his crime, and his desertion of the priestly office.

With their rich oriental setting, the wonderful adventures of the Prince of Naphtali and champion of the Jewish people under the Roman oppressor, the author has woven a charming tale.

OUR LADY OF THE BEECHES. By the Baroness Von Hutton. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.)

AVERY. Elizabeth Phelps-Ward. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston, $1.00.)

The critic is accountable only to himself for his merry iniquities. No classic curriculum contends for his consistency. To-day his head may dictate, to-night his heart wield the scepter, and to-morrow his spleen. And why not?

Conscience and law have conquered the two worlds of soul and business. Why should literature yield to either emperor? Having once learned the customs of court, happy variance might become the common courtier; invention and originality might die the death. Then why should the critic consider cause and effect or authors' purposes?

Like the court jester, he is nothing unless willfully out of sympathy with the accepted point of view. Perhaps he adjusts the balance by his agile and unexpected thumps.

Perhaps he spurs literature to that lively and uncertain quality that insures a delicate surprise or an overwhelming force in each new book.

The same periodical that condemns the morals of "Our Lady of the Beeches," objects to the "hysteria" of "Avery," both lonely wives. The latter is truthfully called an "old plot."

It is the very highest of criticism to suppose that Eve must have been suffering her first loneliness when the fiend called upon her. Else he would never have ventured. He well knew that only a man could understand his inventive genius.

Since Adam's time a few lovers have conquered time, absence and perhaps eternity. But many have failed to learn that God secures divine love only to the eternal seeker.

The "old plot" works anew, sometimes awry, every day. The strong woman cannot court. Slighted, she bides in patience and wise occupation, meeting her demons bravely; never despairing over blind pitfalls; ever hoping, but keeping her heart in all diligence to God's will for herself and her home.

Such a woman is the delicate creation of "Our Lady of the Beeches," proving indeed that there is still a real difference between the terms woman and lady, the so oddly misused.

The weak woman sues; strong only in her love for one whom she fails to inspire or attract. Such is "Avery." Her suffering is pitiful, the reward doubtful. The author does valiant battle, witing both opponent and reader. The wicked woman is not considered in either of these books.

The two temperaments to whom marriage brought no immunity from sorrow, make an ideal study in contrasts. The one conquers evil nobly. The other sanctifies patience. Both dignify love. Though sad as life itself, duty and love win their deserts. Love never dies, it is true, but its language forgotten, two must become as strangers.

An American as a Japanese Host.

By Melvin R. Gilmore.

My duties required me to spend most of the year 1901, at the Pan-American Exposition. One of our missionaries at Tokyo, Japan, Miss Kate V. Johnson, was spending the summer at Buffalo, and I early became acquainted with her. Thither came also for the summer, Komakichi Nemoto, M. D., a practising physician of Tokyo, who was in this country for post-graduate medical study. Dr. Nemoto had been a pupil of Miss Johnson in the mission school in Tokyo, had become a Christian, and had served the mission as its legal agent according to the requirements of the law which necessitated all property used by foreigners to be held in the name of a native. Of course I soon became acquainted with Dr. Nemoto.

By my previous exposition experience at the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition at Omaha in 1898, I had become well acquainted with the Japanese people connected with the Japanese concession there, the "Japanese Tea Garden," and one of the same men, Mr. O. Takayama, being the manager of the tea-house in the Japanese concession called, "Fair Japan," at the Pan-American Exposition, I soon came to be on familiar terms of acquaintance with all "Fair Japan," which was a Japanese village in the department of concessions of the exposition, and consisted of a model Japanese temple, dwelling-house, bazaars, tea-house, theatre, garden, restaurant, etc. I ate every day at the restaurant in the Japanese club, where we had Japanese food served in Japanese style. The garden was an ideal type of Japanese landscape, containing dwarfed trees, statuary, stone lanterns, a little stream of water, and over this a "laiko bashi" or drum-bridge, a water-fall, and other characteristic settings.

Miss Johnson had been in this country two years and had had only one or two Japanese meals in all that time, on the occasion of her visiting the Japanese consul at Chicago; and Dr. Nemoto had been here about a year and had not had a single Japanese meal, and both were hungry for Japanese food and Japanese society. I being so well acquainted in "Fair Japan," was able to introduce them there and make it pleasant for them, so I planned to give them the pleasant surprise of a Japanese dinner there, of which the party was Miss Johnson, Dr. Nemoto, Mr. Takayama and myself. I wished Mr. Takayama to do the honors of the occasion, because of my being somewhat of a stranger to the Japanese etiquette of the situation, but he declined and I was perforce obliged to be de facto as well as de jure host of this Japanese dinner in Japanese style.

Our menu was something like the following, with perhaps some other dishes which I have forgotten:

	Soup
Rice		Iritori
Beef Stew	Tea.	Salad

The meal was served in bowls, each person's portion on a lacquered tray, which if the style had been strictly Japanese would have had feet a few inches high to support them on the floor, and the diners would have rested on the knees and heels by them, but so much concession was made to American fashion as that we sat on chairs around an ordinary table on which the trays were placed.

The soup was made of the following ingredients: fried chicken, seasoned with shoyo; hickory-nuts, seasoned with sugar; sea-weed; and brown beans seasoned with sugar and sesame seeds (sesame Orientalis). The rice was simply cooked without any seasoning, and so that the grains were separable and stood up in a light, flaky mass, not sticky and pasty as it is so often cooked in this country.

In this manner it was eaten without any addition of anything else to destroy its delicate flavor. The iritori is a dish composed of broiled chicken, together with a body and seasoning of the following vegetables: mushrooms, burdock, lotus, celery, parsley, and a Japanese plant called konyaku. The beef-stew contained beef, brown beans, a flavoring of onion, celery, ginger, and shoyo. The salad was of green cucumbers shredded with red cabbage and garnished with a few shavings of dried fish and flavored with shoyo. The tea was genuine Japanese green tea, served in small cups and unspoiled by cream or sugar. The shoyo which I have mentioned is a dark brown liquid made by fermenting together black beans and wheat by means of yeast and afterwards salt is added. It is much used as a relish and flavor and is said to be nourishing.

Food is conveyed to the mouth by means of two small sticks, which we call "chop-sticks," from the almost obsolete English word "chop" having a use in connection with food or pertaining to food, as we still say mutton-chop, pork-chop, etc. The manner of holding the sticks is just as much de rigueur in their etiquette as the manner of holding knife and fork is with us. The proper manner is to lay the first stick under the thumb and across the first joint of the third finger and the knuckle-joint of the index finger, being firmly held by the thumb which crosses it; the second stick is then taken between the end of the thumb and the index and second fingers somewhat as we hold a pen, when it will be found that the point of the first stick can be pressed against the point of the second stick and so any portion of food can be picked up. I should say just here that the food is all prepared in the kitchen ready to be taken into the mouth, so that no knife, fork or spoon is needed at the table, and their presence there would be considered crude and uncouth. A whole roasted pig, huge joint of beef or roasted goose brought upon the table entire, would be considered barbaric. One day at dinner, a friend, Mr. Fukushima, said, "Yes, we used to eat with knives and forks a long time ago, but we have passed that stage now. At first men tore off their food with hands and teeth, then knives were used to cut off portions which were carried to the mouth with the fingers, then forks were used, but now we use the sticks, while the food is made ready in the kitchen." Soup is drunk from the edge of the bowl, while the solid portions contained in it, such as sea-weed, etc., are taken up with the sticks.

Dr. Nemoto is quite diffident about speaking English in the presence of his old teacher, Miss Johnson, and often makes her interpret for him, although he speaks English very well away from her presence. At the close of this meal he addressed me with the conventional speech of a Japanese guest to his host, speaking it in Japanese. Miss Johnson said, "Why, Nemoto San, you can say it in English!" But he begged her to interpret it for him. The speech he wished to make was, in English, "You are a good feaster!"

So closes the story of my unique experience as host of a Japanese dinner party in Japanese style, whereof I was the only member who had not lived in Japan.

The late Cornelius Vanderbilt is quoted as having said to a friend just before he died: "I don't see what good it does me—all this money that you say is mine. I can't eat it; I can't spend it; in fact, I never saw it and never had it in my hands for a moment. I dress no better than my private secretary, and cannot eat as much as my coachman. I live in a big servants' boarding house, am bothered to death by beggars, have dyspepsia, and most of my money is in the hands of others who use it mainly for their own benefit."

Ex-Senator Joseph L. Barbour, of Connecticut, in commenting upon the ease with which Irishmen become Americanized after coming to this country, tells the following story:

"There was a little Irish boy named Patsy, who came to the United States with his family. One morning his teacher in the public school asked him:

"'Who was the first man, Patsy?'

"'George Washington,' was the prompt reply.

"'Oh, no, said the teacher; 'George Washington was the father of his country, but Adam was the first man.'

"'Well,' responded Patsy, 'I didn't know ye wor speakin' o' furriners.'"

"Well, I declare! Another Turkish atrocity." Rug, cigarette or massacre?"

Cobbler Jim.

Cobbler Jim was a merry soul,
Who sang as he pegged away;
And he did more work in one short hour
Than his neighbor could do in a day!

"I'd like to know," said Cobbler Tom,
With a peg and a growl and a peg,
"How little old Jim grows rich so fast—While I'm almost compelled to beg."

"A knack he must have that I've not learned,"
And he drew a waxed end through—
The growl grew louder the while he spoke—
The little unfinished shoe.

Then he called to Kate, his elf-like wife,
"I wish you would spend the day
At the home of our neighbor, Cobbler Jim,
And find, if you can, his way."

"Of growing so rich, while we grow poor,
And tell me the secret plan."
With a frown and a growl he sat down at his bench,
And pegged on a shoe again.

"I've found the secret of Cobbler Jim,"
Said Kate, at the close of day:
"He always sings as he works so fast;
You growl as you peg away!"

The Bildads.

"My dear," remarked Mrs. Bildad a few moments before the evening meal was ready, "I wish you would give Johnnie a quarter and let him go down to the restaurant and get a quart of ice cream for supper."

"A quarter for ice cream!" shrieked Mr. Bildad. "Do you think I am made of money, Mrs. Bildad? We can't afford ice cream."

"But I have not been out of the house for a week, and I am so fond of ice cream. You used to give me ice cream every summer evening before we were mar—"

"There, there; it's no use to remind me of my foolish days. We can't afford ice cream now, and that's the end of it. I have to work in my office all day, and it's just as hard on me as your work is on you. I haven't had any ice cream for a year."

"Perhaps not," retorted Mrs. Bildad, "but when you got up from the breakfast table this morning you lighted a 10-cent cigar. At 10:15 you lighted another, and before you had finished it you went out with a friend to get a cool glass of what you call 'suds.' You had another glass of 'suds' with your lunch, and before 3 o'clock you had taken three friends out to have something and told the man who waited on you to 'make it strong.' You bought three 10-straight cigars for them, and put three more in your pocket for yourself. Before taking the car to come home to supper you had another 'suds,' and just as soon as you get up from the supper table you will light another cigar. You have spent $1.60 to-day on cigars and 'suds,' and spent at least two hours in the breeze from an electric fan in the cigar store across the alley from your office. Now it seems to me that I am entitled to—"

"Woman, have you had a private detective on my track? Beware! This is carrying things too far. I'll—"

"No, I just guessed at it, Mr. Bildad; and I see that I made a good guess. Now I want a quart of ice cream for supper, and I rather think I am going to have it. You either give Johnnie the quarter or put on your hat and—"

But Mr. Bildad had seized his head-piece and fled, slamming the screen viciously.

A Great Railroad.

It may be truthfully said that railroads, more than any other medium, make a great city. St. Louis is truly great in her railroads, having some twenty-one important lines terminating within her borders.

One of the most important of these roads to St. Louis is the WABASH LINE, from the fact that it draws the commerce of nearly all sections of the country to this metropolis, as a magnet draws kindred metals to itself.

The great arms of this growing system reach to Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Albia and Ottumwa, Ia.; Chicago, Toledo, Detroit and Buffalo, and attract business from beyond these important gateways, even from the remote Pacific Coast, the extreme Northwest, the Great Lakes and the Atlantic borders.

It is commercially aggressive, and in its never ceasing activity is to-day reaching its great steel tentacles toward Pittsburg, Pa., and Baltimore, Md. In a little more than a year these two beehives of industry and all their tributary territory will be bound to St. Louis by the continuous rails of the WABASH.

Its through-car system is perfect, running solid, fully equipped trains for night and day service to Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Toledo, Niagara Falls and Buffalo, and through sleeping cars to New York, Boston, Montreal, Denver, Portland, Ore., Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Its train equipment is modern in every particular, there having recently been placed in service many new passenger cars consisting of Observation-Cafe and Library Cars, Reclining Chair Cars, Dining Cars, Day Coaches and Combination smoking and Baggage Cars, which are models of beauty and neatness, representing the highest state of development in car building.

This road will be called upon to transport hundreds of thousands of visitors to the World's Fair in 1904, and its facilities will be found ample for so gigantic an undertaking.

THE WABASH is essentially a St. Louis line, having its General Officers, from the President down, located here, and has an army of employees, necessary to carry on this vast system, who are citizens of St. Louis.

It spends its money largely in St. Louis and it has the interest of St. Louis always in mind.

Truly this is "A GREAT RAILROAD," and above all things, it is a St. Louis railroad.

CHEAP LANDS

For Homeseekers and Colonies.

The country along the Cotton Belt Route in Southeast Missouri, Arkansas, Northwest Louisiana and Texas offers the greatest opportunities for Homeseekers. Mild climate, good water, cheap building material, abundance of fuel, and soil that will often in a single season yield enough to pay for the ground. Land can be bought as cheap as $2.50 an acre, prairie land at $4 and $5 per acre up, bottom land at $5 and $6 per acre up, improved or partly cleared land at $10 and $15 per acre up. Some fine propositions for colonies—tracts of 2,000 to 8,000 acres at $4 to $10 per acre—big money in this for a good organizer. Fruit and truck lands in the famous peach and tomato belt of East Texas at $10 to $20 per acre up. Write us for information about cheap rates, excursion dates, also literature descriptive of this great country and let us help you find a home that will cost you no more than the rent you pay every year.

Manana (To-morrow.)

My friend, have you heard of the town of Yawn.

On the banks of the River Slow,
Where blooms the Waitawhile flower fair,
Where the Sometimeorother scents the air,
And the soft Goeasys grow?

It lies in the valley of Whatstheuse,
In the province of Letherslide;
That tired feeling is native there,
It's the home of the listless Idontcare,
Where the Putitoffs abide.

The Putitoffs smile when asked to invest,
And say they will do it to-morrow;
And so they delay from day unto day,
Till death cycles up and steals them away.
And their families beg, steal or borrow.
—Popular Mechanics.

Farmers' Vacations.

Now the farmer and his family begin to wonder where their vacations are coming in. It is a hard question and can only be solved by accepting the fact that farm life keeps its participants in the same situation and the same conditions which are so desirable to people in the cities. They come out and enjoy the conditions under which farmers work every day, but they are not confined to a routine of regular tasks as the farm workers are, but to offset this they have to work in shops or offices, shut out from pure air and natural scenery a large part of the year to earn the money which pays for their short vacations. If farmers and their families could only realize that their labor pays as they go along, for the pleasures which are so desirable to residents of the cities they would feel less uneasiness when they hear the latter tell about having vacations.

Every person needs a change of scenery and subjects for thought and observation, and it is a fact that farmers are confined by their surroundings and belongings more than most other people who manage their own affairs, but there is variety in their labors, and when they can get over the feeling that they must get into the city or adopt city ways in order to reach the climax of existence, they will understand that they have an existence of their own as useful, desirable and as important and as near the perfection of society as any which they have been dreaming about.
—Journal of Agriculture.

The "Provider."

Fathers are lectured a good deal nowadays about their duty to their children, and exhorted to give less time to business and more to home. Those who point out their deficiencies to them so glibly do not seem to see that their is another side to the case. Many a father would be glad to spend less time at the office, but for knowing that the comfort of the home depends on his laborious hours there. Many a husband envies his wife the clinging affection of the little son and daughter and counts the loss of an equal place in their childish hearts the greatest sacrifice he makes for the good of his family. Do mothers realize how much they might do to strengthen the tie between the children and their father? So much of the purchasing in the average household is done by the mother that the father's real importance as the "provider" is not always clear to youthful eyes. It is for the mother to explain when she brings home the new suit that it was father who earned the money for it and that it is because father wants his boys and girls to have so many nice things that he goes to work so early in the morning and comes home, sometimes, so tired that he does not like noisy plays. One little three-year-old has this moral pointed out for him in a nursery jingle, to accompany his toilet, after the style of "The House that Jack Built," which begins with himself and his initial garment, and reaches its climax in his papa: "This is Dear Papa. Who works so hard, To earn the money, That Mamma takes, When she goes to the store, To buy the shirt, That Johnny wears."—The Congregationalist.

Presidential Wisdom on the Problem.

Wise things were said at college commencements last June. Said President Andrew S. Draper, of the University of Illinois: "The average college man has great advantage over the average other man if his head is straight on the work question." Said President Edmund J. James of Northwestern University: "I have known hundreds of college graduates and not more than five or six ever regretted having gone to college. Many a college graduate has been lost to the business world simply because he would not prepare for the test." Said Mr. A. C. Bartlett, of Chicago, quoted above, at Bradley Institute, Peoria: "Let our colleges and universities open their doors a little wider to those who are destined to be men of affairs. The possibilities for intellectual enjoyment in a commercial life should be more fully recognized." Said President Angell, of the University of Michigan: "College students are apt to overrate the value of mere brilliancy, and to underrate the value of industry as the requisite to success in life." Said President Theodore Roosevelt, at the University of Virginia: "The first thing a university man, like any other man, must do, is to pull his own weight." Said President Hadley, at Yale University: "If you value the world simply for what you can get out of it, be assured that the world will in turn estimate your value to it by what it can get out of you."—The Baptist Standard.

Dr. E. W. Emerson says that his father, Ralph Waldo Emerson, did not often attend church because he did not like sermons, though he enjoyed orations and addresses. The Congregationalist says: "If he were living now he would not have to travel far to attend churches in which he would hear the kind of public speech which he preferred."

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

Nannie D. Chambers, Richwood, Ky.: "After keeping the Av. S. rules for more than four years without ever missing a day, I have at last forgotten my Bible verse. And it was my 12th week—just think of that! I can't imagine how I came to forget it,—I'm sure it must have been the fault of some one else! I agree with Helen Ross; blue and old gold is a pretty combination for the Av. S. badge. Although we miss the stories, the Av. S. page has such interesting discussions, we ought not to find fault. I am free to confess, however, that I have lost entire interest in the sitting hen and gizzard questions. Like Tom Green, I could not think Mr. Manley went after milk-shakes, but I didn't agree with him about snakes. Our school begins in three weeks. I will have a busy time as I am doing four years' work in three."

Clarence Per Lee, Grand Rapids, Mich.: "To-day is Sunday. I heard Brother Garrison preach; he is at his summer cottage, Edgewood-on-the-Lake, Macatawa Park, which is five minutes' row from Ottawa Beach where the press boys held their picnic last year. The Evening Press Company has built a gymnasium for the Newsboys' association and gives it a picnic each year. The first was held at Reed's Lake, since then, at Grand Haven, Muskegon, or Ottawa Beach, by special train. At the annual Newsboys' dinner, a turkey spread is served to over 1,000 boys at New Year's. The business men of the city give it, and act as waiters. There is also a school for boys obliged to support widowed mothers, or small brothers and sisters. It opens at 8; at 11 it closes so the boys can sell the noon edition, then the three o'clock's, then the five's—not having any school in the afternoon. In that way the boys get a little study and a lot of work, but they make a lot of money. Sunday at four in winter months, is held the 'Happy Hour.' Then the best talent of this state and others, even from across the ocean contributes to the pleasure and profit of the boys; among these have been Madame Rhea, Gabrielowitsch, Wm. Alden Smith, Gen. Shafer, Gen. Alger, Paderewski, Louis Morrison, etc. These meetings are for those boys who never go to church or Sunday-school. The Newsboy Band always takes a summer outing. They have been north to Makinac Island, and as far south as Louisville. In 1901 they played two weeks at the Buffalo Pan-American Exposition. The band has a houseboat, and takes delightful trips down Grand river to Spring Lake annually, staying about 10 days. Wherever they go these boys are treated like lords." (Who would not be a newsboy?) "When they came home from Louisville they were taken from the depot in hacks—the whole town turned out to welcome them back. Last year Carl and I attended for the first time the Newsboys' picnic. It was all planned months before the day. Marching orders had been sent and each boy knew what was expected of him. All were at their headquarters, some as early as five o'clock. About six the march to the station began. At the union depot they kept in divisions like so many well-drilled regiments. The train pulled into the shed with 17 coaches and when the gates were opened, 1,300 boys made a mad rush, but in some unaccountable way were soon aboard the train. Each had a lunch from home; besides, there were 1,400 lunches furnished by the company, besides material for lemonade by the barrel—not circus lemonade. The run to Ottawa Beach was made without accident. We saluted each station with a yell and whoop. Arrived at the beach we rushed for the lake. Half the boys were off before the train stopped, and by the time the last were off the first were in the water. As it was Carl's and my first experience at a Newsboys' picnic, and as I had never been in such big water before, and as mamma was not there to tell me it was time to come out, I just stayed in and stayed in and missed lemonade and almost my lunch—it was a hot day. When I came out I felt smart, and kept on feeling smart for several days; my back and arms and legs all got a new skin in a couple of weeks." (I've known people who felt smart, but it affected their heads; pity they couldn't get new ones. Clarence, next week, will tell of this year's annual picnic.)

Mary Rice, Harrisonville, Mo.: "In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST you gave the names out of the first 400 who have stayed with the Av. S. I am sorry my name was not among them. I joined when the society was only a few weeks old." (Yes, you are number 134, and I am glad to see you again. What has become of Eugene? He was number 133.) "I sent in my first report the next year. I am now keeping the rules for my second. Another friend not mentioned was Lola Cox. We all know her, even if she hasn't managed to keep on the Honor List very often. (Lola is our 104th to join. she was 8, then.) "We would all be glad to hear from her again. I like the Av. S. better than at first. I am reading Irving's 'Life of Washington.' I think it fine." (So do I.) "White and green would be pretty colors for our badges, placing the white in front and working 'Av. S.' on it in green letters. The badges should be of uniform size, say a half yard of each ribbon of one and a half inch ribbon, with a small bow at the top. The members should wear the badges not only on Advance Society Day, but during the entire World's Fair. Zella Manley asked what I had been wanting to ask. Why are you never on the Honor List? You gave your reason, but you didn't tell us whether you are keeping the rules or not. If you aren't, I'm afraid we will have to turn you out." (Won't you let me begin again?) "Melvin Ledden said he took Central examinations, March 21. Did he pass? I got through all right just a week after he was examined. When I joined the society I lived in Illinois, and when I sent my first report, we lived in Iowa. We just came to Missouri last year." (I'm sorry you didn't know sooner what a nice place it is.)

Betty Dickey and Sally Huffaker, Lexington, Mo.: "We desire to join

HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA CURED BY THE Kola Plant.

THE KOLA PLANT. New Remedy that in the short time since its discovery it has come into almost universal use in the hospitals of Europe and America for the cure of every form of Hay-Fever and Asthma. Its cures are really marvelous. Men, women and children who have been given up as incurable are being restored daily to perfect health by the use of Himalaya. Thousands of letters attesting its wonderful cures have been written the importers, but limited space prevents a detailed list. Read what a few have to say, proving that Hay-Fever and Asthma can be cured:

Mr. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes Jan. 31st, Himalaya permanently cured him of Hay-Fever and Asthma. He strongly recommends it to sufferers. Dr. W. H. Vail, a prominent physician of St. Louis, Mo., writes March 8th, that he used Himalaya on six different Hay-Fever patients last Fall with satisfactory results in every case. Mr. A. L. Clark, Springfield, Mo., writes Jan. 22d, was a sufferer of Hay-Fever and Asthma for thirty years and thought I would die every Fall but Himalaya completely cured me. Mr. Geo. C. Dye, Marietta, Ohio, writes Jan. 24th, I was cured after several years suffering with Hay-Fever and Asthma. Mr. J. B. Ayie, Estherville, Iowa, writes Feb. 28th, that he was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after severe suffering for 28 years. Miss Eva Presten, Petersburg, Ind., writes March 8th, that she suffered untold misery for 18 years with Hay-Fever and Asthma. Is completely cured, although her physician said that a cure was impossible. Mr. E. B. Hume, 135 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa., a widely-known traveler, writes Feb. 2d, Himalaya cured me of Asthma when everything else failed. Dr. J. R. Duncan, the oldest physician of Crawfordsville, Ind., writes Jan. 27th, it is my duty to tell all I can of the great virtue of Himalaya. Rev. J. L. Coombs, Martinsburg, W. Va., writes to the New York World, July 23rd, that it cured him of Asthma of 37 years' standing. If you suffer from Hay-Fever and Asthma in any form, do not despair, but write at once to the Kola Importing Co., No. 1166 Broadway, New York City, N.Y., who in order to prove the power of this wonderful new botanic discovery will send you one Trial Case by mail, entirely free. Remember it costs you absolutely nothing.

the Av. S. We begin our reading to-day. We are cousins and our ages are 11 and 13."

Mary Huffaker, Lexington, Mo.: "I wish to join the Av. S. I began keeping the rules June 28. I enjoy the Av. S. letters very much."

Jennie Trimwar, Edleting, Va.: "You talk mighty big about shakes now, but I don't believe you knew what they were, until Zella explained! Now, did you?" (No, I didn't.) "And what you said to Maude Kelley shows you are not a woman, doesn't it?" (Yes, it does. I am not one.) "And if you are not" (I am a man, of course), "were you joking about playing on the piano?" (The neighbors think it no joke, I dare say.) "Are you married?" (No, nor never was, and scarce hope it.) "I am going to try to get some diamonds in my mind, by joining the Av. S."

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

After four years of service as Secretary of War, Mr. Root has tendered his resignation, which has been accepted. A week ago he sailed for England, where he will participate in the negotiations for the settlement of the Alaskan boundary dispute. His resignation has been anticipated ever since his appointment as a member of the Alaskan boundary commission was announced. It is stated that he will return to his lucrative law practice, but it is rumored that he is not permanently out of politics. New York will need a governor when Gov. Odell's term is ended, and there will be an opening for a Republican presidential candidate in 1908. Mr. Root is good timber for either or both. The record of Mr. Root's services is well summed up by the President in the letter accepting his resignation, which we here give in full:

OYSTER BAY, L. I., August 24.—Hon. Elihu Root, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.: My Dear Mr. Root:—It is hard, indeed, for me to accept your resignation; and I do so not only with keen personal regret, but with a lively understanding of the gap your withdrawal will create in public life. My sense of personal loss is very great; and yet my sense of the loss to the nation as a whole is even greater. You have been over four years secretary of war. I wonder if you yourself realize how much you have accomplished during that period. If you will turn to your first reports and will read therein the recommendations you made in order that the army might be put on an effective basis, you can not but be pleased at the way in which these recommendations have now been adopted by Congress as well as by the administration, and have become enacted into law or crystallized into custom. We have never had a public servant of the government who has worked harder than you have worked during these four years and a half, and this not merely in point of time, but, above all, in point of intensity, and your success has been equal to your labor. The only reward you have had, or can have, is the knowledge of successful achievement of the performance in fullest fashion, of a great public duty, the doing of which was of vital importance to the nation's welfare.

Your duties have included more than merely the administration of the department and the reorganization of the army on an effective basis. You have also been the head of a department which dealt with the vast and delicate problems involved in our possession of the Philippine islands and your success in dealing with this part of your work has been as signal as your success in dealing with the purely military problems. To very few statesmen indeed, in any country, is it given at one and the same time to achieve signal and striking triumphs in the administration and reform of the military branch of the government and in the administration of what was in effect a department of insular dependencies, where the problems were new to our people, and were in themselves of great difficulty.

Moreover, aside from your work in these two divisions of the government service, I appreciate most keenly the invaluable advice and assistance you have rendered me in innumerable matters of weight not coming directly in your departmental province, but in which I sought your aid with the certainty of not being disappointed. Your position on the Alaskan boundary commission at the present moment is an illustration of these services.

May all good fortune attend you wherever you are; the American people wish you well and appreciate to the full the debt due you for all that you have done in their behalf.

Faithfully yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

It has been officially announced that Governor Taft of the Philippines is to succeed Secretary Root and that Luke C. Wright, Vice-Governor of the Philippines, will succeed Gov. Taft. It is notable that all three of these men are relatively new characters before the public eye. None of them had a wide reputation before the Spanish war. It was that war and the events and conditions growing immediately out of it which opened to them the door to important service and general recognition. Governor Taft has had a task unique in American history—the government of a tropical dependency inhabited by a population heterogeneous within itself and widely different from that of any part of this country. So thoroughly has he given himself to this work that it was feared that there would be serious discontent among the natives in the event of his removal. But so well has the work been done that it will doubtless go on without a ripple in the hands of his successor. Gen. Luke C. Wright, of Tennessee, a Confederate veteran and a life-long Democrat, has rendered able service as Vice-Governor of the Philippines and has been acting governor during the considerable intervals of Gov. Taft's absence from the islands. It is fitting that he should be appointed to the governorship, and moreover it is excellent politics. An administration which gives such an important position to a man of the opposite party, cannot easily be charged with distributing public offices as compensation for party service.

The New Secretary of War.

At the meeting of the American Bar Association, which is in session at Hot Springs, Va., the committee on commercial law presented a report in which extreme measures were recommended for curbing the trusts. Three methods were suggested for preventing undesirable combinations: First, they might be subjected to a graduated franchise tax which would place a premium on the incorporation of small companies and would require companies with several million dollars of capital to pay a larger franchise tax than they could afford to pay. At present in most states the franchise tax is graded the other way, so that it is cheaper to incorporate one $10,000,000 concern than ten $1,000,000 companies. Second, combinations and consolidations might be compelled to render the public better or cheaper service. For example, in the recent case of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern railroads the desired object might have been obtained by a federal statute requiring any interstate corporation to reduce its rates by one-half in every case where competition has been prevented by combination, agreement or common control. Third, the state itself might enter the field as a competitor to any great corporation which had succeeded in throttling all other competition.

It is a matter of some significance that these three recommendations were made not by a group of panic-stricken capital-haters, and not by a committee or convention of politicians with an eye to the labor vote, but by a committee of lawyers representing the National Bar Association and under circumstances conducive to the utmost candor. Their opinion was that the natural forces of trade and the laws of supply and demand can not be relied upon to maintain the proper equilibrium between large and small concerns and between the rights of the public and those of the corporations, and that the trust question would either have to be settled by the lawyers or left to the demagogues. Can it be true that the tendency of the times is toward a combination of all of the chief lines of industry in the hands of one huge corporation, controlled by the genius of one man? Such a situation, startling as it seems, would be scarcely more serious than a condition in which each separate line of trade is controlled by its particular trust—and that condition we are obviously approaching. The third of the above suggestions made by the committee of the Bar Association savors strongly of socialism. If the State is to enter at all into the industrial field, perhaps it might better be by taking possession of any trust which has destroyed competition in its line and operating it as a State monopoly rather than by becoming a competitor against the trust. One thing, however, is certain, and that is that little headway will be made in fighting the trusts until the public ceases to be satisfied with an occasional technical victory over some combination, and begins to insist upon practical results. And that will not be accomplished until we are ready to do some things which may at first glance seem startling and revolutionary. Five years ago when the United States suddenly found itself in possession of distant dependencies, inhabited by inferior races, it was discovered that some of our time-honored political maxims, which we had been in the habit of considering fundamental to all just government, could not be applied under the new conditions. Perhaps before we get through with the trust question, we shall also find that some of our accepted axioms about the rights of property will have to be modified to meet the new industrial conditions of this age.

The Industrial Outlook.

Tom Johnson, of Cleveland, has succeeded in gaining control of the Ohio Democratic Convention against his chief rival, Zimmerman, of Springfield. Mr. Johnson has been named for governor, and the platform denounces imperialism and trusts and reaffirms the principles of the Kansas City platform, though without specific reference to the heaven-born ratio of 16 to 1. Mr. Johnson has never been very enthusiastic in his advocacy of that ratio, and perhaps relies upon a wise silence on that point, together with an acceptance of the general principles of the last two national Democratic platforms, to make him acceptable to both wings of the Democracy. The Democratic and Populist conventions in Nebraska, which met simultaneously at Columbus and Grand Island respectively, declared in favor of fusion, and nominated a common ticket for the minor state officers who are to be elected this year.

On the day before his retirement, General Miles sent a final message to the War Department containing some recommendations and suggestions which he gave as the result of his military experience and observation. One of these was that the proportion of cavalry in our army, which is now "entirely out of proportion, useless and enormously expensive," should be reduced. The proportion of cavalry to infantry in our army is twice to three times what it is in European armies, in spite of the fact that much more effective volunteer cavalrymen can be obtained on short notice here than there. Gen. Miles recommends that the bicycle, motorcycle and automobile should be used much more than they have been, and that five regiments of cavalry should be discontinued and in their place a corps organized and equipped with these appliances.

A report that the American vice-consul at Beirut, Syria, William G. Magelssen, had been assassinated, convinced our state department that it was time for America to take a hand in the Turkish situation, and the Mediterranean squadron, consisting of three war vessels, has been ordered to proceed at once to Turkish waters. Later advices indicate that Mr. Magelssen was not killed, but that there was an unsuccessful attempt upon his life. The order to the squadron, however, has been allowed to stand, and Turkey will be required to make proper amends for the indignity. The identity and connections of the would-be assassin have not yet been discovered, but there is something suspicious about these frequent murderous attempts against foreign consuls in Turkish dominion. Two Russian consuls have been murdered within the past six months, and that this American consul did not suffer the same fate, was due only to lack of skill in his assailant. It will be remembered that some months ago the leaders of the Macedonian rebellion boldly proclaimed their intention of startling Europe with such a series of atrocities in widely separated parts of the Turkish Empire as would show the inability of Turkey to keep the peace and protect foreign residents, and would compel interference by the powers. The disturbances which have occurred almost simultaneously in various parts of Macedonia confirm this statement, and the dispatch of the Russian fleet following the assassination of the consul at Monastir indicates that the attempt to force foreign invasion is meeting with some success. It is reported that simultaneously with the attack upon the American vice-consul at Beirut, there was an attempt to burn the Presbyterian college at Harpoot. The presence of Admiral Cotton with three American warships in Turkish waters will have a wholesome effect as indicating that our government is alive to the conditions in Turkey and is prepared to hold the Sultan responsible for the preservation of peace and order.

The Czar of Russia will pay a visit to Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria-Hungary during the present month. There is reason to believe that this visit will find its chief significance in the interest which these two sovereigns are taking in the Turkish situation. Russia and Austria are now more intimately concerned with Turkish affairs, especially in Macedonia than any of the other European powers. Great Britain's interest has notably waned until at present there is no really good reason why she should interfere with any program which Russia and Austria may agree upon for the improvement of internal administration in the Turkish dominions. The possession of Egypt is an ample safe-guard to British interests in the eastern Mediterranean. Russia and Austria are the nearest European neighbors to the disturbed territory. The rivalry between them for influence in the Balkan peninsula is keen enough to make each a sufficient check upon the other. If the two sovereigns will get together at Vienna and formulate some definite program for reforms to be carried out not under Turkish oversight, there will be a fair chance of accomplishing something.

The Department of the Interior will begin a thorough investigation of the alleged abuses in the conduct of Indian affairs as soon as the Secretary of the Interior can find a suitable person to conduct the investigation. Secretary Hitchcock has given out a lengthy statement to the effect that he has already accepted the resignations of several officials who have been caught using their official relationships as a means of private gain. The members of the Dawes commission have wired a request for an investigation to which Secretary Hitchcock replied that he had anticipated their desire and was already making the necessary preparations. The chairman of the Dawes commission is president of one of the land companies, similar to those which have gained unenviable notoriety by buying up lands from ignorant Indians at a merely nominal price, but no charges of questionable dealings have been made against the chairman himself.

Brevities.

Sam Park, the walking delegate who was convicted of extortion in demanding money to call off a strike, has taken up his abode within the hospitable halls of Sing Sing. In Missouri we have nineteen convicted boodlers still at large. Missouri might learn something from New York's expeditious handling of such cases.

The long-promised "two-minute" horse is here at last. Lou Dillion has trotted a mile in exactly two minutes.

At the recent meeting of the Missouri Press Association at St. Louis, Walter Williams read a paper in which he shows that the press has less liberty in this country than in Great Britain. In England an editor cannot be punished for libel except after trial and conviction by jury. In Missouri a judge can arbitrarily fine an editor for libel by calling it contempt of court.

The Lord's Supper.

In treating the matter of public worship, as it was observed in the beginning, special emphasis should be given to the Lord's Supper, which seems to have been its central feature. Christianity is pre eminently a personal religion in that it concerns each individual person, and that it has to do with a Person as its supreme object of faith and source of authority. It is natural, therefore, that an institution like the Lord's Supper, which calls attention, not to any mere doctrine or usage or form of government, but to the Christ himself, and that, too, in his great sacrificial act of laying down his life for the sins of the world, should hold the pre-eminence in public worship. It has been a source of strength to the churches of this reformation that they have generally observed the Lord's Supper on each first day of the week, and have sought to do it in such simplicity and earnestness as would best subserve its original purpose. Much depends on the manner in which the institution is observed as to the spiritual value which it conveys.

In the first place, there should be preparation for the proper observance of such an ordinance. He who lives nearest to Christ during the week, is in best condition for approaching the Lord's Supper on the Lord's day. But especially should the Lord's day morning find us in the Spirit, with thoughts turning toward the Christ and his great sacrifice in our behalf, and to the privilege which we are soon to enjoy of sitting down at His table, where He in spirit presides, and partaking of the simple emblems in memory of Him. If there has been no private devotion, no turning of the mind thoughtfully to Him who laid down his life for us, how can we be in the proper frame of mind to sit at His table and commune with Him?

Much depends, too, upon the preparation of mind and heart of those who preside at the table. The right word rightly spoken, the very words of our Lord Himself when He instituted the ordinance, the fervent prayer, breathing the spirit of gratitude, the reverent manner—how much all that has to do with impressing the minds and hearts of the people with the significance of the ordinance they are observing! No one should assume the important position of presiding at the Lord's table without some preparation of his mind and heart, that he may truly enter into its spirit. How often have we seen it hurriedly and mechanically passed through without any just appreciation of the holy and sacred memories which should be associated with it! Music has an important place in connection with this institution, and some of our sweet communion hymns, sung softly by the congregation or choir, add impressiveness to the worship and help us to a clearer understanding of its deep spiritual significance.

But let silence have its sacred office in connection with this sweetly solemn service. What better time or place than when we are sitting in the presence of the Lord's table, to think of our shortcomings, our weaknesses, confess our faults to Him who heareth in secret, and seek his forgiving love?

"Sweet the moments rich in blessing Which before the cross I spend."

Let the heart have its way in this observance. Tell the Lord, in your heart, how you love him for giving his life for you and the world. Promise that you will try to walk closer with him through the week upon which you are entering than ever before. Ask yourself what sacrifice you have made for him who made such great sacrifice for you. Try to grasp the great truth of Christianity, that to follow Christ is to live a life of unselfish service for others.

As to the method of serving the congregation with the emblems, whether it be by one or several deacons or assistants, whether thanks should be given for both emblems before either is passed, whether there be the individual communion cups or only a few cups, as in the older method, there is but one scriptural rule to be observed here when the essentials of the ordinance are all included, and that is, "Let all things be done decently and in order." Whatever method best promotes the spirit of reverence and conforms to the idea and taste of the people, is the best for that particular congregation. Whatever method may be adopted should soon sink out of thought and be lost sight of in the spirit of worship that should prevail in the observance of this tender memorial feast. For a feast it is, not of material blessings, but of spiritual food which satisfies the hunger of the heart, and strengthens it for future service.

It is sad to think how many of the professed followers of Jesus deprive themselves of the blessing they might derive from this institution. "Do this," said the Master, "in remembrance of me." There seems to be a pleading tone in these tender words, as if he would say: "Do not forget me when I am gone from you in bodily presence. I am going to leave you a keepsake, a simple memorial institution, in observing which you may think of me and of all that I have done for you." "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink the cup, ye proclaim the Lord's death till he come." Strange that anyone who has ever tasted the sweetness of forgiveness, could voluntarily absent himself from the Lord's table when the Master Himself has extended the invitation, asking him to come and partake in memory of Himself. "For this cause many among you are weak and sickly, and not a few sleep." The pulpit has a duty here, in the way of warning and instruction, which it must not neglect.

If we are correct in our view of the Lord's Supper, that it is calculated to develop the spiritual and the devotional life of those who observe it, and that it should be observed weekly for this reason, and not simply to slavishly follow some custom or precedent of the past, then we ought to exhibit, not alone in our public worship, but in our private devotions and in our daily lives, the results of this frequent communion with the Lord. Is it so? Is this a special characteristic of the churches and members that observe this institution on every first day of the week—that they are reverent, devout, spiritually minded, and yet joyful in hope, abounding in good works and in all unselfish service? If not, let it be our supreme desire and purpose to attain such characteristics as the best possible proof we can give to the world of the scripturalness of our order of worship and the sincerity and value of our plea for a return to the simplicity, in faith and worship, of the New Testament Church.

Believing Into Christ.

Dean Haggard, of Drake University, is writing some timely and suggestive articles in the Christian Union, of Des Moines, on "Better Evangelistic Methods." In a recent article he calls the attention of evangelists to the fact that many of them fail to emphasize the truth which the New Testament clearly teaches, that we believe into Christ, and says: "I plead with our evangelists not only to avoid this blunder [that is of denying that the scriptures so teach] but to give as one of their answers to the question, 'How shall I get into Christ' these words, 'You must believe into him.' The very genius of our plea has always demanded such an answer and the scriptures plainly teach it." He further recommends as a motto among our evangelists, this: "No baptism into Jesus Christ without believing into him." That is only saying that no baptism has any value, or effects any transition, that is not the expression of the soul's faith in Jesus Christ.

In harmony with this statement N. J. Aylsworth in his work on "The Moral and Spiritual Aspects of Baptism," says that "the phrase to believe on (pisteuein eis) Christ represents the spiritual act of coming to him receiving him, submitting to or obeying him. It embraces self-surrender, acceptance, trust. We may go farther and say that, since it is the act of acceptably coming to him and receiving him, all the spiritual characteristics which Christ attaches to the condition of divine acceptance, throughout his entire teaching, are but features of this faith. It has within it all that the heart must contain when it comes to God, and it is the act of laying all this on his altar." (pp. 241, 242). He further quotes Thayer's lexicon defining the phrase "pisteuein eis tou, Ieeson" as "to have a faith directed unto, believ- ing or in faith to give one's self up to Jesus." He also quotes Prof. Stevens, referring to the same passages, as saying: "It is impossible that such functions and effects should be ascribed to any faith which is not in its very nature a trustful surrender of the soul to Christ, a self-renouncing acceptance of his person, and an entrance into life-fellowship with him. (See The Johannine Theology, p 223.)

And yet, in spite of such authorities and such plain scriptural teaching, there is a shyness, often noticed among our preachers, in ascribing salvation to faith, as the New Testament often does. It may be said that the abuse of the "faith alone" doctrine has given rise to this practice, but it should be remembered that the avoidance of New Testament phraseology is very likely to give rise to even a worse extreme than that which it is sought to avoid. A score of years ago when one of our denominational contemporaries charged us with denying the doctrine of justification by faith, we replied that there was no controversy between us and other evangelical believers as to the fundamental doctrine of justification by faith; that the point of difference arose as to when the believer was justified by faith.

It has not been sufficiently emphasized by many among us that repentance unto life, and baptism, are but stages or manifestations of faith, and that these acts of turning to Christ and surrendering to him, must not be excluded from that faith of the New Testament on which justification is predicated. We may be sure that any theory which we may hold that leads us, consciously or unconsciously, to the avoidance of New Testament phraseology may safely be abandoned as a departure from the thought and teaching of Jesus and his apostles.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Or

Macatawa Musings.

A rainy day occasionally, as we have frequently said, is not to be dreaded or lamented, as it has its uses; but when it comes to a whole week of clouded skies, with only an occasional rift in the clouds, with eaves and trees dripping, dripping, dripping, until the very lake itself looks wet, as if it were drenched in the weeping clouds, it requires a good deal of philosophy to remain content within doors for so long a time, when there is so much on the outside to be enjoyed, if only the clouds would vanish and the sun shine. We have had such a week at Macatawa Park. For a few days the wind seemed to blow the rain from the west, and then the wind shifted and for a few days it has been bringing it back from the east. It has been hard upon those who have come here for only a week or a two weeks' outing, and it has been especially hard on our young Chautauqua, which has been almost washed out by the incessant rain. The tent which was erected for the purpose has proved inadequate as a shelter, and last night it adjourned to the auditorium on the hill. Even at this writing the rain continues, but no doubt the sun will shine again in a few days in a way to make us forget the week of dripping clouds.

Speaking of the Chautauqua, the management has secured excellent talent, and it has been fairly well advertised, but it has had to face certain difficulties, and it has been in the nature of an experiment. The newness of the enterprise, the unfavorable weather, and the local conditions otherwise, have not been favorable to a successful Chautauqua. Macatawa Park was not started as a Chautauqua, but as a place for rest and recreation. The people who come here from the cities, come to escape the demands of the strenuous life, both intellectual and physical, and hitherto all that we have aimed at by our Sunday services and by our Assembly, lasting a week with the afternoons free, was to throw in just enough of the intellectual and religious to save the place from any mental dissipation or moral backsliding, and to make it spiritually helpful. The people have responded to that very cheerfully, but it remains to be seen whether a Chautauqua can be made successful under these conditions. It will require a very large patronage from the surrounding country in order to succeed. This may be secured in time, but it may be doubted whether the situation is adapted to the Chautauqua idea. Those of us who were responsible in the past for the Assembly were glad to be relieved of that responsibility, and we regret that the managers of the Chautauqua have not met with greater encouragement in this its first year here.

And still the heavens weep. Out yonder on the lake a few miles distant is a dark line of vapor that might easily be mistaken by a stranger, not knowing where he was, for the opposite side of the lake—a wooded shore line. It has all the scenic effect that such a shore line would have. We remember one soft summer night, crossing the Atlantic homeward, sitting up on the upper deck until a late hour, witnessing a similar optical illusion. The vapors were piled up in such fantastic fashion as to give the appearance of a trip down the Mississippi River by moonlight. There were the outlines of the trees that lined the shore, rounded hills and more rugged crags, which made the whole scene very realistic, and we could easily imagine that we were in a Mississippi River steamboat, floating down the old Father of Waters, nearing our St. Louis home. These optical illusions in the realm of physics have their counterpart in the realm of ideas. How many theories and views, which for centuries were supposed to represent solid facts or realities, have been shown at last to be nothing more solid than the vapor and mists of human speculation or imagination. But as long as these are believed to be real they exert a very decided influence over those who hold them, and sometimes injuriously. If one, mistaking yonder fog-bank for solid land, should undertake to cross to it in a row boat, he might or might not return, when the mistake was discovered. Hence the importance of applying all the criteria of truth to the phenomena of life.

It is not too much to say that a large portion of one's life on earth is spent in getting rid of the illusions of childhood and youth. We would not deny that these illusions have a beneficent part to perform in the building of character. They are at least inevitable and grow out of the very nature of our being and of the world in which we live. But as the years pass by, it should be the aim of every honest soul to get hold of reality, to know the truth and to build upon the impregnable basis of facts. One of the great characters of history, who saw many of the illusions of his youth pass by, and who foresaw many impending changes in the realm of religious beliefs and practices, was moved to say, "But now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; and the greatest of these is love." These are neither optical illusions nor mistaken theories. They are great and fundamental realities on which the soul may rest amid all the changes of time. Why should not the church, then, give itself assiduously to the cultivation of these supreme and abiding things in Christianity? But we moralize, . . . The rain still descends, and there is the sound of autumn in its patter on the roof of our study. We are reminded that this issue of the paper brings us into September, the month when most of the vacationists return to their homes, when business takes on an intenser activity, when the churches gather themselves together for more aggressive work, when many of our state conventions are held, and when, throughout all the land, the notes of preparation are heard for the great national convocation in October. May it be that in all these activities, whether we call them business or religion, we may carry a new and more vivid sense of God's presence, of divine realities and of the dignity and eternal worth of labor and sacrifice for the betterment of the world and for the advancement of the kingdom of God.

Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, Ind., spent a day with us at the Park during the past week, although he arrived a few hours too late for his lecture through a misunderstanding as to the time when it was to be delivered. We greatly enjoyed a day's fishing with him on the lake, and to have him as a guest in our home. R. P. Arthur, of Grand Rapids, looked in on us for a few hours one day during the week past. But our visit with him was all too short. T. D. Butler, of California, also spent a few hours with us recently on his way back to the western coast. He has had an extended visit among old friends in former fields of labor, and was much refreshed in spirit by his fellowship with the brethren. It is a great pleasure to us, while mingling work and rest here by the lakeside, to enjoy fellowship with these comrades in arms as they come and go on the King's business. We are glad that they know that the proverbial latch-string always hangs on the outside at Edgewood-on-the-Lake.

Questions and Answers.

Q. 1. Was the baptism that John the Baptist administered Christian baptism? 2. Does infant baptism take the place of circumcision?

MRS. OLIVE THOMPSON.

A. 1. No. John's baptism was preparatory, and is clearly differentiated from Christian baptism in that it did not require personal faith in Jesus Christ as a prerequisite and did not promise remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit, in his name.

2. No. Circumcision was Jewish, and has no counterpart in Christianity except "in the putting off of the body of the flesh in the circumcision of Christ." The latter is spiritual, the former was fleshly. The only thing that infant baptism takes the place of is believers' baptism, and this, so far as we are able to learn, without any authority from the Scriptures.

Q. Does the fact that one has been baptized by a preacher who does not believe in baptism, invalidate the ordinance, and what would you do with one who considered his baptism invalid on that account, and desired to be rebaptized?

J. H. A.

A. Baptism, happily, does not depend for its validity upon the character of him who administers it. We should try to teach one who was dissatisfied with his baptism on that ground, that his dissatisfaction was needless, and that if he himself submitted to the act in good faith, trusting in Christ, his baptism will stand.

Q. In Notes and Comments recently the editor says that "death is the gateway through which Christian souls pass from the mortal to the immortal." Now the sinner passes through the same gateway. Must he not, therefore, share with the Christian immortality, according to your view?

G. D. MATTHEWS.

Battle Creek, Mich.

A. There is another "gateway" through which men pass, that determines their future state. The gateway of regeneration, or the new birth, is what determines moral destiny. Death may be a gateway to immortality to the Christian while it is a very different thing to the unbeliever. Death is passing from the seen into the unseen world, and what our inheritance is there will depend upon the preparation we have made here.

Q. 1. What is the sin against the Holy Ghost?

2. "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace." What is the difference between the "perfect man" and the "upright man?"

3. What is the difference between the "sinner" and the "ungodly" in Psalm 1:1?

J. G. F. BROWN.

A. 1. The sin against the Holy Spirit, as we understand it, is the final rejection of the testimony which the Holy Spirit has furnished in behalf of Christ and hence the permanent rejection of Christ.

2 and 3. These are specimens of Hebrew parallelism, and while one may make out a difference in meaning between the words, it is not intended that we should seek for such difference. Hebrew parallelism, which is the characteristic of Hebrew poetry, is the saying of the same thing in different words or phrases. The following is a good illustration:

"He made known his ways unto Moses,
His doings unto the children of Israel,
Jehovah is merciful and gracious,
Slow to anger, and abundant in loving kindness,
He will not always chide,
Neither will he keep his anger forever."

The reader will notice that the second line in each of these couplets is but a repetition, in different words, of the thought contained in the first.

Notes and Comments.

Our genial contemporary and neighbor, the Central Baptist, claims to have found substantial proof that at least some of "the 'Disciple' or 'Christian' persuasion" hold to the Romish doctrine of baptismal regeneration. In proof it quotes the following from the Christian Companion: "We do not conceal, but openly preach the fact that immersion is necessary to salvation. Our preachers, so far as we know, and we have mixed and mingled with them from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the lakes to the gulf, do not conceal anything which they believe the Bible teaches." But all the same the Christian Companion does not mean what its words imply. If its editor were asked if immersion was necessary to the salvation of infants, he would answer in the negative. If he were asked whether any one, being a penitent believer, who had no opportunity of being immersed, would be lost, he would probably answer in the negative. If asked whether he believed that those who obey Christ from a loving, loyal heart to the best of their knowledge of his will, and yet failed to be immersed, are to be ultimately condemned, he would at least leave them with the "uncovenanted mercies of God." He does not, therefore, believe that "immersion is necessary to salvation" in all cases. He only believes, perhaps, that when one knowingly and wilfully rejects the command of Christ to be baptized, he rejects Christ, and cannot be saved.

But the Central Baptist will not controvert that position. The Romish doctrine of baptismal regeneration, as our neighbor knows, of course, is something very different from that. If editors were only a little more discriminating and careful in their statements they would not give occasion for so much misapprehension of each other's positions.

Referring to an inquiry concerning an expected reply of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to certain statements which have appeared in one of our contemporaries, we beg to say that we have learned, in the course of a rather long journalistic career, that a great many articles of criticism reply to themselves. We have learned to rely upon the native intelligence, common sense and fair-mindedness of the average reader who has no interest but to know the truth, to see the weak points in an article just as well as ourselves, and to make his own silent, mental reply. As for partisans, no amount of reasoning would do them any good. It is on this principle that we pass by a great many articles that might seem to our readers to call for some reply. But the very fact that they themselves see the weakness of the position taken, is evidence that it is unnecessary for us to point it out. When we depart from this rule and reply to certain criticisms, it is because we believe that we can make them the occasion of emphasizing certain principles that need emphasis.

Few visitors from the Old World have created so much comment as Rev. R. J. Campbell, successor to Dr. Joseph Parker in London. In an editorial in the Congregationalist and Christian World, on "The Secret of Mr. Campbell's Influence," the editor mentions first of all his "intellectual virility." Not only is his preaching marked by "clean-cut thinking," but he is hospitable to new truth. But more than all this, "he stands for the rights of the human mind, for a phrasing of the Christian message that makes it respected and admissible in scholarly circles the world over, for the faith forever yoked with reason." Again, Mr. Campbell is "in the best sense of the word a man of this world." That is, he keeps in touch with the age in which he lives, mingles with men of various callings and "looks upon the different processes and areas of human activity as an essential part of the divine movement in the life of men." But this "virility of intellect and breadth of human sympathy are undergirded with and suffused by his religion. This is the dominant and penetrating note of his character. . . . Intellectual power, adaptability to the modern world, spiritual depth and intensity—these three traits are combined in Reginald Campbell to a remarkable degree, and unify in such a way as to produce the single impression of a beautiful Christ-ruled character."

Pictorial Glimpses of the History of the Disciples

Alexander Campbell's Home.

The home of Alexander Campbell, otherwise known as Bethany mansion, is situated in a southerly direction, about one mile from Bethany village. The home, together with a fine farm, was a gift to Mr. Campbell in 1814 from his father-in-law, Mr. John Brown. It was a plain but "comfortable and capacious dwelling, two stories high, weatherboarded, painted white and with green venetian shutters." Among the many improvements under the new proprietorship was a large, one-storied addition extending in the direction of the study, and with respect to which Mr. Campbell once humorously remarked that if his family kept increasing the house would soon reach the road.

This generous gift of Mr. Brown made permanently practicable the long-cherished purpose of Mr. Campbell to preach the gospel without pay and without ragged coats withal. To this home Mr. Campbell oft returned after wearisome journeys, to enjoy the fellowship of kith and kin, and here by the "beautiful flowing Buffalo," as by the waters of restfulness he recruited himself for the conflicts of the hour. Here, in 1818, was organized the first while "Buffalo Seminary," short-lived, yet not inglorious in its ending, finding a timely resuscitation and more glorious history in "Old Bethany" of later years.

The homestead is owned and occupied by Mrs. D. C. Barclay, Mr. Campbell's youngest daughter, and her family. Hallowed with many precious memories is the sitting room of this historic home. Here the coming reformer first met his future wife, Miss Margaret Brown, of "sweet and benignant countenance," who by her winsome ways, strong intelligence, added to her sincere and unaffected piety, captivated the youthful visitor. And "Hymen's gentle powers" bore pleasing fruitage when in this same room, in the springtime of 1811, "God, the best maker of all marriages, combined their hearts in one."

Here, too, close following the marriage altar vows, and with unbroken continuity, has been witnessed at the family shrine prayers and praise from parent and child, incensed acceptably at morn and eve of each returning day. Here, before the open hearth, experiences were related and gospel themes discussed with surpassing eloquence and power. Alexander Campbell never shone brighter in power of intellect or in attribute of love than when surrounded by "dear relations" and invited guest, he discoursed before the cheery fireplace of his home in Bethany.

How fitting that this room should witness, also, the triumphant ascent of this faithful and distinguished man of God. And it was so. "And at fifteen minutes before twelve, just as the Lord's day, in which he had always so greatly delighted, was about to close, on the fourth of March, 1866, he gently expired." "Leaving behind as his heritage to mankind a plea for the reunion of Christ's people upon the principles of his revealed gospel."

Sincere courtship, holy matrimony,

God blessed home-life, Christian hospitality, consecrated recuperation, triumphant dying, enriching heritage. What a cluster of holy associations and pleasing memories! How inspiring, increasingly attractive must be this "Mecca" of those who love the plea for simple apostolic teaching!

First Meeting House of the Disciples in America.

The first house of worship built by the Disciples of Christ in America was a cheap frame building, eighteen feet wide by thirty-six feet long. It was located "on the farm of William Gilchrist, in the valley of Brush Run, about two miles above its juncture with Buffalo Creek," and about two miles in a southeasterly direction from West Middletown, and a little to the east of what is now known as the Farrier schoolhouse.

"So poor were most of the members," says Mr. Grafton, "that they were unable to finish the interior of this modest frame building, and assembled in it for worship, even during the inclemency of winter, without stoves or the appointments of comfort."

Pebbles from the Beach By F. D. Power

Delaware is a little state, ninety-six miles long and from nine to thirty-seven miles wide, with just 2,120 square miles. It has but three counties, New Castle on the north, Kent in the middle and Sussex in the south, and these are subdivided into "hundreds," an old method which came from the division into a hundred warriors or a hundred families for military or administrative purposes. It is the northeast portion of the low peninsula between Chesapeake Bay, Delaware River and the Atlantic Ocean. Thirty colonists settled it from Holland and founded the town of Lewes in 1630, but they were destroyed by the Indians, and then the Swedes and Finns came in 1654, and later Lord Baltimore and William Penn. For twenty years it was a part of Penn's Woods, and after 1703, a separate territory. It sent a regiment of men into the Revolution known as the "Blue Hen's Chickens," from which we call it the Blue Hen state. It was the first state to ratify the Constitution, and though a slave state it refused to secede in 1861. Choptauk, Nanticoke, Pokomoke and Appoquinnimink are names which still tell the story of the reign of the Delawares, or Leuni Lenape.

To reach the Beach one may go from any part of the United States to Rehoboth, which is just south of Cape Henlopen. Just opposite the cape is Cape May, across the mouth of the Delaware river. Rehoboth is good Scripture. It signifies "room." Isaac's servants dug a well which he called by this name: "For," he said, "now the Lord hath made room for us and we shall be fruitful in the land." Certain it is when you come to the ocean you have room—what the Psalmist calls "a wealthy place." The old lady who had led a constrained life and never had very much of anything, when she first came in sight of the sea lifted up her hands devoutly and exclaimed, "Thank the Lord! Here is something there's plenty of!"

Fifteen miles south of Rehoboth and as many north of Ocean City, Md., lies Bethany Beach, the only seaside resort of the Disciples of Christ. It is wonderfully beautiful with its long line of white sand drives, its pebbly strand thickly sown with sea shells, its infinite stretch of soft sand against which the ocean rolls in with its never-ceasing song; the great deep on one hand, and on the other a lovely panorama of fertile fields, green woods and growing crops, picturesque country homes and church spires, gardens and orchards, and flocks and herds. The fine auditorium, with Stars and Stripes flying over it, is the most prominent feature in the foreground, and a group of cottages which we call "Little Pittsburg," and then a number of small hotels facing the sea, other cottages and the board walk—the beginnings of a noble institution for physical and mental rest and culture, for the preaching of a pure, original gospel as it was preached of old by the fishermen of Galilee, for the best and purest and most wholesome social and fraternal intercourse, for the ultimate upbuilding of a great cause in this mighty, living, swarming, ruling east, to which we are so little known.

Here is our ocean Chautauqua. That great summer center of Methodism known as Ocean Grove, with its scores of thousands of visitors, with its model Christian city, with its great 90,000-dollar auditorium, with its immense national gatherings, with its thousands of converts, grew out of a two weeks' camp meeting on the sand and in the scrub of Jersey twenty-seven years ago. The great national Chautauqua at Chautauqua, N. Y., and its sister Chautauquas, numbering now more than two hundred, with all their influence, educational and religious, which affects hundreds of thousands every summer through the summer assembly, grew out of a small beginning in 1874, on Chautauqua Lake. Our resort by the sea reaches out for the same large results.

Four miles of as glorious beach line as can be found along the Atlantic. Such breezes! Such music! Such sunrises and sunsets! Such infinite variety and majestic unity! One never tires of the scenery. There is the ever-changing sea; and one may fancy the marine depths, the mountain ranges and plateaus, the heights like Mount Chaucer and Sainthill and Mount Placentia and the Maury Plateau, and the great abysses, like Nare's Deep and Sigsbee Deep and Murray, Peake and Monoco Deeps, some of them reaching down four and a half miles. Reclus and Agassiz and Sir John Murray and other oceanographers have told us of these wonders, and the cruises of the Challenger, the Albatross, the Beagle, the Gettysburg and the Faraday have made these mighty submarine depths and heights familiar to every school boy. Here we may sit and map out before us this vast, hidden, unfathomed world beneath the Atlantic. Some of the great mountains are ten thousand feet in height and their summits are within a hundred fathoms of the surface, and some, like Sable Island and the Cape Verde Islands and the Azores, just peep above the surface of the waters. And here are the currents and the mysterious gulf stream, and the vegetable and animal life of the sea, and the colors and changes of the waters, and the mighty tides, and the sails coming and going of those who go down to the sea in ships. It is a great study, matchless scenery, a never-ceasing delight.

For children it is a paradise. All day long they play in the clean, white sand, under the board walk and cottages, and along the shore, and grow browner and fatter and sweeter and cleaner and more winning in every way. We had the baby show on the board walk, a feature of every up-to-date seaside resort. There were a score of entries. The cutest, fattest, brownest and prettiest received prizes, and the owner of the prettiest doll. R. S. Lattimer, of Pittsburg, Frank H. Wain, of Detroit, and Mrs. Powers constituted the committee on awards. J. A. Hopkins and J. G. Thompson marshalled the kids. It was an exciting event. Every one supposed the committee, after making known its decision, would have to take to the woods. But they were wise in their generation, and in addition to the prizes had provided a gift for every child.

There is no place for the children like the seaside. They take to the water like ducks, and here there is nothing to molest them or make them afraid. If fond parents don't want the care of the youngsters they can easily have them checked at the day nursery. Two enterprising girls who wanted a summer outing started the day nursery at one of our seaside places. Both of them know something about kindergarten work and are fond of children, so they rented a large tent, pitched it on the sands at a popular resort along with the snake charmer, the fat woman, the toy railroad and the rest of the side shows. They had no flooring put in the tent, but made it attractive with festoons of seaweed, kelp and shells. On the sand they spread a heavy rug or two, heaps of pillows and hassock cushions covered with gay, wash cases, added two small bamboo screens, behind which are concealed more pillows on rugs, and in two great trunks they keep all the rest of the accessories necessary to their enterprise.

These are a quantity of small tin pails, toy hoes and spades, building blocks, cardboard, bright wools, blunt needles, highly colored tissue papers, a fine assortment of beads of all sizes and bouncing balls.

Then they hung out their sign, "Day Nursery." Patrons began flocking as to a lunch counter.

Parents going for a sail checked their whole family; mothers ready for the morning dip deposited the baby with many injunctions; fathers tired of answering "what for?" took their troublesome charges to the tent shelter; giddy young aunts going fishing with their "steadies" took little nieces and nephews to leave, and all received checks for the little ones left.

Now, when fond parents want to go off for the day they take Johnnie, Susie, the twins and the baby to be cared for and fed until the sun goes down.

The Present Status of Christian Union

AND THE CONTRIBUTION of THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST TO PRESENT RESULTS

By M. E. Harlan

To the Disciples of Christ whose historic dream has been the reunion of Christendom, the present status in the problem of Christian union is strikingly portentous and prophetic of better things. In the process of evolution, the problem has reached that stage where its advocates are strong and numerous and its enemies few and antiquated. The danger, if any, now is not death in the open battlefield of polemic thought; but death because of its old-time champions taking too much for granted. There is danger now of shiftless sentiment and indefinite generalities being substituted for the definite purpose and virile thought of our fathers. To be smothered in the flood of complacent generalities and hysterical compliment may be a much more pleasant death than stabbing on the battlefield, but the former is just as sure death as the latter. It is a hopeful sign that the problem of Christian union has been taken from the field of polemics except as to details. No leaders of thought will now deny its benefits. But there is a vast difference between standing off and admiring in a convictionless way, Christian union in the abstract and championing its cause in a Christly spirit, even though it mean the smashing of much of our theological chinaware. Just here is the danger. The abolition of slavery was secured by patriots who threw their very lives into the enterprise; men who showed their love by a willing sacrifice and not by men who theoretically loved the cause abstractly, and so abstractly that they abstracted themselves over into Canada and, at a safe distance from the firing line, just loved and let the problem take care of itself.

I desire to discuss the subject from three angles: (1) What is Christian union? (2) What is its present status? (3) What have we contributed to it?

1. I do not mean by Christian union the federation of diverse ecclesiasticisms. Such federation is much better than open hostility, and if it does not limit the preaching of a full gospel, it should be hailed with delight. But such a federation is far short of Christian union and must not be substituted for it. Interdenominational fellowship is much better than sectarian pugilism, but undenominational fellowship is superior to either. By Christian union we mean the discovery and practice of the essentials of the apostolic church. It is the inevitable result of working out the New Testament ideal and being simply and only Christian. We will be united as Christians into the "one body" when the centripetal force of love for Christ will be a stronger tie to bind us together than is the centrifugal force of love for opinion to drive us into a fragment for every opinion.

When Max Muller was talking with the head of the Indian Brahmo Somaj about the people of Calcutta becoming Christians, the puzzled leader said as he pointed to six denominational mission houses on the same street: "Into which of your religions am I to be baptized? I can not become simply a Christian."

We have "come into the kingdom for just such a time as this," not only to tell the people of India, but the whole world, that it is possible for people to become simply Christians. Christian union is a condition of the heart and not an abstract thing. No ecclesiasticism, be it ever so powerful, can bring about the result till the conditions are met. I fear there is some danger of working for the thing without meeting the conditions. Church federation is but the closing of the door of the closet to hide the sectarian skeleton for a time, while we work for some needed reform, but some eyes are keen enough to see through the denominational key hole and are horrified to find the skeleton still there. Christian union would forever remove the scarred skeleton. To cover up an ulcer does not relieve the patient nor stop the festering disease. To close the door of the hospital or the poorhouse so that the inmates may not be seen by the gaping crowd, does not cure the patients or remove the poverty. Division and denominationalism are blood diseases, and the spirit of Christ is the only germicide that will reach the case. Poulticing will not do the work. It is a question of bacteriology. There must not be any lowering of the standard till this end is reached, and it is still true that, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." But may not the spirit of federation be a kind of divine discontent with present conditions and a struggling for better things? If so, then those who have seen the larger light and have caught the bold outlines of the boundary lines of Christian union should hail it with delight. And who knows but that annexation for some given work may be the first step in the divine order leading to the coalescence of all individual Christians into the "one body."

2. What is the present status of Christian union? Judging the popularity of a question by the number or the prominence of its advocates, we are safe in concluding that the question of Christian union is very popular to-day. That all its advocates do not mean the same thing when they talk about it, is of but secondary importance. When we all begin to desire the spirit of union the details will adjust themselves. The leaders of sermonic thought represent to us the pickets and scouts on the thin firing line of God's army that will not rest content till the great army closes up its ranks and marches in solid phalanx. These leaders and specialists are engaged in a kind of a divine horoscopy, and they tell us that the whole theological heavens are lurid with signs of coming day. But not yet. We do not seem to be ready. I give this last, not as my desire, but as an actual condition. It is a condition, too, which should make our cheeks burn with shame, for our lips can not form into words an adequate excuse for our denial of the Savior's right to his dying prayer, "That they all may be one." The religious atmosphere echoes with the voices of the good and great that are melodious with their unison of praise. He is deaf who can not hear these voices. He is dead or hopeless who would not hear them. The very tendency of the

What a Mother Found Out About Food.

A mother found out what a change of food can do for a whole family, from the nursing baby to the adults, in this way: "Twice during the summer months my baby was taken violently ill and was very slow getting over the attacks. His former diet of cow's milk alone ceased to agree with him, so I combined it with an expensive infant's food, but he soon became very much constipated.

"Then I shifted to Grape-Nuts food and found that this was just what baby needed, adding it to his milk after softening in hot water. Baby has thrived upon this food and is now healthy and strong and chubby as any mother could ask, which you know is saying a great deal.

"It did not take me long to find out that a saucer of Grape-Nuts and cream is just what is needed by the tired, nervous mother, and I have also proved to my own satisfaction that when the children are old enough to chew Grape-Nuts, it is far better for them than oatmeal or any other mushy foods, for it develops their teeth and helps their digestion, and their minds seem much brighter and more active too.

"Truly here is a wonderful food and one for the entire family." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

The Conqueror of Alpine

By Olive A. Smith

It was in the summer of '97 that I made my first trip to the Colorado mountains. The usual vacation at fashionable resorts had never appealed to me very strongly, and according to previous arrangement, I left my party near Colorado Springs and Manitou, and pushed on alone to the deserted village of Alpine. Fifteen years ago this hamlet was a flourishing town of several thousand inhabitants. Besides the saloons and other like features of a great mining center, it was the proud possessor of an immense silver smelter and two banks.

The first person I met after leaving the station was an old-timer known as "Uncle Pete," and the first information he imparted to me was that he had been there "since Uncle Sam committed the crime o' '73." I asked where I could secure board and lodging, and after surveying me with some degree of approval, he replied: "You don't look as white-fingered an' white-livered as some o' these tenderfoots; I guess ye can jest bunk with me, fer's I'm concerned."

I was grateful enough for the offer, and we carried my luggage to his cabin. Then he showed me over the town site, strewn with broken bottles and overgrown with quaking aspen, and told me many incidents of the early life of the town. I was too tired for genuine mountain climbing, but I begged him to go with me to the nearest hill, which would give at least a fair view of the adjacent valley. When we reached the summit I felt fully repaid, yet not very enthusiastic over the landscape. There were rocky cliffs, patches of green sward, beautiful wild flowers in profusion, and an occasional stream winding in and out among the rocks, and skirting the plots of green turf. I was not disappointed, but I began to realize that I was tired and was about to propose our return to the cabin when a glance northward caused me to grasp the old man's arm and utter an exclamation of delight. The two cliffs which I saw were much like the others; the tiny vale between them was not unusual, but the plot of artistic beauty in its center—that was unusual, even in this land of nature's own beauty.

The sun was sending its last rays through the opening between the hills, and the golden glory rested like a benediction upon the low, white fence, the small evergreens arranged in the prettiest of curves, and the clusters of flowers—such flowers, I imagined that their perfume reached me—arranged about the center. And the center was the crowning beauty of all; a slender cross of vines in full bloom, and a laurel wreath.

"It's where we put the Conqueror."

"Do tell me what it is," I said, turning toward my companion. He, too, was looking at the spot of beauty, and his rugged features wore a soft, dreamy expression which would have seemed impossible half an hour before. "It's where we put the conqueror," he replied softly. "But come back now, young man." He started down the path. "I'm plum used up with your tearin' round. I'll tell ye 'bout the conqueror after supper."

When twilight had settled upon Alpine and we had drawn our chairs outside the door, I reminded him of his promise.

"Wall," he began, "'twas in the early times when everybody rushed out here to git rich in the mines. Amongst the others was a young college feller from Chicago, named Jerry Somers. He was put into law, but he insisted on marryin' a girl his folks didn't take to, and they cut off every cent of his income—disinherited him, too. But Jerry was all pluck. He said he'd git a start out here an' then they could settle down in the east agin; an' the girl was as plucky as he was. She vowed she'd come, too.

"They was a fine young couple. The boys all respected Jerry, though he was mighty different from the rest of us. And as fer his wife, every feller of 'em took off his hat to her 'cept when they was too drunk to know what they was doin'. He worked right along with the rest of us, but they lived out of town; 'long on the gulch road where 'twasn't quite so rough. For times was hard an' we was a pretty tough lot.

"One day there was some wonderful news come to our mine. There was a baby, a real live baby, at Jerry's! Alpine hadn't knowed such a thing as a baby before, and you oughter seen the stir it made! The first feller that was allowed to see that baby was a big man in Alpine. And after it got big enough to be put on exhibition, as the show folks say, a circus tent wouldn't have been in it by the side of Jerry's house. Every man of 'em 'cept one, Jim Orson, acted as if he owned a share of stock in that youngster. Jim never went to see him; he was a queer feller, Jim was; good enough, straight as a string, but so kinder cold an' stiff. He didn't have much to do with any of us; used to brag that he wasn't sentimental. Well, the little rooster grew fat an' hearty, an' before we knew it, he was big enough to walk. Then he began to say words, an' sech fun as the boys had teachin' him to talk. It was the day he was two years old that his mother brought him down to where big Jerry was at work, and we was all coaxin' him when he happened to catch sight of Jim Orson, standin' off severe and stiff as usual. The baby stopped playing, opened his big blue eyes, an' looked straight into Jim's face a minute, then put one chubby finger in his mouth and looked around for his mother.

"'Why, that's Jim,' said Mrs. Somers. 'Jerry isn't afraid of Jim.'

One of Our Meeting Places.

The ancient gathering of the clans on Scotland's hills for action and for counsel, was the center from which radiated to the borders the marching orders of the race. Possibly less picturesque, but vastly wider in its scope, deeper in its spirit and more thrilling in its divinely inspired purposes will be the gathering of the Christian missionary "clan" in the great convention of 1903.

"Detroit the Beautiful" keeps open house the year round, and her hospitality has won for her the name "Convention City." Two hundred conventions are expected here during the present year. Twenty-eight thousand Epworth Leaguers have recently filled the city with enthusiastic Methodism, while simultaneous conventions numbering thousands of delegates, sent their varied influence from center to circumference of the city. Detroit expects the International Convention of the Christian Churches to be one of large numbers and mighty power. It expects "a representative from every church."

Though possessing so many seductive powers to lure the beauty-loving soul from prosaic things, Detroit still seems admirably adapted for an assembly of the saints; for whose heart is so receptive to the eternal truths of God as he who refreshes his mind and spirit in communion with the Creator in the midst of his handiwork?

Detroit, with its twelve miles of water front, with its beautiful Belle Isle on the east, washed by the waters of Lake St. Clair; and its picturesque Bois Blanc on the west, whose pebbly beach is kissed by the swells from Lake Erie; its broad, clean streets and boulevards, its blooming inland parks, its clear atmosphere and its blue Italian sky, its mild days and cool nights—these are the physical influences that prepare the convention attendant to worship worthily, to resolve highly, to plan wisely, and to go out to execute energetically, from the great convention of 1903. To this we most earnestly invite a "representative from every church."

Detroit is justly proud of its magnificent system of boulevards and parks, which shower the city with spots of beauty, from east to west, from north to south. A total of thirty parks are embraced within the corporate limits of the city, and a approximate a total of one thousand acres of ground. The boulevard stretch around the city from the north-tire length most pleasing to behold.

Belle Isle, that far-famed bower of beauty is, of course, the greatest of Detroit parks. In fact, it is the grandest park owned by any municipality in the United States, even Central Park being distanced, owing to the superb natural advantages possessed by Belle Isle.

This famous park is an island comprising 700 acres. Since its purchase a little more than twenty years ago, over a million dollars have been expended upon improvements which have transformed it from a tangled wilderness to a model park. The lower end presents a wide expanse of beautiful green, large enough for a parade ground for a regiment of men, while on the shore at its west side are handsome boat, yacht and bathing houses, and a spacious ferry landing. The marshy places have been excavated so as to make three large lakes, and these are connected by canals, making pleasant and perfectly safe places for boating and canoeing. The canals are spanned by steel and rustic bridges of varied designs.

A Day's Work By Byron Chalmers Piatt

Mr. Emerson somewhere says that Hawthorne had a regal way of passing the bread, as he dined with his family and guests. He says again that a man of fine manners shall pronounce your name with all the ornament that titles of nobility could ever add. There is a teaching in these words that takes hold of the very heart of life and interprets the deepest significance of our homeliest experience.

The world in general seems to hold, that princely manners, gracious conversation and chivalrous conduct belong entirely to kings, knights and diplomats, or to those who move in high literary or social distinction. So long has this false idea overshadowed the great middle class, and so completely has the metallic atmosphere of the time stifled and atrophied the finer faculties of humanity, that the every day life of the average man has become almost destitute of an aesthetic impulse. Rather than one bar in a grand symphony, an ordinary day has become a cog in a wheel; instead of a sapphire, rich with warmth and delicacy, life has become sodden to a clod, more or less animated. This, to be sure, is said not of the rare exceptions, but of the rule. And this has come about not so much because it is natural for human life to reflect the conditions in which it is placed, as because social custom has withdrawn us so far from our birthright that we have forgotten we are gods. We need to be reminded that the existing order is not the natural one. Beneficent nature would ever have us know that she is not content with one beautiful life at the top and a thousand abortive ones at the bottom. Not so much a few elect mountain peaks as one sun crowned table-land is the final effort of her mighty energies.

However sore the need of redressing social and industrial wrongs to shield the people from the scars and ugliness which oppression brings upon them, nothing can enhance life but the right estimate of its meanest task. Not until we know that the infinite ideal labors to express itself in clay and iron and sackcloth, are we worthy of our high station.

If it is true that the ideal life is to walk with one hand upon the plow and the other upon the harp, we are found guilty of forsaking the orbit of all true inspiration. We are engaged in the grotesque but melancholy task of trapping out ourselves in the gewgaws of a life impossible to one in search of the "Blue Flower." A hundred divine instincts tell us that the casket of diamonds is under our doorstep, yet we will not have it so. The foot of the rainbow with its pot of gold is only a little way beyond the garden's end, we think, and on we rush into bitter poverty, while lo! already the yellow dust rains in gentle glory upon our slouch hat and homespun! Day after day the gods of truth and grace and beauty descend to our hearthstones and always we cry, "Not for us! Not for us!"

Strange that we should forsake a primal life where every hour is eloquent with song, where we go out to work in purple and fine linen and banquet upon a crust of bread, where we get drunk on a gourd of water, and leap and laugh and shout for the very ecstasy of being. Pitious that we should trample sweet home flowers under our feet to clutch at sooty briers, all because the briers belong to a neighbor. When will we learn that life is not in migration, but in cultivation? God's Acre is beneath our own feet. For us its soil is pregnant with immortal possibilities. Why should we gape at the salams of driveling courtiers, when we may become blood royal in the mere passing of bread? Why should we skulk after the hard conventionalities of an unnatural life, when all nobility may be put into a simple name?

The high born have always placed their own estimate upon royalty by throwing about it a halo of splendid form and gorgeous coloring. The life of the common man has in it as fine texture. He, too, may take up his scepter and reign over the clods. The somber landscape that girts in the most hidden life may be made to glow and radiate and transfigure itself in the rosy dawn of a beauteous enchantment! The clam and the waterlily draw their beauty and delicate tints from the slime, and so may a human heart. The farmer boy, plodding all day in the lonely furrow, should cross and recross his field as a poet walks to and fro in his favorite haunt. He may make the tumbling of the clods from his plow-share rhythmic accents to the primitive poetry of his soul. A girl should speak her mother's name with such tender grace that angels would stoop to listen. A humble man of toil may sit with his family in such gentle, refined dignity that Arthur's court might not surpass him. A mother may preside over the petty disputes of her little children with such gracious, healing wisdom that an empress might look upon her estate with envy. An obscure young man should live so kingly before the modest girl who claims his heart and defend with such fine heroism the chastity of womanhood that the world would cease to prate about the knights of old and how they drew the sword of honor. Any young woman without wealth or position may sew a garment with such suave, sincere loveliness that all culture would do her homage. The poetry and chivalry and beauty that may be put into a day's work, the commonest conversation, the most informal social intercourse, surpass in simple grandeur an audience with kings. A handful of roses, a rare book, a kindly deed by the way, a song, a tear, work well done, a perfect love, dreamless sleep, a simple faith—the sun of life is in these and they are within the reach of the lowest born creature.

Some distant day the royalty of character, the chivalry of purity, the aristocracy of culture and the gentility of untarnished love shall be the universal social code. Then monarchs shall live in lowly huts and sun-browned laborers dwell in palaces—all in the sweet communism of mutual worth.

You need God in the very things that seem to separate you from him. You must seek him in the very places where the misery of life seems to be that he is not. You must question the stoniest paths for streams of water.—Phillips Brooks.

A NEW ROUTE

The Road to Wellville.

It is by change of diet that one can get fairly on the road to health after years of sickness, for most ill health comes from improper feeding.

What a boon it is to shake off coffee sickness and nervous headaches as some can if determined upon.

One woman accomplished it in this way: "A few years ago I suffered terribly from sick and nervous headaches, being frequently confined to my bed two or three days at a time, the attacks coming on from one to four times in every month. I tried medicines of all kinds, but could get no real relief until my parents finally persuaded me to quit the use of coffee altogether and try Postum Food Coffee. It had come to a point where I was so utterly miserable that I was willing to make any reasonable trial.

"A person couldn't believe what followed, but the results speak for themselves; that was two and a half years ago, and I have never tasted coffee since. I use Postum not only for its delicious flavor, but more for the good it has done me. All of my troubles disappeared as if by magic, and I have for the past two years been doing all the work for my family of six. I seldom have even a slight headache, and I would not give up my Postum and go back to coffee now unless I deliberately intended to commit suicide.

"All of my neighbors, it seems to me, now use Postum in place of coffee, and some of them have been doing so for several years with splendid results from the health point of view." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

News From Many Fields

New York.

The writer, with his wife, has been spending two weeks of work and vacation combined in New York City. Never before has the rare opportunity of our people in the great centers of population been so impressed upon my mind. It has been the tendency of our brotherhood in the past to start work in small places where the whole community could be stirred by the simple message of the gospel. It is high time that our energies were being directed in a more systematic way, toward the large cities. There is where the people are, and there we ought to be. It is a sad fact, as well as an astonishing one, that in a mighty center like Greater New York with 3,000,000 souls, we have but six churches. Why is it that with a very few exceptions, there are no large cities in the Union where the Disciples of Christ are real strong? Is it because we have been following the lines of least resistance? If so, let us awake to the fact that in the field of religious truth, such should not be the guiding impulse. Should not the realization of the greatest need be the guiding thought in missionary work rather than the greatest ease? If so, the main watchword of our home work must be: "The great centers of population for Christ!"

There are two things which will make possible the planting of new churches in the great cities. First, the increase of missionary giving, and, second, but fully as important, what might be called ecclesiastical unselfishness. If our churches in all the great cities would only "swarm" a little oftener, the outlook would be far more encouraging. They must learn to give up a part of their membership to start new churches, then the work will begin to grow. In the great centers the population is coming to be increasingly centrifugal in its tendency. The people are living, not down town, but in the suburbs. Let the churches become centrifugal also. Let them release an increasing number of segments of their membership to form new churches in these outlying and rapidly growing districts, and the problem will be solved. Besides being located where the people live, these churches will have the advantage of being early on the field and developing with the growth of population. Sacrifice? Certainly. But the church which will not sacrifice for the larger good of the Master's kingdom, has not caught the real missionary spirit, and can hardly be compared with the grand but new brotherhood at Antioch, which sent forth the two strongest members, that new churches might be scattered throughout the Gentile world.

Bro. S. T. Willis' people are building a fine new church on 169th Street. The structure is of pressed brick and stone, and will be as fine a structure as we have in the city. The 169th Street church has a good mission work about half a mile from the church. The members are meeting in the mission hall while their building is going up.

The Second Church, Brooklyn, believes in innovations. Brother Keevil, the pastor, works on the principle that "if the mountain will not come to Mahomet, then Mahomet will go to the mountain." He has an improvised pulpit in front of the church and at 7 P. M. starts a service. The people sing lustily for about fifteen minutes while the crowd gathers, and then Brother Keevil preaches a street sermon to them. At the close the listeners are invited to join the people on the inside for the regular Sunday evening service. The result is a full house and continued interest. It works admirably in that community and probably would with many a church which is suffering from summer complaint.

We sincerely hope that the home board will reach the coveted $100,000 before the fall convention. It is too bad that in our great and rich brotherhood they are obliged to set the stakes as low as $100,000. The home board organized 101 new churches last year and had over 6,000 converts. There is no better or more fruitful work among the Disciples. We, of New York, appreciate very deeply the work of the home board in this state, and trust that every church in the state will come to the rescue before Sept. 30.

Let every New York Disciple remember the state convention at Wellsville, Sept. 22-25. Each church should send their pastor or some other delegate and pay the expense. It is a good spiritual investment.

STEPHEN J. CORY, Cor. Sec.

Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia.

I am spending a week visiting my mother and other relatives at Bellaire, Ohio.

The work of the church here is prospering under the pastorate of Sumner T. Martin, one of my collegemates at Bethany. They have a graded Sunday-school.

I dropped in on Bro. A. E. Zeigler, of the First Church, Wheeling. The old church is undergoing some changes that will be an improvement to it.

Work on the Second Church is reported prospering under Bro. Scholes' ministry.

In Martins Ferry Bro. Moffitt has cleared the church of debt.

Bro. V. Hayes Miller, one of our Maryland boys, is hustling at McMechen, but has resigned the work here.

The last Sunday of the assembly at Bethany Beach, Delaware, saw the largest audience of the season, and a good feeling manifested.

W. S. Hoyer baptized one at Ringgold, Md., Aug. 17, who made the confession at the close of a sermon by Herbert Yeuell.

A church formerly occupied by the Menonites was rented in Waynesboro, Pa., and a meeting begun on the evening of the 17th. A number of disciples live in and around Waynesboro. These are being gathered together and a meeting was held on August 23 to effect a temporary organization and a Bible school.

The new church at Beaver Creek, Md., is to be formally opened September 6. Herbert Yeuell, of Uniontown, Pa., is to preach the dedicatory sermon and follow it with a two weeks' meeting. They have a good substantial church building.

On Aug. 22, the Sunday-schools of Boonsboro held a union picnic. Lutheran, United Brethren, Reformed and Disciples. Some of the preachers remarked that you couldn't tell one from the other. So it ought to be, "That they all may be one."

Remember Oct. 6-9 is our next convention, at Vermont Avenue Church, Washington. Get ready. Especially let every church pay up their full apportionment before September 30. Bro. J. Irvin Bitner, our faithful treasurer, requests this in order that he may make a complete report for the year, to the convention. He can not do this if you wait till the convention to bring up your last payment. We need the money now. We pray for our best convention and hope to report new and interesting work for the coming year. It is little more than a month off. Get ready.

J. A. HOPKINS.

Nodaway, Mo., District Convention.

The thirteenth annual convention of the churches of Christ of the Nodaway Valley district met at Stanberry, Aug. 18-20.

There were two men from without the district. Frank Garrett, of LUhoh, China, gave an able address on our mission work in China, and W. J. Lhamon, of Columbia, gave four strong addresses on missions and preached one able sermon.

The committee on enrollment showed the following: Ministers present, 23; delegates, 114; attendance during daytime, 243; grand total attendance day and night, 1,100.

Result of nine months' work: Churches visited, 24; additions, 70; churches organized, 1; located pastors for 9 churches; money raised in the field for district work, $601.30.

Of the 60 churches in the district, 25 have one-half time preaching, 10 have all time preaching, and 15 have no preaching. There are 25 preachers in the district.

Total receipts, $524.36; total expenditures, $486.15.

The committee on plan of work submitted the following: We recommend that, first, the counties be apportioned as follows: Worth, $50; Atchison, $100; Holt, $125; Gentry, $125; Andrew, $150; Nodaway, $250. Second, that contiguous congregations be grouped into pastorates as soon as possible. Third, that the district board be a bureau of information on ministerial supply. Fourth, that every church in the district having as much as one-half time preaching, permit its preacher to hold one meeting somewhere in the district under the supervision of the district board. All money coming from such meetings to be used for district board. Fifth, that we create a fund for life and annual memberships to assist new and weak churches in maintaining preaching. Annual membership to be $2.50; life membership to be $5 a year for five years.

The following were elected to the respective offices: President, Geo. L. Peters, Mound City; vice-president, W. A. Fite, Maryville; secretary, A. R. Hunt, Savannah; treasurer, I. R. Williams, Savannah; corresponding secretary, D. W. Conner, Savannah.

A. R. HUNT, sec.

St. Louis.

Brother Miller, a member of the First Church, preached at Old Orchard last Lord's day.

At the Fourth Church, E. T. McFarland, pastor, Sunday, Aug. 30, there were two confessions and one addition by statement.

The services of a good singer are desired for the Elledale meeting, which begins Sept. 1. Address G. A. Hoffman, 1522 Locust St.

Mt. Cabanne, F. G. Tyrrell pastor, reports five additions by letter and one from the Presbyterians last Lord's day.

There were two additions by letter to the Hammett Place Church last Sunday. Sam'l B. Moore is pastor.

Howard T. Cree, pastor of Central Church, is expected home this week from his summer vacation and will occupy his pulpit next Sunday.

Mt. Cabanne and Central Church will both resume the regular morning and evening services on Sunday, Sept. 6.

The Fourth Sunday in September will be observed as rally day and also as the day for the third quarterly missionary collection at the Hammett Place Church. The two branch schools will meet at their respective halls and go in a body to the church, where a joint service, beginning at 10 A. M., will be held. A missionary program is being arranged.

Dedication at Adrian, Mich.*

The formal dedication of the Church of Christ, Adrian, Michigan, occurred Sunday, August 9. The writer preaches here in the employ of the Sunday School Clarke Estate Fund, of Cincinnati, Ohio. The building was the original Methodist Episcopal Church and afterward was used as a courthouse and an opera house. The brethren at Adrian were able to secure this building by loans from the Board of Church Extension and the Michigan Christian Missionary Society. The property cost $2,500 and is regarded as a great bargain. Nearly $600 have been expended in improvements and we have now a handsome church building. It is built of brick, lighted by gas and electricity, with plenty of accommodation for church work, and is located near the center of the city.

C. J. Tannar, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Detroit, preached the sermons both morning and evening, and D. Munro, state secretary, assisted in the services. Dr. Post, of Detroit, presided at the Lord's table and on behalf of the Detroit Central Christian Church presented the Adrian congregation with a handsome communion service.

Bro. Tannar's sermons were much appreciated. At the morning service he spoke on "The Church," and the mission and plea of the disciples of Christ in particular. His sermon at the evening service was on "The Plea of the Church to the World." Seven made the good confession and altogether nine have been baptized this month. An afternoon service was held at which brief addresses were given by local and visiting ministers. Pledges and offerings were taken during the day amounting to $520. For the past five years the congregation has been meeting in different places, steadily gaining in favor with the people. The first year a few faithful disciples met in private houses, then G. J. Massey came, and during his ministry the church was incorporated. I took up the work in the month of August last year. Since then 12 have been received by letter, 3 by statement and 14 baptized. Adrain is the principal point in this part of Michigan and will be in the future the centre of a large number of flourishing churches.

The Michigan State Convention will be held here next June, which we anticipate will do great good for our cause in this city.

The Tornado in Jamaica.

The meager accounts which reached us through the daily press of the tornado which visited the island of Jamaica, caused us to fear great suffering for our people there and loss of church property. The letters which have, so far, reached Helen E. Moses, secretary C. W. B. M., confirm our worst fears, and as yet the outlying districts have not been heard from.

The storm commenced before midnight, the 10th of August, with rain and heavy wind. It increased in violence until about 2 o'clock A. M., and continued at its height for about three hours. Though hundreds of buildings were wrecked, they were not of heavy enough material to cause loss of life in falling. Had the storm occurred in the day time, no doubt more lives would have been lost.

C. E. Randall reports but slight damage to the buildings in Kingston. Part of the roof was torn off the chapel at Manning's Hill, and the house in which C. E. Randall was living at King's Gate was completely flooded, and the beautiful shade and fruit trees in the yard torn down and washed out in heaps by wind and water. A. C. McHardy reports but slight damage to the buildings at Kalorama, but from a messenger receives word that the Bloxburg chapel and house are destroyed, the chapel being carried away and strewed over a neighboring field. The Bible was found in a field under some boards, not even wet, and the communion service was safe. In the mind of the messenger, the Lord took care of these.

W. A. Meredith, one of our missionaries, says: "Our chapel at Providence lies scattered on the hillside and so does the one at Chesterfield, together with the teacher's cottage. I cannot get to Flint River on account of the swollen river, but both it and the Mamby Vale chapels stand, although damaged more or less. Oberlin chapel is uninjured, though the rest of the premises are damaged. Our house at Providence is spared and we are safe. Yesterday I buried at Mamby Vale a sister, and to-day a brother—both killed by the storm. Most of the houses and many of the places of worship around us are down. To-day the poor people are putting up little booths of bamboo and cocoa-nut leaves. The suffering will come after the fallen bread-fruits and cocoa-nuts and bananas are all eaten or destroyed. May the God of pity fill the hearts of the people at home with the spirit of generosity. The people here will look largely to us, and we will look to you for help in this time of terrible need."

From the island papers sent to me, I have gotten detailed accounts of the awful havoc wrought by the storm, yet it is almost impossible for us to realize what this means to that people. Around every little home stood clusters of bananas in every stage of development. The natives quite largely depended upon these for food, and they are almost entirely destroyed, and it takes eighteen months to grow a banana plant from the transplanting of the shoot to the ripening of the fruit. Again, the yam which is not like our yam or potato, but like a huge radish, is not soon grown. All the yam vines are prostrate and covered with earth. What will these poor people do when the fruit which is now scattered on the ground and the yams now on the hill, are consumed? There must, in the very nature of the case, be protracted suffering, if not famine.

Some of our brethren are trying to reconstruct their simple bamboo dwellings and hardly yet can understand the extent of their calamity. And some of our stations are not yet heard from. The latest word received was under date of August 17. The streams are impassable, the mountain roads are blocked with fallen trees, and it will be days before we shall know the extent of our loss.

This is a call from God to us for aid. Will not every one who reads this send a gift of money to Helen E. Moses, Sec., 152 East Market St., Indianapolis, Indiana, to aid the homeless and suffering ones in the island of Jamaica? Do not put it off, but send now. Already they are calling for aid. Can we refuse it? Chapels are to be rebuilt and repaired and soon the hungry to be fed. The C. W. B. M. treasury is now taxed to its utmost. Yet this call must be heeded. Send a gift and send it now.

C. C. SMITH.

Iowa Bible-school Work.

All eyes are turned toward the September rally. The special effort this year will be to reach "our folks and their families." The plan is to use the whole of the month in the campaign. A list of our church members, with every member of the family, is to be made; then all those now in the school are to be checked off, and those remaining constitute the list to be brought in. In many cases this list will be surprisingly large. On the first Sunday the "record of this church" will be filled up and posted in the church house. Those to be brought in will be classified and the number to be brought into each department will be posted. Each department will work to bring in those on its list.

On the second or third Sunday the pastor will preach a sermon on Bible-school work. On the second Sunday "class slips" will be distributed to each teacher, and subscriptions for Iowa Bible-school work will be taken, the subscription to be paid on Rally Day. An effort will be made to secure at least ten cents a member enrolled. A Roll of Honor certificate will be given each school which reaches its apportionment. On Rally Day, Sunday, Sept. 27, the closing exercises will be special. Reports from each class, giving enrollment Sept. 1, new pupils added since, enrollment on Rally Day and amount of offering for Iowa missions will be given. Also a message from the class to the school will be delivered, either in song or speech or Scripture selection. We are anticipating a great ingathering for our schools and the largest offering from our Bible-schools for Iowa missions in the history of the state.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

The Nodaway district convention was held at the beautiful new church at Stanberry on Aug. 18, 19, and 20. The attendance was very gratifying; the interest in the condition of the Lord's work, in the district, keen, and plans for an aggressive future were laid with thoughtful care.

The C. W. B. M. period opened on Wednesday P. M., with district manager, Mrs. J. W. Ray, presiding. A tender little greeting by Mrs. M. A. Chilton, Stanberry's auxiliary president, was responded to by Geo. L. Peters, of Mound City, in absence of his wife.

Such reports as were rendered, were good, especially so in case of Maryville and Stanberry, but quite too many were conspicuous by their absence. A discussion on junior work, led by Mrs. W. D. Alkire, of Maryville, was participated in by Mrs. F. E. McFarland and others. Mrs. Mattie Richardson, of Stanberry, read an excellent paper on "Our Responsibilities," and little Maggie Chilton won applause by her recitation on "Company for Dinner."

The evening session was opened by song service and devotions, the latter led by Mrs. W. G. Saylor, of Burlington Junction.

Prof. I. E. Schneider, of Maryville, pleased the audience so well that it demanded an encore to his solo. Mrs. L. G. Bantz, state secretary C. W. B. M., gave the address. Miss Edith Boyer, of Maryville, gave a reading. The "flower" of the whole program was a drill by the Stanberry juniors; by 55 of the 76 members, led by the pastor, J. E. Davis. The leader, Mrs. A. C. Frisbie, who has so faithfully and carefully trained these children for "Christ and the Church," through two years, has been obliged because of ill health to partially turn the work into other hands, recently. She has found an able and willing helper in this young, consecrated pastor.

Dedication at Freeman, Mo.

Aug. 23, at Freeman, Brother Abbott, state secretary, dedicated a neat little church house. It cost $1,300 and seats 250 people; $600 was provided for on the day of dedication. This work shows what can be done when there is a will. Only twenty-eight members to do this work and none of them wealthy. The women were the prime movers, and led by Sister Nora Strong, they know no such word as fail. Some preachers would have advised them to identify themselves with the denominations until a Church of Christ would materialize, but they chose to organize with few and then grow. This is the winning way.

T. W. COTTINGHAM.

Dedication at Bosworth, Mo.

The new congregation of Disciples at Bosworth, Mo., has just completed and opened for worship a new and modern house of worship, which it was our pleasure to dedicate to the worship of Almighty God on Lord's day, Aug. 23. The day was one of the warmest of the season, and as the house was densely packed with people, we had a very warm service. The little band of Disciples gave even beyond their ability; but their joy was correspondingly great. The house is a modern one that will seat 500 people. They have done a good work in building this beautiful house.

DAVID BECOMES KING.—

2 Sam. 2:1-11.

Read chapters 1-3.

Memory verses, 2:1-3.

Golden Text.—"Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Psalm 133:1.

David's Lament:

The news of Saul's defeat and death was brought to David just after his return to Ziklag after the counterraid against the Amalekites. The messenger was a young man who claimed that he himself had slain Saul after his defeat. The claim was probably false, for it does not agree with the statement (1 Sam. 31:5) that Saul fell by his own hand. Probably the young man expected to win the favor of David by representing himself as the slayer of Saul. If so, he was disappointed. David did not exult in the death of his enemy, but gave utterance to a lament which is justly reckoned among the most beautiful and touching passages of Hebrew literature. It is not necessarily to be understood that David, in his first grief over the death of his friend Jonathan and horror at the fall of the Lord's anointed, gave utterance to his emotions extemporaneously in this beautiful and well ordered poem which is known as the Song of the Bow (2 Sam. 1:19-27). But this is the elegy which David the poet composed in commemoration of the sad event, and which he had the children of Israel learn. The author or compiler of 2 Samuel refers to the book of Jashar as his authority for the text of the poem. The poem should be read carefully in the Revised Version, which shows the proper division into lines.

David's Reign at Hebron:

Immediately after the death of Saul, David, moved by the advice of Jehovah, returned to his own country and established himself at Hebron. There he became king over Judah. There was not, perhaps, any very formal ceremony of election, for the old machinery of government had doubtless been destroyed with the fall of Saul's dynasty and the Philistine conquest. But it was well understood that David was to be Saul's successor. So he was chosen, as it were, by acclamation, and was anointed king over Judah, his own tribe. The stronger tribes were less familiar with David. His exploits had not been done in their midst and it was, perhaps, natural that they should uphold the dynasty of Saul. So, while David became king in the south, with headquarters at Hebron, Saul's son, Ishbosheth, became king over all the northern tribes, with his capital at Mahanaim. Between these two rival kingdoms there was bitter war. A hint of the conditions is given in the incident narrated in 2 Sam. 2:12-32.

David's Growing Power:

Forgetful of the dangers from without and of the especial peril from their common Philistine enemies, Israel and Judah carried on their bitter and destructive civil war, reviving the old cleavage between north and south, and preparing the way for the permanent division of the kingdom after Solomon's reign. The splendor and success of two great kings, David and Solomon, whose reigns were among the most notable in all history, held together the two parts of the kingdom for a time longer, but the seeds of division were already sown. But through the long civil war which now raged, "David waxed stronger and stronger, but the house of Saul waxed weaker and weaker." For two years Ishbosheth, by the aid of Abner, maintained his kingdom in the north. Then there was a falling out between Abner and Ishbosheth, and Abner went over to David. From this loss the feeble kingdom of the north never recovered, and when Ishbosheth ended his two years' troubled reign, all the tribes of Israel were ready to recognize in David their rightful king.

Ideals for Young People

By M. E. HARLAN, A. B., LL. D.

This book is the result of the author's sending out a series of questions to more than 2,000 young people in all parts of the United States and other parts of the world. The questions touch the social, sentimental, moral, commercial, religious and domestic interests of young people and the book is a reflection not only of what the author thinks, but of what the young people themselves think on the questions at issue. From the many answers, the author selects a few of the most pointed, together with the names of some of those interviewed, when permission was given to use names. These, together with the deductions of the author, make a helpful and inspiring book. It is particularly suitable as a present for young people. It is just such a book as a mother would like to have read by her son or daughter. Prof. Hill M. Bell, Dean of the College of Liberal Arts of Drake University, writes the introduction. The four subjects treated are: "The Ideal Young Woman from the Young Man's View Point;" "The Ideal Young Man from the Young Woman's View Point;" "The Ideal Home;" and "The Ideal Church."

FEASTING AND LEANNESS. Exod. 16:2-5.
Psalms 106:13-15.

(Temperance Service.)

There are certain paradoxes of the spiritual life which are of the greatest importance. For example: He that loathes his life shall save it. Or, There is that scattereth abroad and increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is just and tendeth to poverty. Or, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone. The paradox of feasting and leanness is similar to these. Abundance of some things means poverty, and feasting may result in hunger and leanness. But what sort of feasting and what sort of leanness?

God expects no man to abuse his body. He is not pleased by voluntary suffering or by abstinence from innocent and enjoyable things. Since food is a necessity to the body, he does not require fasting, nor is any spiritual blessing conditioned upon it. But when the satisfaction of the bodily appetites becomes the object of chief concern, when it obscures all other interests, it becomes an evil.

An oyster is nearly all stomach. Man is not. That is the great difference between man and oyster. To an oyster, feasting is an unmitigated blessing because it is the satisfaction of his highest needs and desires. An oyster has a right to devote himself entirely to securing food, for he has no higher activities which can be interfered with by that occupation. A man who allows his best efforts and his chief interest to center upon the problem of food and drink, allies himself with the oyster rather than with man as God intended him to be.

The sort of feasting that produces leanness, then, is the feasting which is paid for by centering all one's thoughts on the satisfaction of the bodily appetites; starving the soul to feed the body. And the sort of leanness which follows is the most serious sort—leanness of soul. Of course the soul becomes lean. The poor, hungry, neglected thing is left uncared for and forgotten; the real man is treated as an outcast and a beggar, while the mere animal is feasted and feted.

This is intemperance: the habit of giving to one part of our nature more attention and consideration than it deserves, and to another less. To think too much about clothes and too little about morals, too much about food and too little about brotherly love, too much about vacation and too little about work, too much about the bodily pleasure of the day and too little about the eternal life of the soul—this makes an ill-balanced, disproportioned life, like a picture drawn out of perspective. This is intemperance in the largest sense.

It was because he recognized the great temptation to place too much emphasis on the bodily and visible things, while forgetting the things of the Spirit, that Jesus said: "Take no thought for the morrow saying, What shall we eat, or what shall we drink, or wherewithal shall we be clothed?" Provision for these wants is too dearly bought when it is paid for by such anxious and absorbing thought as blinds the eyes to the Father's goodness and to the spiritual blessings which he stands ready to bestow.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

Sept. 9.

CALEB: OR, COURTING DIFFICULTIES.—
Josh. 14:6-14, 15:13-17.

Biography is history teaching by example; and there is no more inspiring lesson. Every library might well find its beginning in a few well-selected biographies. The sturdy figure of Caleb stalks before us to-day, old enough, we should say, to retire from active service, and yet voluntarily choosing the most difficult task—the subjugation of walled cities defended by giants.

There is a dash of the dramatic and the heroic in this, and it is sadly needed now when men are forgetting the grandeur of moral qualities, and seeking by every sort of chicane short and easy roads to wealth and enervating luxury. Multitudes are failing in the struggle of life, for no other reason than that they shrink away from difficulties. It is the story of the spies over again—"There are giants in the land." Or, as the writer of Proverbs expresses it, "There is a lion in the way; I shall be slain in the street."

Admirable as the conduct of Caleb is in this instance, it is nothing new with him. When he first appears on the scene he displays the same courage, the same scorn of difficulties. He endangers his popularity, and all but imperils his life by joining with Joshua against the rest of the spies and declaring that they are easily able to go up and possess the land. Who can doubt that through all the years of the wilderness wandering, he had been a staunch supporter of Moses, a promoter of law and order and obedience to Jehovah?

But for this very reason one might expect the old hero now to ask for something easy. That is the way we moderns have. "I have stood all these years on the firing line; I have endured hardness as a good soldier; I have never murmured when difficult tasks were assigned to me; and now I think I've served my turn. Let some one else go up against the giants of Anakim. Besides, I am old, and entitled to a pension." That is practically what we sometimes hear from the lips of Christians who are still in their prime. All this is radically wrong. By having once done well, we are committed to well doing as the rule of our lives. Once a hero, always a hero! unless, indeed, the heroism be a mere stage dress—a mockery, and no true heroism.

How does it come that Caleb is still courting difficulties? He was a strong man; and a man possessing conscious strength delights in its exercise. He was conscious of stewardship; he knew that he would be held to account, that the requirement was fidelity. He must have been a man of temperate habits; else he would not have been as strong at eighty as at forty. That is, he had learned the secret of self-control; and the man who can control himself can storm victoriously the proudest battlement ever erected.

But all these virtues had their inspiration in his confidence in God, and implicit obedience to him. It was "because he wholly followed the Lord his God" that he found himself in vigorous health, with undiminished energies and unshrinking courage. There are difficulties enough in this land, advanced as we think we are. Christian, nominally, as we are, to make the boldest hesitate. Where are our Calebs? Where are the men to go forth and woo these defiant difficulties?

Mammonism, proud, ruthless tyrannical; Romanism, arrogant, threatening, impious; sectarianism, bitter, venomous, unyielding—here is a trinity of difficulties whose challenge of the armies of the living God never ceases. And then, the lurking passions of the human heart!

PRAYER.

Oh, God, the difficulties thronging us are apparently insuperable. We are girt about with enemies that would swallow us up. Disguised as angels of light, they enter our very hearts, and eat away our energy and courage.

Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney and Bladder Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh, or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also a Home of Swamp-Root pamphlet telling all about Swamp-Root, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

Deliver us, oh, God of battles, and enable many Calebs to overthrow them, through Jesus Christ our mighty Captain. Amen.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

—From C. C. Smith's report of the terrific storm in Jamaica, it is apparent that only immediate and generous aid to the stricken churches and population can prevent famine and death. Brother Smith writes with a personal knowledge of conditions there. We trust relief will be dispatched at once, through the C. W. B. M. treasury.

—The courteous attention of every preacher in Missouri is called to the earnest appeal of D. O. Smart, president of the board, in behalf of the Bible College at Columbia. Chas. M. Sharpe is a most capable representative, and will do good everywhere, aside from advancing our educational interests at this strategic point. Will not our Missouri ministers respond with the most cordial co-operation?

—A. M. Harvuot and some of his helpers recently invaded a saloon in the suburbs of Cincinnati and invited its proprietor and patrons to a tent meeting near by. An invitation was extended Brother H. to preach right there in the saloon, and after the tent service he complied, using a card table for a platform. This is "carrying the war into Africa" with a vengeance.

—J. M. Cobbs, of Windsor, Col., has made a direct gift of $500 to the National Benevolent Association toward the erection of an orphanage at Loveland, Col. The great work of this association inures to our advantage in many ways, not the least being the wide favor it secures with the masses everywhere. For full information, address the secretary, Geo. L. Snively, 903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis.

—Having returned from a six months' tour through Egypt, Palestine and Europe, I am ready to resume work again, and would like to say to the brethren that I am open for engagements to conduct evangelistic meetings any time after the middle of September. I am also open to dates for lectures on Palestine. In either event I prefer to manage the music myself. May be addressed at any time. J. Elza Holley, Box 188, Everest, Kan.

—The Board has carefully apportioned $30,000 among the churches known to our brotherhood as believing in missionary work done through the agency of our missionary boards. The apportionment is not an arbitrary thing, but is a suggestion and an urgent request which means that if each church will comply with the request the board will reach the $400,000 mark by Sept. 30. Is this not a consummation devoutly to be wished? It is hoped that many churches will reach or go beyond their apportionments.

—T. N. Kincaid reports the contract made for a lot 60x130, costing $5,000, upon which to build a church at Hot Springs, Ark. It is centrally located, on Onachita Street, near Central. The brethren there can raise $2,000, and desire and deserve help in securing the balance. J. V. Updike's meeting closed with 64 additions; of this number, 34 took letters to unite with their home churches, scattered from New York to California. Brother Updike considers Hot Springs the greatest mission field he has ever seen.

—Nearly one appeal each day is coming to the Board of Church Extension for aid during these weeks before the September offering. This fact alone should insure a large offering in view of the fact that no appeals can be answered except in the negative until the Board of Church Extension realizes enough money from the September offering to answer these appeals favorably. It is believed that if our preachers and elders could be placed in the church extension office and asked to answer the letters of appeal that are coming in daily and say that we can give you no assurance of aid for the present because of an empty treasury, there would be no trouble to get these brethren to enlist their churches by taking the annual offering.

—Last week the Board of Church Extension received $1,000 from a brother in Buchanan, Mich., on the annuity plan, which makes $3,000 contributed by this brother to the Church Extension annuity fund. This makes the eighty-eighth gift received on the annuity plan. There is such great demands for annuity money to help churches complete their buildings that this $1,000 will go out at once on the first of September. Here is an opportunity for our church extension friends to help the board by sending annuity gifts of any amount from $100 up to several thousand. Write to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., Kansas City, Mo., for information, or send money directly to him and your bond will be promptly forwarded, paying you six per cent interest.

—At a time when Missouri is coming in for such a large measure of notoriety, and that not of a very desirable quality, it ought to be said that she has just held one of the cleanest and most up-to-date state fairs in all the country. It was absolutely free from every species of gambling. All the exhibits were splendid. On Thursday, Aug. 20, there were over 20,000 people in the grounds and I did not see one intoxicated man. This certainly reflects great credit upon the president, Mr. N. H. Gentry, who is an officer in the First Christian Church of Sedalia. He and his associates deserve the hearty thanks of the people of Missouri, for the manner in which they conducted the state fair. The ladies of the First Church under the leadership of the aid society furnished meals each day during the fair and took in over $1,700. J. M. RUDY, pastor First Church.

—In behalf of the First Christian Church of Lafayette, Ind., we desire to make a request again of the parents and friends of the Church of Christ, whose sons or daughters expect to attend Purdue University this year, that they see to it that they bring their church letter and deposit it with us at once, as many did last year. Our congregation is growing and wide awake to the training and development of the spiritual life of the young people. We have not only the best Y. P. S. C. E. in the city, but among the very best in the state. This congregation exerted as great, and by many considered a greater influence upon the 1,200 students last year as any church in the city. Let parents and pastors take notice and write me concerning their coming. Some have already written me, and we are glad to serve in any way we can.—C. H. TROUT, pastor, 416 Perrin Ave.

—Brother C. H. Caton, who will be remembered by many as a minister among us, many years ago, and who, out of some misunderstanding and friction, left us, affiliating later with the Congregationalists, among whom he has labored as a preacher, writes us from Dallas, Tex., that after the experiences and reflections of many years, he is convinced that his proper place of work is with his former brethren, and that he feels in perfect sympathy with that conception of our plea represented by such papers as the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and that he can most heartily

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly every body knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but, simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I got more and better charcoal in Stuart's absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

co-operate with any church that is in sympathy with this view of our work. Brother Caton is a man of education and ability as a preacher, and we do not for a moment doubt the sincerity of his motive, nor the genuineness of his desire to resume his place among the Disciples of Christ. We sincerely hope that he may make satisfactory arrangements with some of our churches as a preacher of the gospel, and as a pastor. He will be able to furnish letters of commendation from some of our widely known ministers, who know him personally and his present state of mind and purpose.

—Brother Frank Fannon, who recently resigned his pastorate at Sedalia, Mo., on account of his health, has been spending the summer on his farm, "Idlewhile," Boyd, Ill., and reports himself quite well again. He writes that he has desired for many years to take up the work of special meetings, but has been hindered hitherto on account of his pastoral duties, until the present time. It is his purpose now to enter upon this work as a helper in our churches both with the pastor and the people in deepening the spiritual life of the churches in securing accessions to it, and in assisting in harnessing the unused and undirected power in the church for active work. We are sure that Brother Fannon has peculiar ability for this sort of work, and we are delighted to know that his health is in a condition to permit him to undertake it. There is a vast amount of such work to be done and we are sure that Brother Fannon will receive far more calls for his special meetings than he will be able to accept. He may be addressed at the post office above named by churches desiring to secure his services for autumn and winter work. He writes that Mrs. Fannon will travel with him as their two boys will be in college.

Our Great Convention.

This seems to be a year of great things, especially great conventions, and like the "Star of Empire" it has been coming west. From your conventions about the lakes, then to that great Christian Endeavor meeting at Denver above the clouds, on like a tidal wave it came to the Pacific coast, as seen in the assembled multitude that gathered by the sea. It was the largest, the best. The evangelists had good reports, such as gladdened every heart, new buildings, memberships largely increased, larger contributions to every department of missionary work, and general enlargement all along the line.

Brother Dargitz as general field secretary, and Brothers Gallahorn and Carroll as evangelists, were started out into new fields at once. They begin their new year's work among the stately redwoods of Humboldt Co.

Judge McCoy, that fine parliamentarian, presided in the convention sittings as he has before, and there are none better. Brother McKeever was honored with the presidency of the State Board, and their work will be well done.

The C. W. B. M., the Endeavorers and Sunday-school parts were of the best. Bro. Nesbit, the music man, was ably assisted by Sister Cutler and her son and daughter. A part of the old Abingdon Glee Club appeared, Mrs. Mary Harris Thompson, Mrs. Annie Bradbury Fisher and J. Durham. Of course they can sing well after more than forty years' practice. That noted young evangelist, Bro. Allen Wilson, who preaches like a mountain torrent, did most of the preaching, and he did it well. The last evening there were seven confessions, two old men over 70, Bro. A. McLean's presence among us was a lovely benediction of good things which he knows just how to say. His addresses were highly instructive. Think he felt like he was on a mount of transfiguration, that he would like to have "built a booth," if he had some one to put in it besides himself. Come again, brother. Bro. A. M. Cowden, that hero of home missions, was brim full to overflowing, and he, too, gave us inspiration. A larger number of lot sales this year, new cottages going up, and the Christian city is enlarging on all sides. Nature has done more for our park surroundings than any other spot for church gatherings on the continent. A few rods to the south opens out the Bay of Monterey with all its abundant resources of health and pleasure. To the north, a mile distant, begin to rise the mountains with their rich mines of asphaltum and limestone. Back of the city like a vast amphitheater, crowned with the great sequoia, the valleys and hillsides, beautified with homes, fertile fields and gardens. From these mountains come a fine supply of soft water to the park. The church at Santa Cruz is moving on with great prosperity under the efficient work of Brother and Sister R. N. Davis.

It is no wonder so many of the good people of California are making summer and State meeting houses at Garfield Park.

The latest and largest of all conventions was the G. A. R. which just closed in San Francisco. The railroads gave over 40,000 outside the environs of the city. The presence of Generals Miles, Shafter, Smith and Stewart gave interest to the occasion. Seventeen years ago they were here, but in another such period they will not be here to carry the old tattered flags. They will all be mustered out. It will then be told how they have fought the great battle of life. This army was depleted last year by over 8,000. It was the delight of the California people to make it a visit of delight to the old veterans. The contiguous cities opened their doors, reached out their hands, excursions were on, tons and double tons of fruits, flowers, balmy air, sunny skies, cheers, waving flags, happy greetings of long separated comrades, all made them forget their scars, empty sleeves, crutches and canes, simply the last mouldering fires "while tenting on the old campground."

I mention of the many interesting incidents that occurred: Two men passed each other on a hotel stairway. One hailed the other saying, "It seems to me I have seen you before." The other says, "Your face appears familiar to me." They clasp hands, "Oh, yes," says the first, "it was in Libby prison. You looked out of a window and a hole was shot through your hat." "Yes sir," was the reply, "I am the man."

A confederate in gray was met by the old soldier who had captured him in a southern scout. They called it a recapture, but it was a joyful greeting.

Berkeley Bible Seminary and the California Convention.

The following is a synopsis of the report of the trustees of Berkeley Bible Seminary for year ending July 27, 1903, which was presented to the California convention at Santa Cruz:

The work of the seminary proper, for the year which has just closed, has been the most remarkable and successful in the history of the school. In addition to the regular seminary work, Dean Van Kirk came into contact with 143 different students of the University of California, to whom he gave systematic biblical instruction. Most of these were young men and young women of mature minds, who gave to this biblical work the same proportionate time and study that they devoted to scientific and other studies in the university, and passed like examinations in this work. No fairer opportunity has ever opened to any of the Bible chairs at our state universities than that which lies open to our seminary at Berkeley. Next year Dean Van Kirk will have double the opportunity to do work among the students, and it is confidently expected that from 250 to 300 students will be reached by his teaching in the holy scriptures.

Besides this important work, the following courses of instruction were given in the seminary proper: The Life of Christ; Harmony of the Gospels; The Teaching of Jesus; The Teaching of the Disciples of Christ; Survey of Old Testament Literature and History, and New Testament Greek. Dean Van Kirk also conducted a thorough course in the Bible, running parallel with the International Sunday-school lessons.

In the above courses, 35 additional students were enrolled, thus making a total of 178 different students who came under systematic biblical instruction during the last year. Surely the brotherhood has great reason for rejoicing over the auspicious work which Prof. Van Kirk is doing.

[Here follows a history of the recent controversy with the Christian Standard which we need not publish.—EDITOR.]

In conclusion the board recommends that the brotherhood of California set before itself a new ideal which shall contemplate nothing less than a fully equipped seminary with an adequate building, an adequate teaching force and an adequate endowment; and that our brethren, individually and collectively, plan and work and pray for the attainment of this ideal; and that to this end our rallying cry and our working motto be, "A quarter of a Million for Berkeley by 1909."

The report was received with the greatest enthusiasm, after which Bro. L. O. Ferguson moved that the report of this board be accepted, and submitted the following resolutions:

Resolved: 1. That we express our utmost confidence in the members of the seminary board, and point with pride to them as men of unquestioned moral character and superior intelligence, and that we commend most heartily their management of the affairs of the seminary, and especially in defense of its dean and financial secretary against a powerful antagonist in the late, long-continued and yet current controversy with which we are all familiar.

2. That we express our entire confidence in Dean Van Kirk as an able exponent of the principles of the current reformation, and a man of unsullied character and of robust faith in the divine Savior and the inspiration and authority of the holy scriptures, and as such we commend him to the brotherhood at large.

3. That we also recognize in Prof. H. D. McAneney a man of sterling Christian character and of distinguished ability, a most scrupulous and unselfish servant of Christ and the church, and as such, most heartily indorse him as financial secretary of the Berkeley Bible Seminary.

4. That we most earnestly recommend the churches of the state to open their doors to the financial secretary of the seminary, and that they strive by all reasonable means to realize the high ideal set forth in the report to which we have just listened.

Rounds of applause followed the chairman's announcement of the unanimous adoption of these resolutions.

Disciples at Columbia University.

In the interest of Disciples in attendance at Columbia University, an effort will be made this year to form a club for social and religious fellowship. If the parents and pastors who know of young men and women, present or prospective students at Columbia, will write the undersigned, it will no doubt be of advantage to the young people and a blessing to the church. Lenox Avenue Union Church of the Disciples of Christ is located at 41 W. 119th Street, in easy walking distance of the university. The church and pastor will do all possible for the good of the students.

Kentucky State Conventions.

Our three conventions will be held at Paris, Ky., Sept. 21-25.

We are hoping that many of our people will be attracted by the strong programs to make determined efforts to attend. We ought to have a very general representation of our churches. Every congregation ought to have one or more there to enjoy this meeting and to carry back to the home church the enthusiasm that we hope may be kindled in all hearts.

Announcement cannot yet be made definitely as to rates. We get, of course, the usual one and one-third fare on the certificate plan. That has already been granted. We are working for a better rate and hope to be able to announce through next week's papers as well as by letters to all the churches a better rate.

If we could assure the railroads that we would have 500 people there who will travel by rail we could get a better rate. Unfortunately our preachers use their permits every year in attending the conventions and we cannot make a showing of tickets bought for the convention such as will convince the railroads that our meetings are as large as they really are. We hope that if we do not get the round trip ticket at less than one and one-third fare that our preachers will go on the certificate ticket and enable us to make such a showing for the future that we can easily get this lower rate.

If you have not done so send your name at once to Carey E. Morgan, Paris, Ky., if you intend to go. It is desired that all who expect to go send their names in promptly and thus facilitate the work of arranging for entertainment.

It is very late to do anything for the support of your state missionary work, my brethren. Still there is a little time left. Even at this last stage take an offering and send it to me here, or if you have not time to send it here send or take it to Paris. All contributions received by Sept. 17, will be included in the printed lists distributed at the convention. Such as may be received later than that and up to the evening of Sept. 22, will be read as a supplemental report with the annual report of our work.

Brethren in the ministry, we are at the point in our work when you and you alone can save us from a stinging defeat. We have made a creditable gain in number of contributing churches and the amounts given by them as compared with last year. We need at least $1,200 in order to close the year with a creditable record. Twenty churches that I could name that have not given anything, or only a part of the apportionment can cover this and not pay their apportionment in full.

To the preachers of these churches and to any preacher serving a church large or small that has not given any support to our state work we make one more earnest appeal. Help us to close the year in a way that becomes a strong people such as ours in Kentucky. We have a report of work that puts to shame our support of it.

Surely we have many brethren and sisters who can and will help us individually. Will you not send us a generous gift now?

Salem, Mass., Subject of Mormon Prophecy.

In July, 1836, Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith, Sidney Rigdon and Oliver Cowdery went to Salem, Mass., to find a treasure of which they had been told by a Mormon brother, Burgess:

Ever since the time of Captain Kidd
 The Yankees say, there are treasures hid.

On August 6, while at Salem, Joseph had the following revelation: "I, the Lord your God, am not displeased with your coming this journey, notwithstanding your follies, I have much treasure in this city for you, for the benefit of Zion; and many people in this city whom I will gather out in due time for the benefit of Zion, through your instrumentality; therefore it is expedient that you should form acquaintance with men of this city, as you shall be led, and as it shall be given you; and it shall come to pass in due time that I will give this city into your hands, that you shall have power over it, inasmuch that they shall not discover your secret parts; and its wealth pertaining to gold and silver shall be yours. Concern not yourselves about your debts, for I will give you power to pay them. Concern not yourselves about Zion, for I will deal mercifully with her. Tarry in this place, and in this region round about; and the place where it is my will that you should tarry for the main, shall be signalized unto you by the peace and power of my Spirit, that shall flow unto you. This place you may obtain by hire, etc. And inquire more diligently concerning the more ancient inhabitants and founders of this city; for there are more treasures than one for you in this city; therefore, be ye as wise as serpents and yet without sin. And I will order all things for your good as fast as ye are able to receive them. Amen."

It will be seen from this that Joseph was still a money hunter, but I really have not heard of his getting the gold and silver of Salem, not even one treasure; neither has the city been turned over to him or any of the numerous organizations of Mormondom. This was too slow a process for Joseph; the next year he organized his famous Kirtland Bank and went into the duping business at a gain to himself, but at quite a loss to those who had misplaced their confidence.

I want to recommend R. B. Neal's tracts in this connection, and especially No. 1, for the truth of Joe's prophecies. I defy Mormondom to show that Joe was a good guesser, saying nothing of his being a revelator.

Will the world ever cease to be humbugged? Remember, the National Anti-Mormon Missionary Association of the Churches of Christ meets at Detroit, Mich., Oct. 19, 1903, at 1 P. M., in the Central Christian Church, corner Second Avenue and Ledyard Streets.

McArthur, O. JAMES W. DARBY.

The Garth Educational Society.

It will be gratifying to all the brethren to learn that Bro. Claude L. Garth, of Scott Co., Ky., has appropriated $20,000 cash to a fund, the interest on which is to be expended in helping young men to obtain an education for the ministry. The fund is to be administered by five trustees under title of the Garth Educational Society, and the beneficiaries are to be selected by the faculty of the College of the Bible. It is Brother Garth's intention, expressed in the deed of trust, to make additions to the fund from time to time during his life, and by bequest at his death.

As the money has yet to be put at interest, it will not be available for help to students during the first half of the coming session; but if any young brethren who may see this announcement desire to enter the college at the beginning of the session, and have means to pay their way only until the first of March next, I shall be glad to correspond with them with reference to help thereafter.

Lexington, Ky. J. W. MCGARVEY.

A Happy Announcement.

It affords me a great deal of pleasure to say to the brethren in Kentucky that Mr. Jos. Richardson, Chairman South Eastern Passenger Association, has announced a rate of one fare for the round trip, plus 25 cents, on account of the conventions at Paris, Sept. 21st to 25th. This announcement covers the following lines: Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific, Illinois Central, Louisville and Nashville and the Southern Railway. We feel confident that the same rate will be given by other lines, and that such announcement can be made next week. Tickets will be on sale on 20th and 21st, and good until 26th for return trip. You will buy a round trip ticket from starting point to Paris. Unless you start to Paris on Sunday or Monday you cannot get the reduced rate, for tickets will not be on sale after the 21st. This is the first time we ever had any such rate, and except the Baptist Convention that met at Winchester in May, this is the first time that any one religious body has been given such a rate. We indulge the hope that a large representation of our people will go to Paris.

To the Preachers of Missouri.

BRETHREN.—In behalf of the Bible College of Missouri I address to you these words of appeal. The only way we can succeed in this enterprise is by agitation and education. If you believe in this movement will you not give us an opportunity to come before your people with its claims? We will be brief, but we will be in earnest. There is no use trifling. Our plea wins wherever it is adequately presented. Bro. Chas. M. Sharpe, at great sacrifice of his preferences, has agreed to remain in the field for the present, pleading the cause of the Bible College. He will come to you on Lord's days addressing the people upon Christian Education or preaching as may seem best and visiting among the brethren of means during the week. It will be possible, perhaps, for him to assist in a few meetings also during the winter. Bro. Sharpe's address is 716 Orville Avenue, Kansas City, Kansas. Write him regarding the work. D. O. SMART, Kansas City, Mo. Pres. of Board.

All mothers of daughters should write to Mrs. M. Summers, Notre Dame, Ind., for a free copy of her "Advice to Mothers." See ad. in this paper.

times is toward combinations and union in every department of our religious, social, industrial, and commercial enterprises. We have the W. C. T. U., the Y. P. S. C. E. unions in the religious world, the labor unions in the industrial world, trusts and corporations in the commercial. These few suggest to each of us many others. We never can go back to the old conditions of things, and we ought not to want to do so. These unions and combinations are powers for good if used properly. They are sometimes used for evil. But what we want is not to get rid of the power, but the evil. Electricity and steam are also powers, and their use kills more men than did the ox cart; but who will argue that we should return to the ox cart? Never before in the history of the world has there been such colossal union of capital to give us goods at such reasonable rates. Never has labor received such good wages. From the standpoint of territory covered the Standard Oil Company is one of the most gigantic unions known to men. As a result it pays the highest wages to its employees of any corporation, and at the same time it gives us oil at from ten to twenty per cent cheaper than it could be furnished before the combine. About the same thing might be said regarding the steel combine. Mr. Rockefeller says he can, because of the facilities furnished by this combine, furnish oil at our commercial centers cheaper than the merchant in the oil fields can furnish water after freight is paid to these same commercial centers. I name these things as incidental to show that in "union there is strength," and that union is the tendency in all things.

So that I may not seem to speak without authority I give a few of the many quotations that might be given from the leaders of sermonic thought.

Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst (Presbyterian), after saying that "denominationalism is false to Christianity, further says regarding the oft repeated assertion that we must have different denominations so that every one may be satisfied, that Christ kept together in one church "the intuitive John and the skeptic Thomas; the spiritualizing John and the matter of fact James" and "the impetuous Peter." "The mutual union of Christians is something which subsists entirely outside the jurisdiction of mental and temperamental proclivities."

Dr. S. D. McConnell (Episcopal, Brooklyn): "One thing is beginning to be strongly felt, and that is that there is practically no use for having different churches at all. . . The time is not very far distant when the churches and various divisions of Christianity will be forced to combine to save themselves from being effaced from off the earth. Protestantism is impotent to make itself felt because of divisions."

Dr. P. S. Henson (Baptist, Brooklyn): "We deeply deplore the existence of denominational divisions, and we do not believe the crowning triumphs of Christianity will ever be won till our Savior's prayer is answered that they all may be one."

Rev. Washington Gladden (Congregationalist): "The Protestant church which has been disintegrated through the right of private judgment, realizing that the foundation of the church is not rights but loyalty to Christ and the kingdom is tending toward a union of its long separated parts."

In England the recent writings of Bishop Boyd Carpenter, of Ripon, as these writings have appeared in book and pamphlet form have stirred the very heart of the church of England. Canon Henson's recent volume ("Godly Union and Concord") is a series of sermons on unity, preached in Westminster Abbey. He says: "A few weeks ago I sat in the Congress Hall at Brighton and listened to a series of speeches by prominent non-conformists. I reflected that by the current practice of our church all these excellent orators were spiritual outcasts; that if they presented themselves for the sacrament of unity, they would be decisively rejected; that in no consecrated pulpit could their voices be heard. . . The conviction came home to my conscience as an intolerable outrage, and I determined here to-day in this famous pulpit, what I had long been thinking, that the time has come for churchmen to remove barriers for which they can no longer plead political unity, and which have behind them no sanction in the best conscience and worthiest reason of our times." Coming as it does from the most famous pulpit in England, the above can not be taken as the mere mouthings of a novice.

The following is an editorial in the December "Treasury": "It is probably too much to hope that the prayer 'that they all may be one' will be realized in Japan any more than elsewhere in the near future, but a very hopeful beginning has been made. Six Presbyterian and reformed societies have united in 'the church of Christ in Japan.'" "Six Episcopal bodies have united in the 'Nippon Sei Kowai' with 10,238 members." In the recent conference of the Methodists in Canada held in Winnipeg, the report of the committee sounded clear notes on "organic union" and expressed "regrets that hitherto all efforts and negotiations had failed," and declared it as their belief that the time had come for "organic union" amongst those people settled in that country. Such statements as the foregoing not only punctuate the religious literature of to-day, but make up a very large part of the main body of the literature. I have been more ready to give them because till lately for the past 100 years the people known as Christians or Disciples of Christ have been the sole denunciators of denominationalism. What may we not hope for the next 100 years?

"The baby looked scared for a minute, then with his eyes fixed on Jim's face, he started for him, holding up his chubby arms with the order we were all so used to—'take Jerry.' But Jim didn't. He made believe he had to go to work all of a sudden. But it was the funniest thing the way that youngster would single Jim out and make love to him after that. We would any of us break our necks to get one of his smiles, but the minute he saw Jim he would leave us all and start for him as fast as his little legs could carry him. But Jim wouldn't give in.

"Then one day we heard that little Jerry was awful sick. They wanted two men to help with something at the house, and Jim and me was the only ones above ground just then; so we went. I didn't go in the house, but Jim had to go in to see Jerry. It was kinder hot, an' the baby's crib was out in the middle of the room, an' Jerry an' his wife sittin' by it. We had sent for the doctor, but there was no tellin' when he'd git there. I stood on the door step an' heard the baby cry out hoarse, an' cough like it was stranglin'. Mrs. Somers stood up to lift him, but just then Jim looked in the crib, and the baby saw him. The little fellow couldn't hardly speak, but he turned away from his mother and tried to lift his little hands to Jim. 'Take Jerry,' he whispered. 'Jerry sick.' There were tears in his big, blue eyes, and his lip trembled. He had tried it so many times and failed, but he never cried when he was well.

"You oughter seen Jim. He stood there lookin' so beat for a minute. Then his eyes got kind o' misty an' he stooped down, lifted the little feller an' carried him to the big rocker. The baby curled down an' went to sleep, an' we thought he would be better. But in the night he was took worse an'—well, you know the rest. But Jim wasn't the same feller after that. He went back home pretty soon an' settled down. Ye see now why I called the baby the conqueror. Jerry succeeded fine an' they went back to Illinois two years after the baby died. But we boys begged 'em to leave that place jest as we fixed it, an' they said they would. There used to be several of us to do it, but I'm the only one left now."

THE ROOT OF THE MATTER.

He Cured Himself of Serious Stomach Trouble, by Getting Down to First Principles.

A man of large affairs in one of our prominent eastern cities by too close attention to business, too little exercise and too many club dinners, finally began to pay nature's tax, levied in the form of chronic stomach trouble; the failure of his digestion brought about a nervous irritability making it impossible to apply himself to his daily business and finally deranging the kidneys and heart.

In his own words he says: "I consulted one physician after another and each one seemed to understand my case, but all the same they each failed to bring about the return of my former digestion, appetite and vigor. For two years I went from pillar to post, from one sanitarium to another, I gave up smoking, I quit coffee and even renounced my daily glass or two of beer, but without any marked improvement.

"Friends had often advised me to try a well-known proprietary medicine, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and I had often perused the newspaper advertisements of the remedy, but never took any stock in advertised medicines nor could believe a fifty-cent patent medicine would touch my case.

"To make a long story short I finally bought a couple of packages at the nearest drug store and took two or three tablets after each meal and occasionally a tablet between meals, when I felt any feeling of nausea or discomfort.

"I was surprised at the end of the first week to note a marked improvement in my appetite and general health and before the two packages were gone I was certain that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets was going to cure completely and they did not disappoint me. I can eat and sleep and enjoy my coffee and cigar and no one would suppose I had ever known the horrors of dyspepsia.

"Out of friendly curiosity I wrote to the proprietors of the remedy asking for information as to what the tablets contained and they replied that the principal ingredients were asceptic pepsin (government test), malt diastase and other natural digestives, which digest food regardless of the condition of the stomach."

The root of the matter is this, the digestive elements contained in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest the food, give the over-worked stomach a chance to recuperate and the nerves and whole system receive the nourishment which can only come from food; stimulants and nerve tonics never give real strength, they give a fictitious strength, invariably followed by reaction. Every drop of blood, every nerve and tissue is manufactured from our daily food, and if you can insure its prompt action and complete digestion by the regular use of so good and wholesome a remedy as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, you will have no need of nerve tonics and sanitariums.

Although Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have been in the market only a few years yet probably every druggist in the United States, Canada, and Great Britain now sells them and considers them the most popular and successful of any preparation for stomach trouble.

The old man rose and went into the house. The desolate hamlet was very still. A solitary star seemed to keep its lonely vigil above that beautiful spot between the hills, the quaking aspens shivered as a breeze passed softly through their branches, and the waters of Chalk Creek murmured a requiem for the little conqueror of Alpine.

No expense and care have been spared to secure the most artistic effects in the massing of rare shrubbery and beds of flowers. But most delightful to many is the upper half of the island, which is left in its native wildness, and through it are walks and roads which are a delight to automobilists, cyclists and drivers. Park phaetons convey visitors around the island for a small sum, pony carts may be rented, and scores of delighted children may be seen capering over the island at all times in these tiny conveyances, while the most delightful outing in the world is a row through the beautiful canals which wind in graceful curves about the island, gladdening the eye with charming surprises at every turn.

It is our proud boast that no other city offers such enticing pleasure trips for sums which enable the rich and the poor to share them alike. Think of an all day's excursion on the river for ten cents! Incredible, yet this is what hundreds of people do every day in Detroit. Three fine steamers plying constantly between Belle Isle and the Woodward Avenue landing are loaded with happy children, invalids seeking the invigoration of refreshing breeze and beautiful views, tourists and citizens enjoying these river rides for ten cents!

A second part of unusual beauty on the mainland directly opposite Belle Isle is the Water Works Park, out Jefferson Avenue. It stretches from the avenue down to the river's edge, a large tract of ground, with a charming outlook upon the river and Belle Isle, its artificial lakes and fountains, flower beds in most unique designs, and, most fascinating of all, the fine buildings with their ponderous machinery never ceasing. A striking thing greets the visitor at the entrance, a clock with its works hidden underneath a mount of green and its hands creeping round a dial of greenery and flowers. From the top of the high tower is presented a view of the river with its traffic of pleasure and commerce, the island, the shaded city streets and the maze of roofs and spires, that well repays one for the labor of ascending the high, winding staircase. A wonderful co-mingling one beholds of the supreme achievement of God in the fullness of the beauty of nature, and the acme of the ingenuity of man in the busy whirl of life below.

This park is almost at the extreme east end of the city's possessions, and the tourist bent on "doing the town" most systematically will do well to board a Jefferson car returning, transfer to Woodward, ride out seven miles over paved streets, and past the most palatial residences and the finest business houses, the city hall, the Soldiers' Monument, and the handsomest churches, to Palmer, or "Log Cabin,"

Park. This tract of land was the gift of Ex-United States Senator, Thomas W. Palmer, and upon it stands the old log house in which the donor was born, with all of the old time furniture, rugs, chinaware, stoves, playthings, etc., most sacredly preserved and shown to the public.

It is not possible to enumerate within the limits of our space the points of pleasure and interest which Detroit possesses. The wonderful manufacturing alone could keep the sight-seer interested for days, and while she has so much to offer to her visitors, Detroit expects to receive much from the delegates to the great religious convention in October. The city expects an uplift, the cause of Christ in Michigan looks for a mighty impetus, the churches throughout the country should feel the influence, the missionaries in far lands are waiting for the blessing, and the realization of it all demands "a representative from every church."

Supper Table, April 18, 1891, gives the following interesting particulars concerning the first church building of this infant denomination: "It was built by John Boyd, and though small and cheap, the infant denomination was not able to pay for it. After waiting two years for his money, Mr. Boyd brought suit before Squire Nire against George Sharpe, one of the deacons of the new church, and Thomas Sharpe, who made the contract for the work, for the balance due on it. On Aug. 11, 1813, judgment was entered on the squire's docket for $93.60, debt and interest to date. On May 9, 1814, the money was paid. The entries on the docket are as follows: 'Debt and interest, $93.60; justice, 30 cents; constable, 62 cents; interest for nine months, $4.21; receiving, 25 cents; total, $98.98. Pd. peff. $97.81.' "

This building ceased to be used as a place of worship about 1828. In 1842 it was sold to George McFadden, who moved it to West Middletown, where for several years he used it as a blacksmith shop, and later, 1869, it was the village post office. The sketch accompanying this article was made by Miss L. Hodgens, of West Middletown, and shows "the hole cut in the old church door for dropping letters in."

Later the building was bought by Mr. J. E. Lawton, who, after fruitless attempts to convey the building to responsible parties in the brotherhood, gave it away to one of his neighbors, who in the spring of 1892 moved it to the rear of his dwelling, to be used as a barn and stable. It is now owned by Mr. Samuel Jameson, of West Middletown. A few of the larger timbers is all that remains of this historic building. Truly, "How are the mighty fallen!"

Harrison, O., Aug. 27, 1903.

COLORADO.—Salida, Aug. 24.—Sunday, 16th inst., one confession; 19th at prayer-meeting one by statement; Sunday, 23rd, one by statement, making three in the last eight days. I hope to send in some names for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST soon.—G. W. COFFMAN.

Trinidad, Aug. 23.—Five additions to the church at Trinidad, Aug. 23. Present membership 182.—DAVID C. PETERS.

INDIANA.—Cross Plains, Aug. 24.—Just closed great meeting at Middle Fork, Ind., resulting in 42 additions—all grown people except three; 16 heads of families and the most prominent people in the community. Bro. J. J. Taylor, North Vernon, did the preaching, and by his earnest, eloquent presentation of the simple gospel truth, won the hearts of everyone in the community. We only had 13 members when Brother Taylor came to us, but his three weeks' stay resulted in the above number of additions, a church thoroughly organized, good Endeavor organized and work begun in earnest in all departments. The additions as follows: 1 by statement, 1 from Methodists, 5 from Baptists, 5 from Catholics, 35 confessions. Brother Taylor is assisting me here now; 2 added to date.—F. E. HAMMEL.

Madison, Aug. 24.—Three accessions by letter yesterday. Everything in good condition. Audiences held up well for warm weather. I dedicate the new house of worship at Oakland, Ky., fifth Lord's day in this month. Expect to start for Palestine in February or March.—J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—Nowata, July 27.—We have just closed a two weeks' meeting near Allvine, which resulted in 59 additions—50 by baptism and 9 reclaimed. From this there were 4 from the Baptists, 3 from the Methodists, 1 from the Latter Day Saints. We started in with an arbor annexed to a schoolhouse, but the crowd increased so greatly that we were compelled to enlarge the arbor 20 feet. The people here are anxious to do something. They have a membership now of about 90. They are going to build at once. There is no place in the United States that needs the Word of God more than the Indian Territory. The pastor, W. F. Flower, did the preaching. This meeting was one of the greatest victories I have ever seen won.—A. RECTOR, Singing Evangelist.

IOWA.—Coon Rapids.—Meeting here closed with 13 additions the last night—50 in all. Chas. G. Stout did the preaching and won favor through the whole community. "The Enterprise," a secular weekly, commented editorially on the great work done.—T.

Keokuk, Aug. 27.—Will close my work at Keokuk, Aug. 31, and begin the work at Houston, Texas, Sept. 1. Our seven years' work at Keokuk have been very pleasant, and we feel the church is one of the best in the brotherhood. Bro. E. E. Lowe, of Ft. Madison, will come to Keokuk and take up the work the middle of September. May God bless and prosper the work under his leadership.—A. F. SANDERSON.

Moulton, Aug. 28.—Meeting at West Grove continues; one confession; rained out two nights past week. Have closed work at Moulton; ready to take work with the first call that suits. Reference, Iowa State Board, Moulton, or any congregation with whom we have labored. Can begin Sept. 15.—S. B. ROSS.

KANSAS.—Herington, Aug. 24.—Seven by letter yesterday; two of them from the Congregationalists. Elder J. W. Bacon, of Delavan is now preaching for the Highland church near Latimer. He reports one confession yesterday.—F. M. McHALE.

Wichita, Aug. 24.—Four confessions at the S. Lawrence Ave., church yesterday.—W. T. McLAIN.

Lawrence, Aug. 18.—The church work here moves on slowly. The summer work has been good and we are in fine condition for the fall.—A. L. WARD.

KENTUCKY.—Elizabethtown, August 24.—Charles Richard Vawter closed a meeting for A. C. Tharpe at Sonora, Ky., on Aug. 19, which resulted in 5 confessions, 1 from the Catholics. On the 20th, Brother Vawter began a meeting at this place, and although the M. E.'s started an opposition meeting only two doors away with one of their big guns, we have had fine audiences, and in the four days have had five additions. Eld. J. M. Vawter, of Jeffersonville, Ind., will be on hand tonight to assist in the meeting, and we expect much good to result.—C. P. VAWTER.

Lexington, Aug. 24.—A two weeks' meeting has just closed at Barterville, Nicholas Co., Ky., with 19 additions. The writer did the preaching and Jas. Ogden, of Lexington, conducted the singing. The work at Barterville is encouraging. Several in that church expect to enter the ministry, and two will soon be ready to go out as missionaries.—W. A. BOGGESS.

MICHIGAN.—Saginaw, August 24.—Six months' patient labor and love for the Master resulted in victory by the confession and baptism of a worthy young man of twenty-three years, upon whom the world made strong claim. Services of the week have all been splendid, particularly the prayer meetings, in attendance and spiritual life.—E. E. C.

MISSOURI.—Seymour, Aug. 24.—Bro. R. O. Rogers, of Paragould, Ark., has been helping me in a tent meeting at this place for more than two weeks. The immediate results, thus far, are 34 additions, 18 by primary obedience. Many others are interested.—D. B. WARREN.

Appleton City, Aug. 23.—Just closed a 10 days' meeting at Montrose; interest was good; 3 added by statement, and arrangement made for hiring a minister for one-fourth time. Would like to correspond with some young minister who would be willing to labor in a growing field for $450 or $500.—FRANK JALAGEAS.

Belton, Aug. 19.—I have just closed a two weeks' meeting at Hickman Mills, 15 miles south of Kansas City, Mo. Bro. E. W. Kerr, of Gallatin, Mo., conducted the singing. We had splendid audiences, with good spiritual results; four by confession and baptism. This is one of the best churches in the state, and is growing in power and godliness. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is quite popular in this congregation.—M. F. REDLEIN.

Ravenwood, Aug. 25.—Two additions by baptism at Ravenwood recently. Conducted funeral of Paul Murdock, infant son of Brother and Sister Murdock, of Parnell, Sunday afternoon, Aug. 23. Begin a meeting at Gaynor City, Sept. 9. We will have a basket meeting at Gaynor City the second Lord's day in September—an all day session. Have recently organized a Y. P. S. C. E., also a Junior C. E. at Ravenwood. Both doing nicely. Our C. E. gave an ice cream social on lawn at parsonage recently. Cleared $20.25, which amount will be invested in hymn books. My time is divided equally between Ravenwood and Gaynor City. Work moving along nicely.—J. H. KENT.

LaBelle, Aug. 25.—I closed a meeting of 21 days at Knox City Sunday night, with 40 additions to the church; 35 confessions. The majority of the confessions were adults and heads of families. Bro. C. E. Wagner, formerly assistant pastor of Kirksville, was with us two weeks as leader of song. He is among the best of our song leaders, and his labors were conducive to the success of the meeting. The preaching, with the exception of one sermon, was all done by the writer. Brother Nichols, of Dallas, Ill., came on a visit near the close of the meeting, and while with us, preached one sermon and had the pleasure of baptizing his brother and wife, and his sister.—J. H. JONES.

Pleasant Hill, Aug. 25.—Closed a ten days' meeting at New Bloomfield, Mo., Aug. 21, with 13 accessions: 8 by baptism. Seven of the eight were men. All of the accessions were adults.—J. D. GREER.

Williamstown, Aug. 23.—Meeting here now one week and two days old, with 16 additions to date. Have to close next Friday to begin a meeting at Golden Point Church, near Hamilton, Ill. My brother, Byron Ingold, labors for these brethren one-fourth time and has sown some good seed.—OSCAR INGOLD.

Leora, Aug. 27.—A year ago we took charge of four weak points in New Lisbon township. Over a hundred have been added, and among those who have grown in grace three have been found mature enough for eldership. One new house of worship is being erected, and by the end of another year we hope to report they are helping to establish the kingdom elsewhere.—CLARK WILLIAMS, evangelist.

St. Joseph, Aug. 28.—Since last report there have been additions as follows: Antioch, Andrew county, two; Long Branch, one, and in South St. Joseph, two. My work is doing nicely at all points. Am preaching a few days for a small congregation west of Savannah, Mo. Hope to do good.—N. R. DAVIS.

Tipton, Aug. 29.—I am feeling quite well. Will begin our meeting here to-morrow. Expect to be able to fill all my engagements from this on. All churches wanting preachers and all preachers wanting locations are requested to write to me at once. Many have been supplied averaging about two per week. Our new circulars will be out soon, explaining the workings of the bureau. All evangelists should keep in touch with us.—H. C. PATTERSON, General Manager.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.—Quay, Aug. 24.—On July 29, Brother John A. Tabor, evangelist for the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in this territory, began a meeting at this place. There was no organization here, but a few scattered Disciples from different states, who had come here at the opening of this country for settlement and who were very anxious for a church home of their own faith. The meeting continued for two weeks and a half with forty additions; eight by confession and baptism and the remainder by letter and statement. We have our lots on which to erect a new church and most of the money raised with which to build it. Brother Tabor is a fine preacher and knows how to present the gospel so that it can be understood. We feel that his coming to this town has been a great blessing to the community. We will continue to meet in an arbor till our house is completed.—MRS. C. M. PROWANT.

Norman, Aug. 24.—Dear Brethren: At our prayer-meeting service last Wednesday night, I took the confession of a father, mother and son and baptized them "the same hour of the night."—J. G. CREASON.

Fallis, Aug. 26.—Held a two weeks' meeting at Luther, resulting in 23 additions to the church. The work here is in better condition now than ever before. Several new officers were selected, and the present pastor's salary doubled. Also, I preached a week at Gorden with 5 additions. I leave here to-morrow for Nashville, Tenn.—L. E. CROUCH.

OREGON.—Corvallis, Aug. 24.—Six have taken membership with the church since I began work here, Aug. 1.—T. S. HANDSAKES.

TEXAS.—Houston, Aug. 26.—Just closed a successful meeting at Smithville, Texas, in which the membership was increased 25 per cent. Of these accessions 10 were mothers and wives from the most select families of the town. It was considered a phenomenal meeting and genuine good fellowship prevails. Bro. Earnest J. Bradley is the noble and consecrated pastor, an indefatigable worker in the Master's cause.—E. W. BRICKERT, evangelist.

WISCONSIN.—Lynxville, Aug. 26.—Five additions last Lord's day. One baptism, one from Methodists, 3 by letter.—ALLAN M. LAIRD.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in 10 minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) 2-cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis Mo.

A Chinese Story-Teller, or the Changed Story. By William Remfry Hunt (Foreign Christian Missionary Society.) Author of "Facts about China," with a Foreword by W. P. Bentley, M. A. Illustrated. Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis. Price $.75 post-paid.

This is an interior view of China and of Chinese life. It breathes the spirit of orientalism. It is a thrilling story of a heroic life. Evangelist Shi Kwei Piao, the Chinese story-teller, is a most interesting character, a genius in his way, an orator of native ability, and a shining illustration of the power of the gospel to redeem and purify human life. Mr. Shi was a Chinese story-teller, wandering from village to village, and a victim of the opium habit, who had experienced all the misery and wretchedness of that worst form of slavery. The gospel story touched his heart, aroused his better nature and led to a death-grapple with the opium habit in which, through prayer and struggle and conflict and defeats, he came at last to complete victory and to freedom, and is now a wise, able and consecrated preacher, laboring successfully in connection with our other missionaries in China. His picture, which is the frontispiece of the book, indicates a strong character. Incidental to the story of this remarkable life, there is much of Chinese history, customs and characteristics. The book is illustrated with pen drawings, is handsomely bound in yellow, and is one of the most valuable contributions to our foreign missionary literature. It is the latest book from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, and deserves a wide reading from the brethren in this country who wish to know how their brethren in China live and labor, and what is the outlook for their work. The author dedicates his work to "Dr. W. T. Moore, M. A., LL. D., from whom I first learned to interpret the story of the Christ."

Miracles and Supernatural Religion. By James Morris Whiton, Ph. D., New York, The Macmillan Company, 1903.

The object of this little volume, as the author explains it, is "to clarify current ideas of miracle and the supernatural, so as to find firm holding ground for tenable positions in the present 'drift period' of theology." The object is a most worthy one, and the work contributes some valuable thoughts to that end. The work bears evidence, however, that the author's thought is, itself, in a transition stage, and his thinking has not been properly correlated, one part being out of harmony with another. The author's contention that the miracle does not occupy the place which it once occupied among the evidences, is probably true, and that there has been a corresponding increase in the ethical value of the biblical content as evidence, is also true. When the author argues, however, that the immanence of God in nature should lead us to expect the miracle as much to-day as at any former time, he seems to us to leave out of the problem an important consideration, namely, that in the introduction of the supernatural as a new and higher cause into the sphere of what we call the natural, God has occasion or motive for such phenomena, and if such phenomena are not needed to-day, then we ought not to expect them. It is not a question of possibility, but a question as to the divine method which always adapts itself to human need.

The effort of the author to make the reported raisings from the dead, in the New Testament, more credible by treating them as resuscitations from apparent death, is, in our judgment, the weakest and most unfortunate part of the book, and is wholly unnecessary in view of what the author so well states in subsequent chapters. The argument to show that Lazarus was not actually dead, not only lacks cogency and convincing power, but we regret to say it seems to us to lack reverence for Him who wrought the work and whose whole character should relieve Him from the suspicion of playing a part in a sort of make-believe domestic tragedy, which had no more solid basis of fact than a mere trance.

The strongest part of the book, and one which entirely supersedes the necessity for his chapter on resuscitations, is Chapter V, which treats of biblical miracles as "the effluence of extraordinary lives." "Now all of the inexplicable, inimitable reality that at any time has to be left by the baffled intellect as an unsolved wonder under the name of miracle, is just that,—the natural product of an extraordinary endowment of life. . . . The works of which any man is naturally capable are conditioned by the psychical quality of his life and its power to use the forces of nature." This is only saying that if the works of Christ are extraordinary, so is his nature and life, and that there is the same harmony between the wonders which he wrought and the life which he possessed, that there is between the works of an ordinary man and his ordinary life. Why, then, waste time and ingenuity in trying to make the reported miracles of Christ more credible by making them less wonderful? Was not his life more wonderful than any of his deeds?

The virgin birth of Jesus, and what the author calls his "physical resurrection," are held to be matters not of fundamental importance, since they are not essential to the belief in the incarnation and in the continuous life of Christ. Here again the author seems to do grave injustice to the New Testament record. On the whole we should say that the author's point of view, as relates to these doubtful chapters, is not likely to be permanent, for it is not satisfactory, and he is likely either to believe more or less than he now does.

The Quiet Hour

Dedication.

To Thee, our heavenly Father, do we dedicate this column to be devoted to the cultivation of a deeper knowledge of our relation to Thee and to a more vital experience of Thy presence and grace. May Thy Holy Spirit, our Helper and Guide, aid all who may herein seek to know Thee better and to love Thee more, to come into that fullness of joy and of peace found only in walking with Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

It is not simply nor chiefly by what the editor may himself say in this column that he hopes to feed and nurture the spiritual life of the reader, but rather by choicest thoughts, culled here and there from those who have walked with God, and especially by leading the soul into the habit of meditation on the deeper things of the spirit, and of private prayer. If the early morning hour may be selected for this quiet meditation, before the mind is disturbed by the cares of the day, that is much to be desired. But by all means let there be some corner of the day in which you may shut yourself out from the world and have a little time to take your spiritual reckoning.

To Do My Best.

To love someone more dearly every day,
To help a wand'ring child to find his way,
To ponder o'er a noble thought and pray
And smile when evening falls.

To follow truth as blind men long for light,
To do my best from dawn of day till night,
To keep my heart fit for His holy sight,
And answer when he calls.

—Maude Louise Ray, in Harper's Magazine.

Unconscious Signs.

Men carry unconscious signs of their life about them. Those that come from the forge, and those from the lime and mortar, and those from the humid soil, and those from dusty travel bear signs of being workmen and of their work. One need not ask a merry face or a sad one whether it hath come forth from joy or grief. Tears and laughter tell their own story. Should one come home with fruit, we say: "Thou art come from the orchard;" if with hands full of wild flowers: "Thou art from the fields;" if one's garments smell of mingled odors, we say: "Thou hast walked in a garden." But how much more, if one hath seen God, hath held converse of hope and love, and hath walked in heaven, should he carry in his eye, his words and his perfumed raiment, the sacred tokens of divine intercourse.

—Henry Ward Beecher.

Where His Footprints Lead.

There are two sides of life's road—the side on which are lying the wounded, the suffering, the needy, the despoiled, the dying, and the "other side." The "other side" is a well-trodden side. It is the easier side to go on. There is nothing to interrupt us. We do not need to lose time in stopping to help people who are sick, weak, fainting, wounded, or in any want or trouble. We shall get along faster on this side and shall save ourselves a great deal of inconvenience and annoyance, and much uncomfortable feeling. But this "other side" bears none of the footprints of Jesus.

Peace! Be still!

O my heart! contend not thou!
What befalls thee is God's will—
Peace! Be still!

Peace! Be still!

God will make the riddle plain;
Wait His word and bear His will—
Peace! Be still!

Hold thou still!
Though the good Physician's knife
Seems to touch thy very life,
Death alone He means to kill—
Hold thee still!

Give us grace, we beseech Thee, our heavenly Father to spend this day so as to meet with Thy approval. Help us to know our weaknesses in order that we may seek strength from Thee to fortify ourselves against the temptations of the day. Open our eyes that we may see opportunities for doing good and for blessing others. Keep us from idleness, from self-indulgence, from covetousness, from evil thoughts, from unkind words and from vain desires. When the evening shadows fall, may it be that we shall have made one day's pilgrimage toward our Father's house. And may the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep our minds and hearts, through Jesus Christ our Lord! Amen.

Pebbles From the Beach.

Any mosquitoes? No. They live in Jersey. It is said if you were to write the figure 1 in Philadelphia and then hitch a string of ciphers reaching all the way down to Atlantic City you would still be several myriads short of the actual number of these festive insects that prey this summer on Jersey boarders. Some one compares their midnight music to the roar of a railroad train.

Among a lot of inmates at the the asylum for the insane, they say the most conspicuous is a long-haired man who sits by the window drumming his fingers excitedly on the window sill as if playing a piano. "What was the cause of his aberration?" asked a visitor. "His is a peculiar case," answered the keeper. "He is a German musician. He was down at Asbury Park playing the piano. Mosquitoes were thick; they got on his music sheets and he unobservedly played the mosquitoes for notes. The harmonies resulting were more beautiful than any he had ever heard before. He became enraptured, but the mosquitoes flew away and a repetition was impossible. Ever since then he is seeking for the combination. It was 'the lost chord.'"

Miles and miles you may stroll along this beach at Bethany and never tire, so bracing is the air, so noble the outlook, so entrancing the sea. Here are pebbles of all sorts and sizes and colors and forms. Here are fiddlers and crabs and sea eggs and turtles and strange weeds and fish cast up from the deep sea caverns. Here are shells of great beauty and variety, univalves and bivalves, fossil and recent, spiral and plain, conchs and mussels of every hue and form. Take these home with you and they tell a story that never grows tame.

"Old shell of the sea, you that sing
Of the place of your birth and your dreams,
I will hold you this day till you bring
A sea thought to cool Sol's fierce beams.

"Ah! The roar of the wind's in my ear,
And the beat of the sea's on my brain.
The dash of the surf I hear,
The hush and the rush of the rain.

"I can see the flash of its wing
As a white gull slants to the foam.
And the glint of the sails that bring
A ship to the port of home.

"What care I for hill or for stream?
What care I for dull hum of bees?
I will go with my shell, and dream
Of the laugh and the wrath of the seas."

Come over and see for yourself. Geologists tell us the Atlantic coast is slowly sinking. According to our United States Geological Survey the subsidence is about one foot in a century. It is operating like the force that hardens the ruby in a million years. You should see and enjoy it while you have opportunity, before it subsides utterly, or you go hence where "there shall be no more sea."

A Great Railroad.

It may be truthfully said that railroads, more than any other medium, make a great city. St. Louis is truly great in her railroads, having some twenty-one important lines terminating within her borders.

One of the most important of these roads to St. Louis is the WABASH LINE, from the fact that it draws the commerce of nearly all sections of the country to this metropolis, as a magnet draws kindred metals to itself.

The great arms of this growing system reach to Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Albia and Ottumwa, Ia.; Chicago, Toledo, Detroit and Buffalo, and attract business from beyond these important gateways, even from the remote Pacific Coast, the extreme Northwest, the Great Lakes and the Atlantic borders.

It is commercially aggressive, and in its never ceasing activity is to-day reaching its great steel tentacles toward Pittsburg, Pa., and Baltimore, Md. In a little more than a year these two beehives of industry and all their tributary territory will be bound to St. Louis by the continuous rails of the WABASH.

Its through-car system is perfect, running solid, fully equipped trains for night and day service to Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Toledo, Niagara Falls and Buffalo, and through sleeping cars to New York, Boston, Montreal, Denver, Portland, Ore., Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Its train equipment is modern in every particular, there having recently been placed in service many new passenger cars consisting of Observation-Cafe and Library Cars, Reclining Chair Cars, Dining Cars, Day Coaches and Combination smoking and Baggage Cars, which are models of beauty and neatness, representing the highest state of development in car building.

This road will be called upon to transport hundreds of thousands of visitors to the World's Fair in 1904, and its facilities will be found ample for so gigantic an undertaking.

THE WABASH is essentially a St. Louis line, having its General Officers, from the President down, located here, and has an army of employees, necessary to carry on this vast system, who are citizens of St. Louis.

It spends its money largely in St. Louis and it has the interest of St. Louis always in mind.

Truly this is "A GREAT RAILROAD," and above all things, it is a St. Louis railroad.

Song of the Lightning.

By Walter S. Smith.

I have my home in the angry cloud,
I speak in thunder's roar.
I shiver at sea the mainmast proud,
And I rend the rocks ashore.
I tear and torture the stoutest tree
In all the woodland plain;
I dance and play in ecstatic glee
When heavy falls the rain.

I leave my home in the tempest car,
And visit the scenes of earth.
I speed the tidings of trade and war,
Of sorrow and pride and mirth.
I run the motor; I turn the wheel;
I light; I cook; I spin;
I play the wizard; I print; I heal;
The race with the light I win.

I stand for horses without their feed,
For steam power without its gear;
For wind, for water, and never need
A moment's rest a year.
I have no eyes, I could use no ears;
I suffer no heat nor cold.
I could work right on a thousand years
And grow not lame nor old.

Oh, I am a worker of wondrous mien!
No rival at all have I.
My service and usefulness are seen
In earth and sea and sky.
I own no master, confess no mate,
Obey no ruling will—
Save that of man, who on earth is great,
And God who is greater still.

Roy's Gymnasium Ticket.

"Mother, can't I buy a ticket to the gymnasium for this summer?" asked Rob Royse.

"How much does it cost?"

"Four dollars; but that includes baths, and—and just lots of things."

"Could your little brother go in on your ticket?"

"No, course not, but—"

"Then I am sure we can't afford it, Rob," she said, firmly.

"But, mother, I need it so! I'm all stooped over and weak-armed, and thin as a rail," he pleaded.

Mrs. Royse sighed, for what Rob said was true, and her great anxiety was to see her two boys grow strong and straight. Still, they could hardly afford the four dollars just now, and she could not give to one and not other. So she answered quietly.

"Alden needs it, too, dear," adding after a pause, "I wonder if we could not have a gymnasium of our own?"

"If we had a big barn we could, but we can't stand up in our coal-shed."

"What about the back yard—an outdoor gymnasium?"

"That big, old bare lot!"

"Yes. It needs to be big and bare, and the high fence around it is just the thing. The dead apple tree will make a fine hold for our swinging ropes, and we can easily fix up the place for basket ball, horizontal bars, and all those things."

"And we'll have swinging ladders," put in Rob, suddenly all enthusiasm, "and Dollard Wright has a pair of saw horses he'll give us. Say, mother, wouldn't it be nice to have Dollard in our gym?"

Mrs. Royse looked dubious. "We don't want a crowd of boys—it would soon give us trouble; but three would make it nicer than two, so if you promise to ask no one else, you may have him in it."

"And between us we have money enough to buy our Indian clubs right off. Mayn't I go over and tell him about it?"

Away he bounded, leaving his mother smiling over her work and planning how to transform the ugly back yard into a first-class gymnasium.

"I'll make them a floor-mat by sewing together those two old mattresses in the attic, and covering them with denim. It can be kept in the lattice porch at night. The best thing about the plan is that the boys are developing their muscles and they are in the open air at the same time, and happy at home where I can be with them. Maybe I shall get a little physical culture myself!" laughed the wise little woman.

That night the charter members of the Royse gymnasium held a caucus as Rob called it, and the most enthusiastic member of all was Mr. Royse himself.

"The first thing we must do will be to rake and clean the yard till it looks like new," he said. "Then I'll see that the ropes are up good and strong. If a punching-bag doesn't cost too much, we will have one in the corner."

This was greeted with cheers, Dollard exclaiming: "Oh, let me buy that! Father was going to give me a gym ticket, and I'll just take the four dollars to get apparatus. We can invent so many nice games with the apparatus."

"I know one already!" cried Alden. "It's to put a tin can—an opened one—on the end of a pole, and see how many times you can throw it up and catch it on the pole again. It takes lots of practice."

The older boys smiled over this, but Mrs. Royse declared that it would be fine training for the muscles of the back. Although they tried it next day "just for Alden's sake," Rob and Dollard got plenty of fun out of the tin cans during that jolly summer.

Indeed the whole gymnasium was a grand success. To be sure no grass grew in the Royses' back yard that year; but there are many things better than grass. The boys developed some respectably big muscles, and became very skillful in their games. And since there were only three of them and it takes four to play most games, Mrs. Royse was often coaxed to leave her work and join them.

When she declared she was "getting more physical culture than the house-work could stand," the boys resolved to help. They washed dishes, made beds, swept rooms, and, in fact, as Dollard said, they "turned girl, so that she could turn boy when the work was done."

"We're a Mutual Aid Society," she explained to Mr. Royse, while Alden whispered, confidentially: "Do you know, father, I never used to love mother as much as I do now. She's so jolly and always plays so fair!"

When fall came, Mrs. Wright offered the use of her big attic for the winter, and here, though somewhat hampered by low rafters, the boys continued their muscle training.

"Are you satisfied with your summer's gymnasium ticket, Rob?" asked Mrs. Royse, with a smile, as she helped him gather up his schoolbooks on the opening day.

"Well, I guess so!" he exclaimed, heartily. "And it didn't cost four dollars, either, did it?"

"No. Do you notice how sturdy Alden has grown during the summer? He looks like a different boy."

"Sure enough! And Dollard and I have got biceps like a blacksmith's. Just feel that! I tell you mother, it's funny that every boy doesn't get up a gym of his own. Don't you think so?"

The Lost Cap.

He hunted through the library,
He looked behind the door,
He searched where baby keeps his toys
Upon the nursery floor;
He asked the cook and Mary,
He called mamma to look,
He even started sister up
To leave her Christmas book.

He couldn't find it anywhere,
And knew some horrid tramp
Had walked in through the open gate
And stolen it, the scamp!
Perhaps the dog had taken it
And hidden it away;
Or else perhaps he's chewed it up
And swallowed it in play.

And then mamma came down the stairs,
Looked through the closet door,
And there it hung upon its peg,
As it had hung before.
And Tommy's cheeks turned rosy red
Astonished was his face;
He couldn't find his cap—because
'Twas in its proper place!

An Entertaining Evening.

There is usually a period in every young man's life when his idea of having a good time means being away from home. He forgets what the father of the young man in this story from the New York Times took effective means to make his son remember. The young man had to work till 6 o'clock, and had got into the habit of staying down-town to dinner and spending his evenings at the theatre or in calling on friends. One afternoon if father came to him and asked him his he had any engagement for the evening. The young man had not.

"Well, I'd like to have you go somewhere with me."

The young man himself tells what happened: "All right," I said, "Where shall I meet you?" "He suggested the Columbia Hotel at half-past seven; and I was there, prepared for the theatre and lecture on late hours. He had combined the two on several previous occasions. But when he appeared, he said he wanted me to call with him on a lady. 'One I knew quite well when I was a young man,' he explained.

"We went out and started straight for home. 'She is staying at our house,' he said. 'I thought it strange that he should have made the appointment for the Columbia under those circumstances, but I said nothing.

"Well, we went in, and I was introduced with all due formality to my mother and my sister. struck me as funny, and "The situation I started to laugh, but the laugh died away. None of the three even smiled. My mother and my sister shook hands with me, and my mother said she remembered me as a boy, but hadn't seen much of me lately. Then she invited me to be seated.

"It wasn't a bit funny then, although I can laugh over it now. I sat down, and she told me one or two anecdotes of my boyhood, at which we all laughed a little. Then we four played games for awhile. When I finally retired I was invited to call again. I went upstairs feeling pretty small and doing a good deal of thinking."

"And then?" asked his companion. "Then I made up my mind that my mother was an entertaining woman and my sister a bright girl.

"I'm going to call again. I enjoy their company and intend to cultivate their acquaintance."—Youth's Companion.

Training His Mother.

We are told that now-a-days the children are doing their best to educate the parents. With his inimitable touch Mr. Barrie, in "The Little White Bird," writes these suggestive lines of the small boy who educated his mother in truth-telling:

Heaven help all mothers if they be not really dears, for their boy will certainly know it in that strange hour of the day when every mother stands revealed before her little son. That dread hour ticks between six and seven; when children go to bed later the revelation has ceased to come. He is lapt in for the night now and lies quietly there, madam, with great, mysterious eyes fixed upon his mother. He is summing up your day. Nothing in the revelations that kept you together and yet apart in play time can save you now; you two are of no age, no experience of life separates you; it is the boy's hour and you have come up for judgment. "Have I done well to-day, my son?" You have got to say it, and nothing may you hide from him; he knows all. How like your voice has grown to his, but more tremulous, and both so solemn, so unlike the voice of either of you by day.

"You were a little unjust to me to-day about the apple; were you not, mother?"

Stand there, woman, by the foot of the bed and cross your hands and answer him.

"Yes, my son, I was. I thought—"

But what you thought will not affect the verdict.

"Was it fair, mother, to say that I could stay out till six, and then pretend it was six before it was six?"

"No, it was very unfair; I thought—"

"Would it have been a lie if I had said it was quite six?"

"Oh, my son, my son! I shall never tell you a lie again."

"No, mother, please don't."

"My boy, have I done well to-day on the whole?"

Suppose he were unable to say yes?

The Laughter of Fools.

Ecc. 7:6; Eph. 4:29; 5:4.

A cheap and easy sort of jesting is deplorably common, and the pity is that it is so mischievous. It degrades the Bible and robs it of its sacred efficacy. It is told of a sculptor that he once labored on a block of marble till he had carved it into the image of a Greek god. It was a masterpiece, and he surveyed it with just pride. In his absence a silly wag got into his studio and, thinking to be funny, put a slouch hat on the head of the statue and gave it a moustachion with a burned cork. The sculptor returned and, to his indignation and disgust, beheld his god transformed into a leering rake. Cursing the fool, he undid his idiotic handiwork; but his pride in the statue was gone. Whenever he looked at it, he seemed to see in it that silly disguise, its godlike smile transformed into a maudlin simper. And is it not thus that it fares with the Bible when fools lay their profaning hands upon it? There are passages which have been ruined for the sacred use of spiritual edification. The fool has handled them, and wherever one reads them, some inane witticism obtrudes itself. Let us resolutely refrain from this manner of jesting, and stoutly set our faces against it. It is reckoned a crime to poison the wells from which men drink; and surely it is a still greater crime to pollute with pernicious folly the sacred fountains of spiritual life.—Current Anecdote.

To Cure a Husband.

How to cure a husband. It is a question you hear put forth every day. A wife, if she be a wise woman, will set herself to find out her husband's best side, and, having found it, persuade the man to live up to it.

Set up an ideal before a man, let him think that to you he is that ideal, and the chances are a thousand to one that he will try to live up to it.

If he is mean and selfish, make him think he is generous, and you will have cured half his meanness before he knows it. If he is bad tempered and full of crochets, din it into him morning, noon and night that he is good temper itself, and (always supposing that the original bad temper does not arise from ill-health and physical suffering) it will not take very long to sweeten it.

If he is morbidly jealous, don't be a fool and show him that you are afraid to speak civilly to any other man in his presence. He will begin to think he has good grounds for his jealousy then. But let him see that in your eyes at least no man can possibly come up to him in point of physical and mental attractions.

Place him on a pedestal, make a hero of him, and in spite of himself he will be forced to live up to the character, and will feel himself, without any words of yours, how absurd his jealousy is. If a man's wife thinks him perfection, he need fear no envy of lesser mortals.

If he is one of those fussy, interfering, domestic sort of men, just try to make him feel that in your eyes he is the quintessence of everything manly, and that such small details are quite beneath his notice. He will soon give up interfering.

If he is prodigal and reckless, coax him to save; don't always be taunting him with his extravagance.

Above all, if you are a wise woman, don't try to argue a husband—or, for the matter of that, anybody—out of any of the above or any other faults.

Moreover, let it not be forgotten that matrimonial arguing is but too apt to degenerate into nagging, and a nagging wife never had any real influence over a husband yet.—The Welcome.

Self-Irrigating Crops.

Prof. W. H. Wiley, of the Agricultural Department, is sometimes as great a wag as he is a chemist, as the following will show. In a recent speech he said:—

"I simply wish to mention, without exactly recommending it, this suggestion from an agricultural source. It comes from a man who proposes to plant onions with his potatoes, with the idea that the tear-making qualities of his onions may act on the eyes of the potatoes, and make the latter crop self-irrigating."

Popular Hymns No. 2.

By C. C. CLINE.

The ruling purpose of the author has been to give to the public a worthy successor of Popular Hymns. He has not sought to duplicate it, but to make a book as well adapted to the new methods of Church, Sunday-school and C. E. work as the first was to the conditions twenty years ago when Popular Hymns was launched upon its long and useful career. POPULAR HYMNS No. 2 is better than its predecessor, not because it contains better music, but because the music is better adapted to the present wants of all the working forces of the army of the Lord.

Evangelists will find the Gospel Proclamation in Song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

Choristers will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations and doxologies specially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

Christian Endeavorers will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-inspiring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing. The Solos, Duets, and Quartettes may be impressively used to enrich every session of the Society.

S. S. Superintendents who believe the Sunday-school should be the nursery of the church, the church at work saving the young, will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church.

Pastors who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed will NOT find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting, for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services. He will find that an expensive hymnal will not be needed unless it be to keep in style.

Like its predecessor, IT IS AN ALL ROUND BOOK.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

Clarence Per Lee, Grand Rapids, Mich.: "This year the newsboys went to Muskegon for their picnic. One division of 8 cars went over the Pere Marquette, that of 9 went over Grand Rapids and Indiana roads. At Muskegon they united, and two huge Pere Marquette engines hurried them to Lake Michigan Park, 5 miles away. They arrived at 8:30. Until 10 the time was devoted to bathing and playing in the sand. The beach was strewn with clothes for about half a mile. Then came the greased pole contest. A large pole was extended out over the water from a small bathing-pier. It was well greased. At its farther end was a small flag. The one who walked to the end of the pole and seized the flag was to receive $2. After several failed, one reached the flag and seized it before he fell off into the water. Then one-dollar prizes were offered, and 9 out of the remaining 78 got dollar prizes." (Were you a niner, or seventy-eight?) "Next on the program was lunch. The beach was deserted as quickly as it had been populated. The count of tickets showed that 1,245 newsboys were standing in line. The lunches had previously been taken from the car to long tables. As they marched by each boy handed in his ticket and received his lunch and a tin cup of lemonade. Last of all was catching the greased pig, which furnished all kinds of fun. Imagine Mr. Taylor, the manager of the circulation department, holding a rope to the other end of which is fastened a greased pig. Problem, How can Mr. Taylor get the rope off Mr. Pig without getting some of that grease on his picnic clothes? The boys were so eager to capture the pig, they did not give him half a chance to show what sort of pig he was. They fell all over him in football fashion and downed him before he had gone 50 yards. It was decided unfair, and there was a third trial before his pigship had a good start for the timber. He made a fine run for it, but two boys captured him and split his cost. The chasers were a motley array. Some were in bathing costume, some in old clothes brought from home, others in their Sunday's best, much to the damage of the latter. After the pig chase there was another stampede for the beach. The more weary trailed through the sand to the track where the train was switched. By a quarter to one, when the first warning whistle blew, most were aboard. Quick time was made. The 40 miles were covered by the first section in about an hour. It was generally conceded that the 1903 picnic was 'the best ever.' My letter is so long I fear Mr. Ellis won't know what to do with it. But the subject of boys is a great subject; for boys are the stuff men are made of." (And mighty poor stuff some of it is. Boys who deliberately form evil habits are making it pretty hard for the men who are to come after them. I am glad there are so many boys in the Advance Society. When a plant is a weed in its youth, it is a weed when grown; it may be a horsetweed, but it can't become a flower. But people aren't like plants; there is this difference—weeds are born weeds, but people make themselves weeds or flowers, according to the way they spend their youth. Get a little poetry, history, quotations and Bible on board while sailing along. And picnics? Go to every one you have a chance. I wish there was one tomorrow!)

Flossie Davis, Des Moines, Ia.: "Well, I had bad luck again. I had kept 7 weeks on my new quarter when I forgot to learn a quotation, but 'if at first you don't succeed' . . . so I've begun again. I think old gold and blue pretty society colors, though. I don't think I have seen that combination. How old is Maude Kelly? She and I are in the same boat, we have to cook. Really, though, I don't mind cooking except when we have company." (I'll go to the hotel when I visit your city) "for then, oh dear! something is just sure to go wrong. Well, I guess I had better quit and go to bed." (Good-night.)

Ada Miller, New Home, Mo.: "I have kept the Av. S. rules 12 weeks and desire my name on the Honor List. I have read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST almost since I can remember. I like the Av. S. letters, but I like stories better. I would like to meet you all at the World's Fair, and be in that sleighride." (You come to the Fair, and we'll see about the sleighride later.) "I have never read less than a chapter in the Bible each day. I went to a picnic last Saturday near the New Home Shaft, saw many people we knew, and had a fine time." (We don't know anything about that shaft; won't you tell us about it?)

Grace Hord, Grayson, Mo.: "Since my last quarter ended, I haven't had time to keep the rules,—it is a busy time for housekeepers. I hope to begin again soon." (Hope you will, for we miss you.) "We had an old hen to go to sitting" (Now, where is Jessie Underwood? Let her be listening about this.) "and only two eggs hatched. We keep the little chicks wrapped up in a cloth in the kitchen, but they don't like to stay there very well. Can any one tell me what to do with them? (I suggest that the chicks be left in the kitchen while the family sleep outdoors.) "It is cold enough to have a pie here in August." (I never saw any day that wasn't cold enough for a pie. You couldn't heat a day so hot that a pie wouldn't be seasonable to my tongue. Custards are good; we had one to-day. An apple-pie is a reliable kind of a pie, you don't get sick on it, because you don't want too much of it. It goes well at supper, too, or even at eight o'clock in the night time. But a cold mince pie dents under like my teeth and melts up against the roof of my mouth like no other pie of my acquaintance. Almost as satisfying, in fact, more soul-uplifting, is a pumpkin-pie. If there is anything in a pie to make a person more religious, it is in a pumpkin-pie. As for peach pies— But I find I have made a mistake in Grace's sentence. It wasn't pie at all, she spoke of. I must give that line again, and stop talking.) "It is cold enough to have a fire here in August. Usually it is too warm to live in comfort." (I just use a sheet.) "I must close, as it is

Kola Plant CURES HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA.

Free. The African Kola Plant is Nature's Positive Cure for Hay-fever and Asthma. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unailing specific cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma in every form. Its cures are really marvelous.

Dr. J. R. Duncan, the oldest physician of Crawfordsville, Ind., writes Jan. 29th, I feel it my duty to tell all I can of the great virtue of Himalaya. Dr. W. H. Vail, a prominent physician of St. Louis, Mo., writes March 8th, that he used Himalaya on six different Hay-fever patients last fall with satisfactory results in every case. Mr. Frederick P. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes Jan. 31st, that Himalaya permanently cured him of Hay-Fever and Asthma and strongly recommends it to sufferers. Mrs. M. A. Scott, Crosby, Mich., writes March 6th, that Himalaya completely cured her after fifteen years persistent suffering of Hay-fever and Asthma. Mr. Alfred C. Lewis, editor of the Farmers' Magazine, Washington, D. C., was also cured, although he could not be down for fear of choking, being always worse in Hay-fever season. Rev. J. L. Coombs, of Martinsburg, W. Va., wrote to the New York World, July 23d, that Himalaya cured him of Asthma of thirty years' standing.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalaya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should use it before the season of the attacks when practical, to give it time to act on the system. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to The Kola Importing Co., No. 1166 Broadway, New York.

time to prepare supper." ("Three in a Boat!"—any of you ever read that book, by Jerome?)

Edna Bear, Iberia, Mo.: "I have succeeded in keeping the 12 weeks' rules. I forgot to read my Bible verse one day, so had to begin over. I am sorry Donnie Swift got lost; I fear she will lose her sleighride. On Children's Day, Hickory Point Sunday-school carried out a very nice exercise prepared by P. H. Duncan. We raised $8.20 for Foreign Missions. I am one of those who got left at home the 4th of July."

May Haymaker, Wichita, Kan.: "I have been reading John Lord's Beacon Lights of History. I think blue and old gold about the prettiest for the society colors, though I really think white goes better with blue than old gold; but I give my vote for blue and gold."

(Next week I think we can publish our new Honor List. We will have, also, a letter from Madge Masters, and one from Billings, Mo., with no name signed to it. Doesn't Donnie Swift live there? And I will tell how it happened that I forgot to keep one of the rules of the Av. S. last week.)

THE CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

Vol. XL. No. 37. September 10, 1903. $1.50 A Year.

The Lamp of Life.

No man lights a lamp for the sake of seeing the lamp. We should think him a singular student, who, lighting his lamp, should occupy himself in unscrewing it, and peeping in to see what was in it; with tinkering at the wick; with working at the shade; with taking it up and setting it down; with defending it from millers—thus devoting himself wholly to the lamp. On the contrary, he forgets it. He takes it, to read by it something that is not a lamp. It is the book, it is the picture, it is the room, it is the child, it is the friend, it is the life which is going on, that the light reveals. It reveals the nature that is outside of it; and its value consists in its giving a true interpretation. The psalmist says, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." What he means by that, it is easy to discern, when we see how the light of the Word—the Old Testament Scripture—judges of the affairs of nations; of the beauties of the heavens and of the earth; of the processes of the seasons; of the methods of divine providence towards animals and towards men. He is in living, vital sympathy with life everywhere in the great world outside of him; and he takes the Bible, as a man would take a lamp into a room to see what was in it.

Current Events

We are always glad to welcome Labor Day and to pay our tribute to American labor—the best labor in the world, the most efficient, because the most intelligent, the cheapest because it is the best paid, the foundation of the country's prosperity, the keystone of her strength and the capstone of her glory. Wherever the highest types of individual manhood are to be found, it is obviously true that the bulk of the country's intelligence and virtue is found in the men who wear caps and jackets rather than in those who wear silk hats and dress suits. Labor Day is pre-eminently the day when union labor celebrates its triumphs and its greatness. Its triumphs have been many and its greatness is real. The unions have performed most important service for the workingmen. They have raised wages, have improved the conditions of labor, and have enabled the laboring men, though weak as units, to deal on equal terms with the power of consolidated capital. That the unions have made pitiful mistakes, have been cruelly victimized by unscrupulous leaders, and in the heat of passion and the pressure of what looked like necessity, have sometimes placed the law of the union above the law of the land, is painfully true. But to make these misfortunes and follies the basis for attacking the principle of union, is both foolish and futile. If trades-unionism can take care of the enemies within itself—lawlessness, violence, love of leadership, dishonesty of leaders—it has nothing to fear from the enemies without.

The actual celebration of Labor Day is sometimes less admirable than its purpose and principles. The two chief items of the festivities are the parade and the picnic. The former is a harmless and interesting exhibition: the latter not infrequently becomes something of an orgy. Three things cause most of the trouble: first, beer; second, a special eagerness on the part of union men on this day to show their disrespect for non-union men; third, an antipathy to the police, as though the guardians of the peace were the natural enemies of honest workmen. Here is one incident, narrated in the St. Louis morning papers the morning after labor day, which shows what happened when a non-union man strayed into the fold, even though he came in the popular role of driver of a beer wagon:

"A few minutes later a brewery wagon laden with beer arrived. It was stopped, but while the men were arguing among themselves whether to assault the man, he guided his horses through the excited throng and started toward the booths in the south side of the park. He had gone but a short distance when some one pulled him from his seat and a crowd quickly surrounded him. Then the general fight started, and in the excitement the men forgot the brewery wagon driver, who escaped."

A sergeant of police, at the request of the committee in charge, attempted to put a drunken man out of the dancing pavilion.

"There is a platform about 50 feet square between the dancing pavilion and the gate, and it was thronged with men, many of whom appeared to be intoxicated. As the sergeant passed, those gathered on the platform saw that his prisoner was a union man, and a cry of 'Let's rescue him' rose from a half-hundred throats. There were probably 500 people on the platform at the time, but before the crowd reached the sergeant, he managed to push his way toward a railing at one side. Then, backing against this so no one could get behind him, he drew his revolver and threatened to shoot.

"'He can't shoot,' said some one, and instantly the crowd, which had wavered at sight of the revolver, rushed at Deatherage, and at the same instant his prisoner turned on him. With a well-aimed blow the sergeant floored the prisoner and also struck the first man who reached him. Then the air seemed full of fists, and blow after blow rained down on the sergeant's head, face and body. One man managed to slip behind the officer and dealt him a blow on the head with a heavy cane. As he staggered forward he received another blow on the right temple.

"The crowd made an effort to block the way of the patrolmen who were trying to reach the side of the beleaguered sergeant, but the officers beat them back, and soon Patrolmen Smith and Bouchein reached Deatherage. The re-enforcement was the signal for another general outbreak, and in a few minutes 500 people were beating and cuffing each other in an effort to get to the police. Cries of 'Lynch them' filled the air, and attracted the attention of the police outside the grounds, who at once hurried to the aid of their comrades. After ten or fifteen minutes' fighting the police managed to mass themselves together and slowly but surely they bent the crowd back. A riot call was sent in and wagons filled with officers hurried up. They, together with several special officers from headquarters, then joined in the battle, and some of those on the outside of the crowd grabbed up bricks. Others followed suit and in a moment the air was filled with missiles of every description. Patrolman McMahon, in attempting to catch a man who had just struck him in the mouth, was hit on the right side of the head, just above the temple, with a brick, and fell with blood pouring from an ugly wound in his scalp," etc., etc.

This brawl, of course, is not a matter of national importance. But it is an illustration. Such an episode in the Philippines or Macedonia would be taken to indicate unfitness for self-government. We are not laying this violence to the charge of the unions as a whole, but we are saying that the unions would consult their own interests if they would adopt the policy of instantly expelling any member who is guilty of violence or lawlessness whether at a picnic or in a strike. Such a course would greatly lighten the labors of those who try to defend trade-unionism as a beneficent institution.

Samuel J. Parks, the walking delegate of the New York Housesmiths' and Bridgebuilders' Union, who was sent to Sing Sing for extorting

$200 from an employer by threatening to call a strike, has been released on bond pending an appeal. After he had been committed to prison the union which he represented, and which he had been treacherously exploiting for his own gain, passed a resolution of sympathy and voted to continue his salary of $18 a week during his term of two years and a half in Sing Sing. On Labor Day Mr. Parks marched at the head of his union in the parade and was received with mingled hisses and cheers. Making all due and necessary allowance for the sentiment of loyalty which the union would naturally cherish toward a leader who has helped to secure an increase in wages from two to five dollars a day, still this attitude toward a convicted criminal is a most unfortunate revelation. At best it can only mean that honor and honesty are subordinated to the question of wages and that there is an element of trades-unionism which is prepared to pardon any crime in a leader who can help the men to get more pay. We cannot believe that such a position is held by the responsible labor leaders or by the mass of their intelligent followers. It is, as some of the labor journals have been pointing out, manifestly unfair to judge unionism by Parks, as it is to judge the church by its occasional hypocritical members. But in so far as unionism goes out of its way to honor and applaud the criminal, it assumes responsibility for his acts and must share the obloquy of his crime. There are doubtless many conscienceless and corrupt walking-delegates like Parks who use their influence with the unions as a means of levying blackmail. Several are now awaiting trial on similar charges. But this episode of Parks and the persistence of his union in championing his cause shows that the needed reformation of trades-unionism requires more than the conviction and punishment of the criminals. That would be relatively easy. It requires the creation of a sentiment within the ranks of union labor which will not uphold these black-mailers under any consideration. Political purity in a community which is indulgent toward corruption is no more impossible than honorable and wise leadership of labor if labor complacently allows its cause to be identified with bribery and blackmail.

No issue of a daily paper during the past few weeks has been without its story of murder and outrage in Macedonia. Every day brings a new tale of the burning of villages and the slaughter of innocent inhabitants. Sometimes the Turkish troops and sometimes the insurgents are the perpetrators of the crime. The bloody deeds of the latter have lost for them much of the sympathy to which, as the enemies of Turkey, they would be naturally entitled. The Macedonian insurgents are rough and savage. Their training through years of Turkish misrule and of guerilla campaigning among the mountains in their perennial revolutions, has not been conducive to the development of the finer graces of the quiet life. Just now their lawless activity is encouraged by the notion that their atrocities will show the inefficiency of the Turkish rule and will force the powers to interfere. Bulgaria, in spite of her profession of neutrality, has become so far involved with the insurgents that war between Turkey and Bulgaria is regarded as highly probable. As Bulgaria is nominally a part of the Turkish dominion, there will probably be no formal declaration of war. Turkey now has 175,000 troops in Macedonia ready to cross the line at any moment. An attack upon Bulgaria would be regarded as a movement upon the base of supplies of the insurgents. The only deterrent is the probability that this would provoke the interference of the powers.

The temporal sovereignty of the pope in the nineteenth century was an anachronism which was happily abolished. But what of the temporal sovereignty of the sultan, who is also in a very practical and potent sense the head of a religion? The indignities and oppressions which are visited upon the sultan's Christian subjects have their root in the religious question. Mohammedanism is, as it has always been, the religion of the sword. For the Christian powers of Europe to unite in maintaining the sultan in his dominions, is a thousand times more absurd than it would have been for the Protestant countries of Europe to unite in upholding the pope's temporal sovereignty. It is still a matter of modern history when the Turk was thundering at the gates of Vienna and when the kings of western Europe dared not undertake any great military enterprise without first considering whether it would leave unguarded the road which the Turk was trying to find into Germany and France. Gradually the boundary has been pushed back. Servia, Roumania, Bulgaria and Montenegro have fallen away from the Turkish dominion. But the honor of Christian Europe will never be maintained, and her open sore will never be healed until the sultan's temporal sovereignty is taken away and the sword of Mohammedanism is broken.

There are persistent rumors of an impending revolution on the Isthmus of Panama, and one report even goes so far as to give the exact boundaries of the projected republic of Panama, showing that it would be separated from Colombia by impassable swamps, so that the only approach for troops to put down the rebellion would be by water. These rumors lack official confirmation, but it seems inherently probable that the people of Panama will revive their recent unsuccessful attempt to secede from Colombia. They are very much in favor of the canal treaty which has just been rejected by the Colombian Congress. They would be still more in favor of an arrangement by which the ten million dollars of American gold would be paid into their own hands instead of into the general treasury of Colombia. If they can secede and establish themselves as an independent state, they can sell the canal privileges for their own benefit. It appears that there is in Colombia a considerable number of persons, even among those who opposed the canal treaty, who really want to see the canal built by the United States, and whose only motive for opposition was a conscientious conviction that the provisions of the treaty were contrary to the Colombian constitution. Movements are already on foot to negotiate a new treaty and to amend the constitution of Colombia, but neither of these projects is likely to prove popular in this country. If the new treaty lessened the guarantees of American control for the sake of avoiding the constitutional objections, it would be rejected by our Senate; and the proposal to amend the constitution would involve endless delays which the sorely taxed patience of the American public and Congress would not readily endure.

A noticeable fact in connection with the foreign commerce of the United States is the increasing distribution of exports as regards ports of shipment and the growing percentage of exports which pass through southern and Gulf ports. During the past decade the country's total annual exports have increased 67 per cent, while the exports through the ports on the Gulf of Mexico have increased 128 per cent. The growth of Galveston has been one of the principal features in this increase, and it has been rendered still more interesting and praiseworthy by the fact that the great storm, which practically destroyed the city, scarcely checked its commercial development. During the past year, Galveston's exports increased by three million dollars, though nearly every other port in the country showed a decrease, and the total decrease of the Atlantic ports was nearly a hundred million. As a point of export, Galveston now ranks a close third after New York and New Orleans. The great sea-wall which is now being constructed in the most substantial manner by the government, and the raising of the grade of the whole city, which is to be paid for in part by a rebate on the state tax for the next fifteen years, will guarantee the city against a repetition of the flood, and the future of Galveston as a great and growing city of the commercial New South is thus assured.

Brevities.

It is scarcely news to report that the Reliance won the third yacht race and thereby made her victory complete. Sir Thomas Lipton is not ready to say yet whether he will challenge again or not.

The written arguments of the attorneys in the Alaskan boundary case have been filed with the arbitration tribunal in London and after an adjournment for about two weeks the tribunal will meet to hear the oral arguments of the counsel on both sides. It is anticipated that a verdict will be rendered within six weeks.

A recent number of "Current Anecdotes" gives a list of the ministerial changes in several religious bodies, presumably for the preceding month. These lists are probably gleaned from the religious papers of the respective denominations. It is interesting to note the relative size of these lists. The Congregationalists have 22 changes recorded, the Methodists 15, the Baptists 43, the Presbyterians 47, the Disciples of Christ, 195. The small number of changes among the Methodists is of course easily accounted for, as they have their regular seasons for ecclesiastical migration, and this did not happen to be the season. Allowing all we modestly can for the greater completeness of the reports as given in the papers of the Disciples of Christ, and allowing also for the changes which represent only summer vacations, we still have an unexplained and unenviable pre-eminence in the frequency of ministerial removals.

Concerning Newspaper Controversy.

There is a very general dislike among the brethren of certain types of newspaper controversy, which is quite creditable to their intelligence and Christian culture. There is that kind, for instance, which grows out of an apparent fondness for faultfinding, a species generally known as "heresy-hunting." The idea seems to prevail, more or less, with a certain class of people, that if they attack certain others for alleged heresies in doctrine, they thereby establish, beyond controversy, their own soundness in the faith. This class of critics usually magnify mole hills into mountains, and any little infelicity in statement, or a statement entirely proper in itself when understood in the sense the writer intended, is seized upon and treated as a grave departure from the faith. Certain newspapers keep their columns full of this kind of matter, and there is no doubt but that upon a certain class of their readers it makes the impression that they are staunch defenders of the faith, and that without their watchfulness and faithfulness in rebuking error, the cause would rapidly degenerate and the reformation go to pieces. But among the most intelligent, the most spiritually-minded people among us, this sort of newspaper controversy and criticism is away below par, and is steadily declining.

And then there is a sort of controversy that has its roots in the spirit of commercialism, and exists more or less between rival editors or publishers. This kind of controversy is so much of the earth earthy, and is so identical in spirit and in aim with what we see in the world, that it inevitably lowers the influence of newspapers that engage in it. Closely akin to this species of controversy, and often in alliance with it, is that begotten by personal ambition, or the desire to rule and dominate things, and have one's own way. It was Luther who said that "every man has a little pope in him," and it ought not to be expected that editors are entirely exempt from this human frailty, seeing that they have better opportunities than most to gratify it. An editor may cherish this sort of feeling until it gets such control of him that he feels that missionary societies, colleges and all organized forms of work are, in a sense, his rivals, and any effort on their part to pursue their own way, independent of his counsel, is treated as a step towards religious despotism—so completely has he identified his own will and judgment with those of the brotherhood.

Now, we are willing and glad to believe that the great majority of the brotherhood are weary with all that kind of controversy. It is a hopeful sign that such is the case. We have always had a class of journals that delighted in exposing the weaknesses and frailties of the brethren, according to their standards, to the public eye. They have been the "thorn in the flesh" of the brotherhood, which no amount of prayer has ever yet succeeded in removing. Perhaps we need this thorn to keep us humble, lest we be unduly puffed up with "the abundance of revelation which has been given to us." But we refuse to believe that there is any considerable number among us who are opposed to the dignified and fraternal discussion of living questions of the day with the sole view of reaching the truth, that we may be strengthened by it. We have often tried, both with tongue and pen, to enforce this distinction between newspaper wrangling, growing out of personal attacks by the use of epithets, and the fraternal comparison of views on questions of difference that effect the well-being of the brotherhood. There are those, however, who persist in ignoring such distinction, and who, if complaint be made of unbrotherly treatment of one whose view is new or unpopular, apologize for this sort of controversy on the ground that error must be refuted! As if the refutation of error necessitated the use of unchristian methods and the manifestation of an unbrotherly spirit!

It is possible for a newspaper, realizing that controversy is not popular with many readers, to assume a sort of neutral tint and ignore all questions of difference which assume concrete forms among us. Some newspapers and some readers, we think, have made this mistake. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been criticised by this class of papers and readers for expressing itself very vigorously and decisively on questions which involve fundamental principles of right and wrong, or of truth and error. This is an extreme in the opposite direction. No newspaper, seeking only the highest good of the cause it serves, can afford to be silent on a great question affecting the welfare of the brotherhood because brethren are arrayed on opposite sides, and its opinion would excite some opposition. The principle by which we have sought to be guided, is to be neutral in nothing that is vital or important to the welfare of the brotherhood or to the advancement of the kingdom of God, but to express our convictions with due regard for the rights and the opinions of others, not dealing with personalities or motives, but with principles. We may err, in judgment, and doubtless do, but we believe that the brethren generally understand that this is the policy of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and that it stands for peace and for unity, but that it does not shelter itself from criticism by refraining to express its convictions of truth when it believes the interests of the cause demands such expression.

The obnoxious kinds of newspaper controversy mentioned above cannot be remedied except by spiritual growth and development. Like a thousand other errors and evils, they are to be removed, far less by argumentation, than by the gradual rising of the whole people to wider horizons of knowledge and of spiritual vision. The less the people want that sort of thing, the less there will be of it. The law of supply and demand is a powerful factor in molding the character of religious journalism. The offensive kind of controversy to which we have referred, would speedily vanish from our journals, if there was not a demand on the part of their readers for it. As a well-known brother wrote to us recently, this sort of malady "cannot be cured as long as it pays to be sick."

"Lost Disciples."

A city pastor asks us to write something upon the above subject. It is not a theory but a condition that confronts us. It is not a theory about whether some disciples will be lost, hereafter, but it is the grim fact that they are lost, even now and here—lost to the church and to the interest of the kingdom of God. Thousands of disciples are moving every year into our larger cities or into new fields, and a large per cent of these fail to report themselves to the churches where they go, and are lost to the cause, being swallowed up in the world by its amusements, its pleasures, its gains, its ambitions.

This is a fact. How shall we account for it? How shall we remedy it? The first question is of importance chiefly as it may help to throw light on the latter. Why is it that so many who have come into our churches, in the smaller towns and in the country, have so slight a hold on Christ, and so little appreciation of the salvation which he offers, that on leaving their local environment and going into the larger cities, or out into the wilder west, throw off any feeling of obligation to their Lord and Master, and fail to identify themselves with his people and his work wherever they go? The question is worth serious consideration. It is one of those questions that has roots to it that reach down to the very foundation of things. Has the work of conversion been thoroughly done? Has the work of subsequent instruction and training been faithfully attended to? Have these disciples been faithfully warned against the danger of apostacy, and been made acquainted with the devices of satan for alluring them away from their allegiance to Christ to the world? These are questions that will force themselves upon the minds of candid preachers and church officials.

Then these primary questions are looked into, and have resulted in a determination on the part of ministers and other responsible leaders, to be more careful and faithful, both in the work of conversion and subsequent instruction, there are other questions of a practical character to be considered. What means are used by the churches in granting letters of dismissal to departing members, to see that they are brought to the notice of the churches in the communities whither they go? Does solicitude for the welfare of these members end with their departure from the community? Does the responsibility of the church end with the removal of any of its members from the community in which it is located? Not until such members have identified themselves with some other congregation. All church letters ought to express that fact. In addition to the church letter there should be correspondence between the churches at the place of departure and the place of arrival of the moving member, that would acquaint the latter with the religious status and the needs of the departing member.

If these two points are well guarded—thorough work in conversion and instruction of members and due care on their removal to bring them to the notice of the churches in the communities where they go—and these be supplemented by proper diligence on the part of pastors in the cities in looking after members who move within reach of them, the number of "lost disciples" will be greatly reduced, and our churches correspondingly increased in membership and strength. Our growth cannot be what it ought to be until we are as zealous in retaining the members we secure, and preventing them from going back into the world, as we are in winning them from the world.

Questions and Answers.

Q. 1. Was the Jewish worship in the tabernacle, in the temple and in the synagogue identical?

2. Could a Jew legally worship in any other place?

3. Was instrumental music used in tabernacle and temple worship? If so, where do we learn that fact?

4. What is the strongest argument in favor of instrumental music as an aid in worship?
Sparta, Texas. STEPHEN COLLIER, SR.

A. 1. No, there was no doubt a development of worship in the temple service that was unknown in the tabernacle. The synagogue came in later in the history of the Jews, after their return from their captivity in Babylon, and the worship in these various synagogues must have been more simple than in the temple, consisting of reading from the Scriptures with explanation and exhortation, music and prayer.

2. A pious Jew could worship God privately in his home or anywhere else. The public worship and the offering of sacrifices was in connection with the temple, the central place for the religious life of the Jewish people.

3. Instrumental music was certainly used in the temple service, as frequent references in the Old Testament Scriptures show. No one, so far as we know, denies this fact.

4. If our querist refers to authority for the use of instrumental music, we base it on the ground of Christian liberty, along with the use of hymn books, musical notes, meeting houses, etc. If practical utility is what is meant, then the argument must be its general use in religious service. This would not be the case unless it was found helpful.

Q. What is the teaching intended to be conveyed by our Lord in the parable of the tares recorded in Matt. 13:24-30? M. K. KIRK.
Nevada, Mo.

A. This parable is both an explanation of the presence of evil persons in the church and kingdom of God, and the manner in which they are to be regarded and treated. They are not the result of bad seed contained in the gospel as sown by the Son of Man. They originate from evil seed sown by the evil one. The disciples must not, in a mistaken zeal, seek to rid the church and the world of these evil-disposed persons to the injury of the church. This work of separation of the evil from the good will be attended to in due time by the Son of Man himself. This does not mean, as we understand, that the church is to exercise no discipline over its members, nor seek to rid itself of such obnoxious persons as are obviously out of sympathy and fellowship with the church, and whose presence in it is a menace to its welfare and power in the community. It means, rather, that after all our care and zeal for the purity of the church, we must have a great deal of patience with human imperfections and weaknesses, and leave a large part of this work of separation to the sifting process of time, and to the ultimate decisions of the judgment day.

Q. 1. What is meant by "unquenchable fire?" (Matt. 3:12.)

2. What did John mean (Matt. 3:11) when he said, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire?"

3. What does our Savior mean (Matt. 6:6) by "Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret?" E. F. STUART.

Prescott, Kans.

A. 1. The phrase is used in connection with the chaff which the winnowing teaching of Christ would separate from the wheat. It means, we think, the testing influence of trials and tribulations and whatever other means God may use for destroying evil and the worthless in our human nature. It cannot mean literal fire, but as the literal fire is a purifying and testing force, it is used here to indicate whatever agencies may be employed to exterminate the false and the injurious in our lives, in our doctrines and in our characters.

2. This verse prophesies what is fulfilled in the Christian dispensation, the promise of the Holy Spirit in a liberal measure to Christ's disciples, together with the purifying influence of trials, persecutions and suffering.

3. This is a rebuke of the Pharisaism of Christ's time, which offered its prayers in a spectacular manner to be seen of men. It enjoins private devotion, the opening of the heart to God in secret prayer. It is a protest against formalism, and in the interest of genuineness and sincerity.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Or

Macatawa Musings.

Softly the moonlight falls to-night upon Macatawa, which sits enthroned on her emerald sand dunes, like some fair maiden whose lovers have deserted her. Few are the lights that gleam along the lake shore. The soft south wind, stirring the trees, and the monotonous lullaby of the waves have a soothing and half-melancholy influence on the mind. Only here and there a cottage sends out a cheery light, proclaiming life within. The great body of summer visitors have gone, leaving the park as green as they found it when the summer was young. After nearly two weeks of cool, wet weather, which sent the people home in boatloads and carloads, we are having some of the most delightful days of the whole season. It is cruel, perhaps, to say it, but fishing is better than it has been for a month, and fine strings of bass and croppie are brought in each day by the faithful few that remain. It is the late bird this time that catches the worm, and then uses it to catch a fish!

How quiet it seems to-night in Edgewood-on-the-lake! All the inmates have gone except the original pair—just we two, and no more. There is no patter of little feet about the cottage, no prattle of childish voice, and no riding down the stairway on grandfather's back at the sound of the dinner bell. Only just we two, living over again a prolonged honeymoon, walking the quiet woodland ways "thegither," and sailing and rowing over beautiful Macatawa Bay, when not more seriously engaged. There is only one cause for any friction in our relations, and that is, Mrs. G. persists of late in catching a larger number of fish than her husband, and sometimes even larger fish, which is her husband's stronghold. When she is reminded that President McKinley, in courtesy, always allowed his wife to win in any game they played, she is skeptical, especially as to the similarity of the two cases! But it will be comforting, we know, to our friends who left last week to know that the fishing and the weather are both very fine!

If it were not for visions of State and National Conventions rising before us, together with plans for a new and more commodious building for our publishing business, and preparation for the World's Fair and a score of other reasons, we would gladly spend the months of September and October here, by the lakeside, where autumn decks the woods in her most gorgeous robes, and throws the spell of her beauty and peace over land and lake. But these beckoning hands of duty have an imperative force that overcomes any desire to linger in these restful scenes. As for the editorial work, we have carried it on from this study right through the summer without a break; but there are some things that we can not do so well here, among which is attending our conventions. So, as we have now planned, we hope to be in St. Louis by the middle of September, providence and the hay fever permitting.

Speaking of conventions, Detroit is an ideal convention city. The brethren there are most hospitable and enterprising. The other churches of the city will regard us as allies, not as enemies, and will treat us accordingly. Now if the railroads will do the generous thing by us which they have hitherto done, there is nothing to prevent a great convention. In any event, the action of the railroads can only affect its size. It is bound to be a great convention in the dignity of its great plans and purposes, in the spirit of consecration to the great ends for which we exist, and in the harmony which is sure to mark its deliberations. Whatever spirit of discord may manifest itself here and there in newspaper criticisms and controversies does not figure much in our great conventions, where it is overawed and ruled out by the broader aims, the wider vision, and the deeper religious life and unity of the representative men and women of our movement. Therefore we expect harmony and we expect also reports of substantial progress and the clear notes of a forward movement.

Macatawa, Mich.*

Notes and Comments.

Even in the strongholds of Protestantism there will occasionally break out the old, old longing of simple hearts for a visible symbol of the invisible reality upon which their faith is fixed. The following letter written in perfectly good faith to the official publishing agent of one of the Protestant bodies, is published in the Herald of Gospel Liberty and is a most naive and guileless expression of that same desire which made Israel demand a golden calf and which moves Catholicism to use images of the saints as "helps" to the faith of the weak. This is the letter:

"DEAR SIR:—I wish to teach about God in my work. In teaching of the Trinity, I want three pictures: One picture of God the Father, one picture of God the Son and one picture of God the Holy Ghost, for this purpose. I want one leaf, size of your cluster leaf chart, with three persons standing in a group. Three pictures of Christ will do. I want the one representing God the Father to be standing clad in white garments down to the foot; and the middle picture to represent Christ clad in high priest's garments, with a crown upon his head; and the third picture to represent Christ clad in white raiment, just as the first picture is made that represents God the Father. And I want a halo of glory over their heads. Now if you will have this picture gotten up for me on a leaf the same size of the cluster leaf chart, and send me word you have it, and will let me know the price of it, I will send money by return mail," etc.

Our contemporary, which made such an outcry against the message of condolence sent by President Roosevelt on the death of the late pope, replying to our comment upon the matter, cites a personal letter from Theodore Roosevelt, written in July last to the Catholic Federation Convention at Atlantic City, in which Mr. Roosevelt expresses his regret at his inability to accept their invitation to be present, and adds: "I am well aware of what what your society has accomplished for the social betterment, not only of Catholics, but all our people, in promoting unification and naturalization of our country and in working for morality and decency, especially in the intimate home relations upon which rests the ultimate well-being of the entire state. Wishing you all success, and congratulating you on what you have done in the past, I am, with great regard, etc." It should be noticed that this does not express any sympathy with, or approval of, the religious work of this society, but confines itself to congratulations on what the society has accomplished for the "social betterment" of Catholics and others and for "morality and decency." Yet we must say that to our judgment it is more open to criticism than the formal message of condolence on the death of the pope. Our contemporary can have no issue with us in zeal for an intelligent and vigorous Protestantism, that is vigilant against all the aggressiveness of Roman Catholicism which looks to a usurpation of power, inconsistent with the complete separation of Church and State, in this country, nor that seeks to overcome by fair argument and by educational processes, the false teaching and superstition of the Roman Church. This involves a much more serious business than finding fault with a Protestant President for expressing condolence on the death of the pope and admiration for his personal character. The "spark of Protestantism" needed is one which will emit light to dissipate Romish darkness.

Some recent lectures, Bible studies, etc., which we have heard, have raised the question which we have often asked ourselves, whether it is possible for the average man to state fairly and correctly the view of another which he opposes. It is said of Alexander Campbell that he would state the position of his opponents with such fairness and fullness and clearness that by the time he had completed the statement one was ready to ask whether it were possible to overthrow such a position. But this spirit of fairness gave all the greater weight to his arguments when he came to examine and defend an opposite view. The art of being candid and fair to a view of things which one does not endorse, if not a lost art, is certainly altogether more rare than it ought to be. We have all heard the view of the anti-evolutionist as to the origin of man, caricatured as that view which conceives God as taking mud in his hands and shaping it into the form of a man and then breathing life into it! Recently we heard the evolutionist's view of man's origin represented as "catching a gorilla and pumping a soul into him!" Of course nobody can be found to champion either of these absurd views, but they serve as straw men to be knocked over by a deft stroke that does not need to find the solar plexus. This may serve to amuse a crowd of superficial thinkers, but it does not deal with the real issues involved.

We are not a little surprised to notice a statement by Dr. W. T. Harris, made before the Educational Association recently held in Boston, and afterward published in substance in the New York Observer. He is reported as saying that "the analytic understanding is necessarily hostile and skeptical in its attitude toward religious truth," and that "even the attitude of mind cultivated in secular instruction is unfitted for the approach of religious truth." It is on this ground that Dr. Harris predicates his argument in favor of keeping religious instruction out of the public schools. But if his premise be true, we do not see why it is not a good argument for keeping it out of colleges and educational institutions of every kind. Dr. Harris is quoted as saying, further, that "the principle of religious instruction is authority; and that of secular instruction is demonstration and verification." "It is obvious," he says, "that these two principles should not be brought into the same school, but separated as widely as possible." The doctor's reasoning is not convincing. He seems to us to misconceive the nature of religion, as respects its relation to authority. Religion, as taught and exemplified by the Founder of Christianity, solicits investigation and urges men to "prove all things and to hold fast that which is good." Christ Himself constantly appealed to men to make a practical test of his religion, to judge the tree by its fruits—the scientific method. He never asked men to accept what he said on mere authority. There may be conflict between a false idea of education and Christianity, or between a false conception of Christianity and education, but there cannot be, in the very nature of things, any conflict between the methods of education and religion in their true sense, for truth is never in conflict with itself.

The Present Status of Christian Union

AND THE CONTRIBUTION OF THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST TO PRESENT RESULTS

By M. E. Harlan

3. As a people we should rejoice that the fact of Christian union is appearing in bold outline above the horizon of the religious world. We have no need to be ashamed of the contribution we, as a religious body, have made to present results. Since men of all religious denominations are heralding the cry for a re-united church we should be pardoned, I think, if we would join in with the cry without telling them that they have been stupid not to have taken up with "our plea" before. We should at all times make apparent our interest in the fact of union without stopping to quarrel about who shall receive the honors. We want men to-day who will emphasize the plea and leave off the "our." We have been discoverers and not originators. The thought can best be illustrated by the following incident. A Methodist preacher was in attendance at a close communion Baptist service. The Baptist preacher turning to the visitor said: "We are now about to commune. If this were my table I would invite you to commune with us; but as it is the Lord's table, I have no right to invite any one." "Very well" said the visitor, "if it were your table I might not care to commune or to accept the invitation; but since it is the Lord's table and he has invited me, I shall commune whether you invite me or not." So if what we have been preaching is God's plea, then we should welcome every herald in the way without charging him with plagiarism. Yet without being in the least sectarian, it is but a historic fact when we say that for the past 100 years we have stood practically alone as the apostles and special-ists on the question of Christian union. Our fathers, including the Campbells and Stones, were pioneers in the bewildering forests of sectarian confusion. Their work was well done. Tiring of sectarianism they said "Schisms are sinful and an offense to the God of peace." For this and similar statements they were treated as heretics. In 1804, B. W. Stone started an undenominational church and called it simply "Christian." These men were the first to submit definite plans for the re-united church. They said any union not in harmony with the expressed will of our divine Lord as found in the New Testament would not please him. They insisted that the church should leave off all practices and usages not plainly taught in the word and enjoin nothing as tests of fellowship for which there can not be found a plain "thus saith the Lord" in expressed words or approved precedent. They insisted in rubbing out all denominational lines and criticised all denominational labeling of Christian work. They raised a serious question as to whether men who refused to get together here would be permitted to be together hereafter. Coupling florid rhetoric with New Testament phraseology they made graphic appeals for loyalty to Christ. Their axiomatic sayings added a new power to New Testament Christianity and gave to modern religious literature eyes of fire to search the hearts of men. They said, "If a creed contains more than the Bible, it contains too much; if it contains less than the Bible, it contains too little; if it contains the same as the Bible, it is superfluous; if it differs with the Bible, it is erroneous, in either case it is useless." This plain, blunt way of stating things won its thousands to substitute the divine creed that needs no revision for human creeds. "Where the scriptures speak we will speak, and where they are silent we will be silent," is another axiom that for sweep of vision and loyalty of purpose has no superior in all Christian literature, apostolic and post apostolic. They believed that one of the chief causes of denominationalism was that many people see the truth only in segments. Thus prayer is often used as a cudgel with which to smite down obedience, and faith is used as a substitute for works in Christ. To know and to practice only a part of the truth is the very genius of denominationalism. To know and to practice the whole truth is certain death to all denominationalism. Universalism is but the undue and abnormal magnifying of the segment of the circle that relates to God's love till it leaves him helpless and impotent as an executive. To have seen the other segment of the circle that relates to the "chosen" and tells of the needs of penitence would have prevented the formation of a sect to magnify only one segment of the circle of truth. If our Calvinistic brethren had seen the whole circle instead of one segment that relates to God's sovereignty they had never formed themselves into a sect. Immersion only for Christian baptism, Christian union, what must I believe to be a Christian, weekly communion, etc., are all included in the circle of God's covenant relationships with man; but each of itself is but a segment of the circle. As important as these may be, any plea that would stop with any one of them or all of them combined to the exclusion of other segments named in the New Testament, is sectarian in spirit and divisive in tendency. It is the everlasting riding of hobbies and the undue and overdrawn adherence to pet theories to the exclusion of others that makes possible denominationalism. The kingdom of God is the dominion of God over the hearts of men and in it all Christ must be supreme—in rite and ceremony and life. To me "baptism is a picture that a clean soul wants clean surroundings." But it is more than that. It is the command of our king. We dare not change the terms of admission into the church even for the sake of union as dear as union might be. For union purchased at the enormous price of the sacrifice of Christ's expressed will could not possibly be Christian union. Our fathers insisted that in the apostolic church the divine order of admission was faith in Christ, repentance of sin and turning from it, a confession with the mouth the faith in Christ, and a burial of the candidate in the baptismal waters. Loyalty to Christ means that we follow the divine order.

The fathers were not mere iconoclasts. They were men of piety as well as men of faith and intellect. It is true that they went at their work in a little different manner from the way we go at ours to-day. But the age needed it and it does not follow that they were less Christly in spirit or more pugnacious than are we. If they used the saber stroke on those who should have been their friends it was because they were forced to do it in self defense. They may have occasionally used dynamite; but if they did it was because they thought it was more humane than to use turpentine balls as it would the sooner end the suffering. When we know how they were maligned and persecuted and misrepresented and locked out of schoolhouses and churches and public places of worship, we are ready to say that they were not only generous contributors to the thought of Christian union, but most generous contributors to its spirit, for they "suffered long and were kind." Our fathers by a strict adherence to the New Testament teachings set the outposts far in advance of the day in which they lived. A hundred years has witnessed great changes. This is no time to lose faith in the plea for the re-union of Christendom nor to cease our vigilance because others praise it in generalities. A lady said to Mr. Judson, "I would like to be a returned missionary." But you can not be a returned missionary unless you pay the price. It is not enough to admire the achievements of Christian union abstractly. If we ever have it we must pay the price demanded by Christ and the New Testament. We should be happy for any contribution we may make to that end.

Was His Message Really Gone

By C. L. Garrison

A few days ago I heard a pathetic and suggestive story. Few words need be used in the telling of it. A young man, a college graduate, who had pursued further studies at several leading universities, went to a pastorate well equipped for its duties. After four years' service he returned to one of the universities from which he received a degree. In conversation with a professor and friend of his, the young man said: "I have lost my message. I have given up the ministry. I no longer believe in the Fall, the Supernatural, the Immaculate Conception, Supernatural Regeneration and the traditional authority of the Bible. I am going into sociology."

Is the situation really as serious as the young man evidently believes? Is it not barely possible that the kernel of the message lies elsewhere than in these articles which he enumerates only to reject?

In the first place, he lost interest in a purely scholastic problem based on a pre-scientific anthropology. This is inevitable to the man who once gets his lungs fairly filled with the exhilarating ozone of this new era: scholastic speculations go by the board. Did Christ or his apostles ever lay it down as a condition of salvation that a man believe in the iustitia originalis of the Adam of Genesis? Is this a thing which can be mediated by faith, which can be individually and subjectively worked over and appropriated? Sin is certainly something vastly more real and tangible than the hypothetical loss of an hypothetical quality about which we know absolutely nothing out of our own experience. We make too heavy a demand of religious symbolism if we require it to satisfy the cognitive bent at the same time with religious need. As a matter of fact, religious ideas, however serviceable and indispensable they may be to religious need, do not pass over into science with equivalent appraisement. Man's origin is a question of fact; therefore, a legitimate problem for science. But no scientist approaches his material with apriori theories. Since science is ever in a state of flux, continually changing, developing, progressing, is it a wise procedure to pin our faith to any scientific proposition, no matter how securely established it may appear to be? There is always the disquieting possibility of science moving on and leaving us high and dry. Thus there is a suggestion of comedy in that theological enterprise which follows in the furrow of science, trying to domesticate itself in the new, upturned loan. Suppose the young man did lose Adam; he had Christ left.

In the second place, he lost 'the "Supernatural." Not to enter into a lengthy discussion of this topic, his changed attitude practically amounts to this: he has ceased to think of God as a Deity dwelling apart, conducting things here "below" by means of secondary agencies and forces, which he occasionally sets aside for some special purpose—breaking into the order of nature from a position without; that he had ceased to search for some obscure nook or corner (which by virtue of its very obscurity, evades scientific scrutiny), and lighting upon this as the arena in which the divine, supernatural irruptions take place—but that he had come to believe that God was in the whole series. Is the latter position less reverent, less fortifying and helpful than the former? "In him we live and move and have our being." It is this God-consciousness, this wonderfully acute and vivid sense of the eternally present God that accounts in no small measure for the divine unction and unapproachable kingliness with which the great originators of religion have ever spoken. Not simply a, b, c, d, e in the series, but everything is referred to God. Miracle? Yes, the world is full of miracle! Every blade of grass; every leaf that flutters in the breeze; every human personality, with its originality, its inherent power to disengage new influences; "this green, flowery, rock-built earth, the trees, the mountains, rivers, many-sounding seas; that great, deep sea of azure that swims overhead; the winds sweeping through it; the black cloud fashioning itself together, now pouring out fire, now hail and rain; what is it? Ay, what?" All this is miracle! Suppose science could explain it all by reference to her categories (which, however, science cannot do); what then? It is still miracle to the man of faith. Man is a composite being: there are two fundamental moments in his consciousness—the intellectual need, which seeks explanation; the religious need, which demands valuation. Educate a man out of religion? Not till his psychic life suffers a transformation for which there is no warrant at present. "Man is incurably religious," says Sebatier.

In the third place, he ceased to believe in the Immaculate Conception. Well, after all, this is merely a proclamation of Pope Pius IX, issued less than half a century ago—to be specific, Dec. 8, 1854. Christendom got on beautifully without it for nearly two thousand years! It is of a piece with the iustitia originalis. Pius was logically consistent. But does either doctrine belong to the essence of Christianity?

In the fourth place, he ceased to believe in Supernatural Regeneration. That young man might have become a Disciple if he had not appealed to Cæsar! Let us congratulate ourselves (in a modest and inoffensive way) that, in respect to this anti-psychological bit of traditionalism, no reconstruction is necessary on our part; we are already reconstructed. The Simon-pure Disciple would be the last man on earth to admit that the young man had lost an integrant part of his message by this element of his heresy.

But, finally, he had lost faith in the Traditional Authority of the Bible. This means that he ceased to be satisfied with an external authority; a system of ideas—fixed, static, perennially normative—communicated to man, before which unreflective submission is the only proper attitude. (Is it not a significant fact that Christ never makes an appeal to an outer authority, but always to the inner imperative? This is the fundamental difference between Catholicism and Protestantism.) For psychological considerations, the young man found it impossible to believe that the treasures of Christian experience had been forever exhausted; that any new departure is, eo ipso, an anomaly, a pathological aberration. This means that he somehow felt the need—albeit that need was inarticulate—of an eternally present object of faith; a somewhat, which by its very nature, could be taken up into his life and incorporated with his own experience. Of such is the realm of revelation. Rich, inexhaustible, precious beyond all computation, as the veritable thesaurus of holy scriptures must be to every man who approaches them in the proper attitude, this young man (no less than many another devout and morally honest inquirer) found some things which failed to find him—things which could not be mediated by faith. But this seemed incompatible with the dogmatic and wholly gratuitous attitude which Protestantism has assumed toward the historic sources of her faith. Originality, freedom, spontaneity, moral honesty seemed imperiled by a claim which the scriptures themselves do not make, and which empirical study and Christian experience do not vindicate. What the young man really rebelled against was an alien authority in religion, a false one-sidedness, a tyrannical, objective norm, which reached its historic culmination when Protestantism swung loose from the authority of the mother church and instituted a search for a substitute for that authority. What the young man really lost was, not the Bible, but certain notions about the Bible, which are not an essential part of the faith once for all delivered to the saints, but rather intellectual concepts which grew up historically.

Such is the catalogue of the things which the young man lost. What had he left, out of which to construct his message? Just seven things, it seems to me: God, Christ, Immortality, Humanity, Sin, Man's Hunger and Thirst

John Wesley's Social Work

By Alva W. Taylor

In the much writing brought out by the Wesley bicentenary, Wesley's social reform work has been inadequately noticed. It was his social conscience that led him to the poor miners of Cornwall and, indeed, to the poor everywhere, and not merely because they more gladly heard his voice. Indeed, they did not gladly hear it until convinced of his affection for them and made confident by his sacrifices for them.

We may well bewail poverty wherever found, and must needs seek to remedy its causes if we are to claim the mind of Christ; but withal we are spared the sight of such deplorable poverty as Wesley encountered in his day. In those days little children of five years managed traps in dark mines for long hours, and never saw light but on Sunday. They pumped water thirteen and fourteen hours per day, often standing in it ankle deep the while. Women worked as beasts of burden in these mines, harnessed to coal cars and drawing them through dark tunnels, bent to all fours. Men worked long hours for a pittance, and were compelled to spend that at the truck stores of the employer if they would live, and pay these, too, one-fourth above ordinary prices. Wesley made these people his converts, and others in London of like life, and to aid their condition inaugurated systematic plans long before the day of organized charities.

One of the rules of the "Holy Club" at Oxford was that all not necessary for a moderate mode of life should be given to the poor. Wesley practiced this rule all his life, and lived on one hundred and fifty dollars a year, even when his income reached five thousand. Of course a dollar went farther in those days than this, but Wesley lived most abstemiously, and gave his all in help of others. It is said his charities amounted to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

His teachings on money sound much like the Master's—at least they are a very good interpretation thereof. He said, "A Christian can no more lay up treasures on earth than he can take fire into his bosom. As riches increase the spirit of Christ decreases." Yet he taught frugality and industry, and recognized that those qualities must inevitably produce wealth. He held it not wrong to get and to save, but to hoard, and his rule was, "Gain all you can, save all you can, and give all you can." Money is good, he said, if honestly earned, and the earning of it is a great virtue, but "none can gain by swallowing up his neighbor's substance without gaining the damnation of hell!"

Beginning with these lessons of industry, economy and generosity among his societies, he made the stewards into Poor Committees and set them to systematic oversight of the needy. He selected Friendly Visitors from his members and sent them on their mission of charity. The church supplied the funds from free-will offerings. Seeing the aged widows unprovided for in deplorably large numbers he founded a Widows' Home. Finding many without medical aid, he started a free dispensary, studied medicine himself, doctored common complaints and trained others in every community to do the same. Observing the way a hand-to-mouth existence put many in the pawn-broker's power, he established a Fraternal Pawn-broker's Shop, and impressed sadly by the moral surroundings in the primary schools, set up a free school in his own house, and was enthusiastic over the results. In all these things he anticipated modern methods.

His societies exerted great influence in the labor revolutions that soon came on. The leaders of the work people were half of them Methodist class leaders, and some became conspicuous in Parliament in that cause, exerting great influence for humanitarian laws on the government's part, and peaceful methods by the laboring folk. These men organized the workers, conducted innumerable strikes, and made the poor man's cause a matter of religion—as indeed it always should be if the Christian's commission and the Master's are the same. Green, the historian, said Wesley's social work was greater than his founding of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

To the great politico-social question of slavery, Wesley gave much attention. His work among the Indians in Georgia brought him into contact with plantation slavery and aroused his conscience to it. He was an uncompromising abolitionist, and the last letter he ever wrote was to Wilberforce on that topic, calling it "an execrable villainy which is the scandal of religion, of England, and of human nature," and reminding that splendid

Out of the Depths.

By Mrs. Lisa A. Fletcher.

From the deep, deep wells of sorrow,
From chill waters of the soul,
And the dark and angry surges,
Which athwart it darkly roll.

From the deep and awful midnight,
Which at times engulfs the life,
From the solemn clouds of anguish,
And the grief and gloom and strife.

Lift us with Thy strength all-saving,
May we feel Thy mighty hand,
Stretching forth into the darkness,
Leading to a sunlit strand.

May the sweetness of Thy presence,
Give security and peace,
Help us feel Thy strong upholding, statesman that "if God be for you, who can be against you?"

Canon Farar attributed no little to Wesley's influence in the organization of the Bible and missionary societies, and the extension of the Sunday-school. His hand was in every good cause for the bettering of humanity. He did more than teach a "spiritual" religion and convert people "by the power of the Holy Ghost." His characteristic work in his own times was rather that of practical Christianity and teaching his followers to emulate their Master in "going about doing good."

His warning that prosperity begets social indifference and tends to put the church off the plane of common humanity, needs a constant consideration by Methodism and all other great and prosperous religious bodies.

Church Extension not Subordinate.

By A. B. Philpott.

Church Extension is too important an interest to be forced into a subordinate place in the benevolences of the church. It is a mighty help and stimulus to struggling congregations and is making its power for good felt more and more every year. The special effort now being made to bring our churches into line with it, as they have been brought into line with home and foreign work, should receive the hearty support of every preacher.

DOCTOR SAID

"Quit Wrong Food and Eat Grape-Nuts."

An Illinoisan who has been through the mill says: "Last spring I was so bad with indigestion that I could not digest even soft cooked eggs, and doctor said I must eat predigested food and prescribed Grape-Nuts. I changed for the better before I had used one package, eating it three times a day.

"My improvement on Grape-Nuts food was so wonderful that I concluded to use your food, drink Postum in place of tea, and to make a long story short, I have not been without Grape-Nuts and Postum since, and my present health proves my doctor's wisdom in prescribing Grape-Nuts. I have got strong as a horse and well, and I owe it all to your delicious food and Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

In the making of Grape-Nuts food, all the indigestible starches of the grain are transformed into Post sugar. Every particle of Grape-Nuts is digestible in the weakest stomach. Physicians have never found a stomach too weak to digest and assimilate it.

How a Child Built a Chapel

By F. D. Power

We have a flourishing church in Washington City which owes its existence to an invalid boy. Little Gerard Smith, a cripple, may be called the real founder of the Whitney Avenue mission, now the Whitney Avenue Memorial Christian Church, which stands near the Whitney Avenue entrance to the Soldiers' Home near Brightwood Avenue northwest, in one of the most interesting fields for Christian work at the national capital.

Twenty-eight years ago, when I first visited that section, I saw the need of a mission there. It was very different then. Just this side was the German park, with its marble Steuben, given over to beer, and near by a nest of pool rooms and gambling dens, and along each side of the Seventh Street road for blocks were rum holes of the lowest character, and one could see scores of old soldiers reeling out of their doorways at any hour of the day. Beyond, some squares distant, lived Father Summy, in a curious octagon house, and Mother Tingle to the left on the Spring Street Road, and houses along the way were few and far between. A sleepy mule pulled a bobtail car up and down the street once an hour from boundary to the toll gate, and one met scores of hay wagons coming in from the country along the pike, whose drivers were often enticed into the open pits where the veterans met their greatest foe.

Little Gerard Smith lived out here, and being unable to go in to one of the city churches, expressed the wish that a Sunday-school might be started near by, which he might attend. In accord with his suggestion, his mother called a meeting of the residents of the neighborhood at her house, on Feb. 9, 1877, to consider the advisability of organizing a school. Some twenty-five persons responded, among whom were several members of the Vermont Avenue Church. Seven denominations were represented, but all agreed that federation was the only thing and consented to work together.

The Sunday-school was organized Feb. 28, 1877. H. C. Stier, an elder of the Vermont Avenue Church, was elected superintendent; William E. Gatley, a Presbyterian elder, assistant; Frank L. Summy, another Vermont Avenue member, secretary; Mrs. John Cammack, treasurer, and Mrs. C. B. Smith, organist. The first meeting of the school was held in a building on Seventh Street Road, near the toll gate, with eighty persons present. Of all these, little Gerard Smith was the happiest. Gradually the school grew in numbers, and a sewing circle and other organizations were started. Within two months a subscription was begun for the erection of a building. On April 30, 1877, the Whitney Avenue Union Mission was formally organized, trustees chosen, and a lot, which is the present site of the church, was purchased.

It was decided to build a brick chapel. The money was provided by entertainments and by work done by the members of the school, and the donations of friends. Children did errands, and in many little ways, and by many little sacrifices, the money was contributed for the little chapel. Mrs. C. B. Smith, the little cripple's mother, saved the expense of an architect by designing the building, having had some experience in that direction. In many ways the members of the little mission got their funds together. Most enthusiastic among the workers was little Gerard Smith. Although he lived but a year to enjoy the Sunday-school, he spent that time in working faithfully for the chapel. He made toys and trinkets, which were prettily and skillfully wrought, that many sought to purchase them, and he turned the proceeds over to the treasurer.

Oct. 7, 1877, was a bright and happy day. The chapel was completed and to be formally dedicated. The people gathered from far and near. The new edifice could not begin to hold them. The President was there, and Mrs. Hayes and their daughter, all of whom made a donation toward the one thousand dollar indebtedness. The President's check was for $25. F. D. Power preached the sermon from the text, "The Love of Christ Constraineth Us." If the question should be asked, "What mean these stones?" this is the answer. That was the happiest day in all the happy life of the crippled lad. It was the crown of his days.

The work of the mission was faithfully sustained and the little school grew steadily in numbers. It was a hard struggle to get rid of the small debt, but at last the last cent was paid, eleven years from the date of the laying of the corner stone. For twenty-two years the mission continued to hold only its Sunday afternoon service for children, and some of its faithful workers began to feel that a larger work was needed, a church, a pastor, the ordinances, the preaching of the gospel for the conversion of men. Several different religious bodies had sought to secure control, but the managers could not agree upon any one of them. None of the Vermont Avenue people had for some years been connected in any way with the work. We thought about opening a mission in that section, but I said, "We must not go near the Whitney Avenue mission. They are our friends, and we don't wish to encroach upon their territory." The superintendent, knowing of our desire to do something in that part of the city, came to me and said: "What would you think of taking up our work? We can't agree upon anybody else. But if you, who were with us in the beginning, will take the school, we will turn it over to you. "We will do it!" I answered, and Ira W. Kimmel called to take charge of the mission; this was in June, 1900.

Ira Kimmel began with about fifteen members of the Vermont Avenue Church. So tactful was he and faithful and acceptable to the people that nearly all the old workers, though representing different denominations, came into the church. During his pastorate the membership increased to 200, and the school grew every way, in numbers and influence. The whole community was transformed. A man of strong personality and very pronounced convictions, an earnest and vigorous and truly gospel preacher, a lover of little children, a hard worker, and in all his principles and service broad, generous and thoroughly Christian, he wielded a most wholesome influence. Suddenly death claimed him, and his career closed in the midst of his useful labors. The little church was sorely stricken.

Without any delay a successor to the beloved pastor was called, and W. L. Harris, of Bristol, Tenn., a worthy minister of the same gospel, has entered upon the work. He is thirty-one years of age, has a wife and two children, was born in Normal, Ill., and educated at Cotner and Drake, is an earnest preacher and a diligent worker, and under his labors the little church promises to become a great one.

In all this, little Gerard Smith should not be forgotten. The crippled boy lives in the work that has so beautifully grown. The German Park is a thing of the past. The rum shops along Seventh Street are all closed. The electric cars run regularly now where the mule pulled the bobtail car which was half the time off the track and afforded a precarious transportation every hour. The gambling hells took flight across the Potomac years ago. The old toll gate is obliterated, and the city has grown up all around beautifully and far beyond. How much the little church has done toward changing the old order none can measure. The seed planted by the little cripple has performed its part in helping the Lord to his own.

Church extension, that is the next thing. Every dollar put in this fund means help not in building one chapel, but scores of chapels. It is loaned and returned every five years. That is, your gift aids some poor congregation every five years, twenty poor congregations in a century; and goes on helping long after you have gone to your rest. Every member of every church among us, every little child, may in this way share in the work and reward of little Gerard Smith.

Jesus and His Apostles in the Inquiry Room

XII. — Aftermath

By W. T. Moore

The address which Christian delivered at the meeting reported in number XI. made a profound impression upon all who heard it. Indeed, the influence of the address was so great that on the next evening the evangelistic services closed. The Evangelist himself admitted that there was no successful reply to be made to the case as presented by Christian, and as he was proceeding upon somewhat different lines, he felt the time had come when he ought to close the services. This he did, while, at the same time, intimating to his friends that he intended to reconsider his evangelistic teaching, and would probably in his future work adopt the course indicated by Christian. Before the meetings concluded, however, he thought it well to take the names of those who had raised their hands at former meetings and who were now satisfied that they were saved, and consequently were ready to join some of the churches. Evidently the audience was surprised when only about a dozen of those who had been conspicuous in nearly all the inquiry meetings were willing to trust the evidence that they then had for their acceptance with God. The difference between these and those who had been baptized was very marked. When the Evangelist called upon the latter to come forward, if satisfied with their religious position, everyone present who had been baptized during the meeting made immediate response.

This result gave a decided emphasis to the teaching of Jesus and His Apostles, which had been expounded by Christian during the entire series of meetings, and especially at the meeting when he summed up the whole argument.

It is well to state that the whole town had been deeply stirred by the evangelistic services. The preaching had, for the most part, emphasized very strongly the fact that men are sinners; it had also dealt faithfully with the second fact necessary to the preaching of the entire gospel, namely, that Jesus is the only Savior of sinners; but as the preaching had failed largely to deal with the third essential in the preaching of the gospel as revealed in the New Testament, namely, how this Savior saves the sinners, the sum total of the results of the meetings simply amounted to a profound awakening of the community to the importance of salvation, without the definite help for those who were awakened, to become absolutely sure of their religious position. Even those who expressed satisfaction with their experience, seemed to feel that they had been relying chiefly upon certain emotions which had been excited during the revival, and that, when the excitement died away, they had no substitution upon which they could implicitly rely for their salvation. They had believed in Jesus, and so far as this faith goes, they had acted wisely; they had also repented of their sins, and consequently, were most anxious to live the Christian life. But as they had never, by any overt act, placed themselves formally and constitutionally on the Lord's side, some way or other they felt that when their emotions cooled down, they had no very distinct promise in the word of God, upon which they could rely for their salvation.

Six months after the revival closed, these unsettled souls were still in doubt as to their religious position. It was found that everyone of them had been baptized (sprinkled) in infancy, and, consequently, they were not baptized in any form at the time of the revival. Through the revival they had claimed to be converted, but their after experience proved that this emotional conversion was simply the arousing in them of a consciousness that they were sinners and that Jesus is the only Savior of sinners; but as they had been calling Lord, Lord, without doing the things which he teaches, they found themselves, at the end of six months, practically without chart or compass with regard to their religious life.

Not so of those who had been baptized. It is true that some of these did not make much religious progress, and one or two apparently became indifferent to the whole matter that had been under consideration. However, nearly all those who were baptized during the revival took their places in some church and became active workers on the Lord's side. Even those who became indifferent did not plead any want of definiteness in their religious position as an excuse for their present coldness. They said frankly that the difficulty was not with their religious experience at the time they were baptized, but on account of associations and circumstances, they found themselves driven away from what had been a very definite reality to them at the beginning. All of which shows that we must listen to Jesus and His Apostles if we wish the best results from a religious revival.

(Series Concluded.)

Accident does very little toward the production of any great result in life. Though sometimes what is called "a happy hit" may be made by a bold venture, the common highway of steady industry and application is the only safe road to travel.—Samuel Smiles.

TRIP THAT PAID.

Ten Miles to Get a Package of Postum.

Somes sufferers won't turn over a hand to help themselves, but there are others to whom health is worth something. A German woman living in the country made a 10-mile trip to get a package of Postum. She was well repaid, for it brought health and happiness in return.

A translation of the good frau's letter says: "From a child I had been used to drinking coffee daily, but the longer I continued drinking it the worse I felt. I suffered with heart trouble, headaches and dizziness. Then I had such an uneasy feeling around my heart that I often thought death to be near.

"I gave up drinking coffee and tried hot water, but that did not taste good and I did not get well. Then I read some letters from people who had been helped by Postum Food Coffee and I determined to try it."

"I had to go 10 miles to get a package, but I went. I prepared it carefully according to directions and we have used it now in our family for nearly two years, drinking it twice a day. It agrees well with all of us. My heart and bowel troubles slowly but surely disappeared, it is seldom that I ever have a headache, my nerves are steady and strong again and I am otherwise strong and well. My husband has been lately cured of his sick headaches since we threw coffee out of our home and have used Postum. Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

CÆSAR AND CHRIST.

Thomas Curtis Clark.

Proud Cæsar came in strength of steel;

The panoply of war was his;

At his command men poured forth life,

The cities perished, nations fell.

He left as heritage a blood-stained tide;

He came, despised, and murdered,—
And he died.

The meek Christ came,—his strength the true,

A heart of love His panoply;

At His command men found their life,

The cities flourished, nations grew.

As heritage, good will toward men He gives;

He came, He loved, He pitied,—
And He lives.

Going to College?

By J. G. Waggoner.

The young man, the young woman of to-day, the master and mistress of to-morrow! What kind of mastery? Shall it be the weak, uncertain plunge into the darkness of to-morrow, or the skillfully directed, trained power of broad intelligence? Youth, the seed-time, is prophetic of the man, the harvest; youth, is ours but once. In it often decisions must be made when priceless results are but dimly seen. Two uniform experiences impress us. The ceaseless regret of the ignorant, that they failed to get an education, and the constant gratitude of scholars that they were wise enough and able to get an education. It is a noble purpose to desire to make the most of life. Any power, physical or intellectual, is at its best only when trained. The college training is of untold value.

As a matter of business it pays to go to college. It is said that "one-third of the graduates of Harvard enter business." Prof. Judson says, "He (the graduate) has ready command of the tool which every business man must use—his head." "Higher education supplies both knowledge and power." "Education can not furnish the brains, but it can train them, and put the scholar in the first rank for business success. The possibilities of eminence are vastly greater to the scholar." President Bashford says, "It is estimated that one person in fifteen hundred in the United States, is a college graduate, yet over fifty per cent of the leading representatives of our government, congressmen, senators, supreme judges and presidents are drawn from the mere handful of our citizens." The same is true of eminence or distinction in any other field.

But these are by no means the highest motives. Prof. Barbe said, "The educated man or woman gets more out of life, is happier, than the uneducated; for we get out of life exactly what we put into it, no more, no less." Parents usually feel that they should give to the children at least some possessions. "But," says an eminent writer, "what are these intellectual possessions which are the rightful inheritance of every young man and young woman? Dr. Butler says that they are five-fold. The youth is entitled to his scientific inheritance, to his literary inheritance, to his esthetic inheritance, to his institutional inheritance, and to his religious inheritance. He has the same right to these possessions as he has to his physical inheritance, and unless he demands them, toils for them, and wins them, he is deprived of by far the nobler part of his birthright." In other words, he is entitled to know nature about him, he is entitled to know the great thoughts of the world's life, he is entitled to a cultivated taste of the beautiful, he is entitled to know government and society, he is entitled to know about God, his providence, his own soul and God's dealings with it. To bestow such an inheritance the college joins hands with parents and pupils. Education is not like cash, or deeds, that can be laid into the passive hands of youth, neither can it be taken away as these can. It takes time and toil to make a man. There are no short cuts to the highest and best conditions. Says the president of Oberlin College, "If God wants to make an oak he takes a century, but he can make a squash in a summer." The great question repeats itself, the knocking, knocking at the door of the young heart, the possible destiny casts its shadow before, forcing consideration. What shall the answer be? Going to college?

God's Three-Fold Revelation of Himself.

By J. M. Lowe.

The universe is one because it is sustained by one God. Conversely, there is one God and not many, because the maturest study discovers the universe to be a unit. Indeed, if this were not true, there would be no foundation for scholarship, for knowledge would be guesswork. By a strange, onesidedness we have divorced God from everything but the Bible. If the Bible did not itself declare the universe to be God's own, a rational philosophy would compel such a conclusion. "In Him we live and move and have our being." In him also the flowers bloom and myriad forms of life exist.

God reveals himself first in the natural world. The first lines of Holy Writ declare that God created the heavens and the earth, the sun, moon and stars, the teeming life of sea and land, and finally man in his own image. Before man appeared, God revealed himself as a being of form, beauty and harmony. The heavens declare his glory and the stars his handiwork, and what a declaration it is! He who has an eye for beauty sees here a succession of wonders that outrun the wildest flight of the imagination and furnish a pattern for beauty that forever defies the most skillful touch of the artist. Such a revelation becomes more wonderful when we consider what a world is ours. All science is but an attempt to understand it. The crust below, the flowers above, the stars "scattered like diamonds upon the brow of night," the currents in sea and air—these furnish the material for all science, all philosophy, all art, all progress.

In the moral nature of man God writes himself more clearly. Before a line of the Bible was written, before a single prophet had spoken a word about a coming Redeemer, God revealed himself as a righteous being in the moral nature of man. In the story of creation we are told how the Creator bound certain limitations upon the actions of man. But these prohibitions presuppose the moral nature. Here, in this distant age, before the Almighty had spoken a word of prohibition, had already been laid in the moral nature the foundation of all jurisprudence, for the moral nature is the basis of law, antedates law, sees the justice of law and responds to it. All courts, all law-making bodies are but projections, amplifications of this primeval moral nature; and the transgression of God's law is wrong not because the law is written in a book, but because it is embodied in the nature of man, and the infraction is at war with the nature of things and the progress of the world.

In the person of Jesus of Nazareth, God steps out of the shadows into the realm of human life, and with him comes the daylight. It is easy to see and to say that since man is the noblest work of God's creative hand, in man must be his fullest revelation. Jesus unlocks the heart of God and shows us the Father's wonderful love. Thus in an ascending scale do we see the disclosures that God has made of himself, his power, his wisdom, his love; the day streaks of creation's morn and the transfiguration; the glimmer, the gleam and the glory.

Think how natural is this process. God reveals himself as man reveals himself to man: first, his appearance to the eye; second, his mental characteristics; finally, upon acquaintance you catch a glimpse of his inner being. He lays bare his heart. What a sublime conception this is that God walks in human form to bear with us and share with us and tell us the secrets of his heart. And how faithful is Jesus to this conception! What man ever moved through the world as did he? What man could live as did he, and "die without weakness and without display," proof against both praise and blame? Is he the one that should come, or do we look for another? Could another live more grandly, speak more wisely, die more nobly? He is better than our sweetest dreams of life and love. We cannot come to our best without coming to him, and I think though our world may long neglect him, it will one day return with streaming eyes and cast a broken heart at his feet.

Like a Dove.

By R. H. McCandless.

O happy dove on snowy wing,
Thou canst unto thy fastness fly,
When stormy clouds their blackness fling,
Across the brightness of the sky

Thy whistling wings shall never lag,
Till from the tempest thou'rt secure,
Till in some lofty cloud-capped crag,
Thou find a cleft of refuge sure.

O that my soul might mount like thee
On beating pinion swift and strong,
To some vast wilderness I'd flee
And find the peace for which I long.

Far, far from sin and sinful strife,
Secure in haven deep and wide,
I'd spend the remnant of my life,
And dwell no more with care and pride.

News From Many Fields

Indiana.

The ladies of a rich church in this city have organized a needle society. They will try to "go through," notwithstanding their wealth.

Butler College opens Sept. 30. Extensive improvements have been made and others are under way. A new athletic field has been prepared by the addition of five acres to the grounds. It lies northeast of the college buildings. The Bona Thompson library building will be ready for books, Sept. 14, and will be a sub-station of the Indianapolis city library. Miss Retta Barnhill, librarian, will have an assistant. There has been no change in the curriculum, and only two changes in the faculty. Prof. W. Raymond Longley, of Noblesville, will succeed Prof. H. L. Rietz in the chair of mathematics. There will also be an assistant French teacher. The outlook for attendance this year is good.

In connection with the union Sunday-school work, Pastor G. W. Hemry, of Tipton, visited every township in Tipton county.

T. J. Legg, state evangelist, is holding meetings in a tent in Russellville. A persistent effort is being made to erect a house there, and the people of the village have subscribed $2,500 for that purpose. With the aid of the Hebron church, they hope to make up $5,000, and thus have a commodious house of worship.

P. M. Kendall, of Columbus, conducts the singing, and we have no hesitancy in saying that he has no superior. We heard him render the best solo we have ever heard in a protracted meeting. His voice was in good condition, and the selection was just the one for his gifts. Brother Kendall goes to Texas at once to fill a number of evangelistic engagements, but will attend the general conventions in Detroit.

The Jackson county annual meeting was held at Honeytown, Sept. 4, 5 and 6. The program was excellent throughout. Sermons were delivered on Lord's day by H. A. Wingard, of Brownstown, and Harley Jackson, of Seymour.

Remember Indiana day for state missions, first Sunday in November.

E. B. SCOFIELD.

Southern California.

Your correspondent has had special work on hands ever since the Long Beach convention; hence the delay in our report. It was called the best convention ever held by our people in southern California. The attendance was large from the first. One delightful feature was the attendance of a large number of business men.

Long Beach is a delightful place to hold a convention. The custom that prevails here to have no afternoon session made it possible for those in attendance to combine a pleasant outing with the convention work. The addresses were of excellent quality, and the sermons helpful and inspiring.

More money was raised for California work than ever before, and there is a determination to greatly enlarge the work the coming year. The work in the past has been confined almost exclusively to the aid of weak churches; but there is a strong sentiment now in favor of employing an evangelist or field worker in addition to the other work.

Bro. A. McLean received a warm welcome from our people who enjoyed his thoughtful addresses more than can be expressed. He will ever be a welcomed guest on the Pacific coast.

Bro. Jabez Hall was another welcomed guest. He was greatly enjoyed, and added much to the pleasure and success of the convention.

Dean Van Kirk's reception showed him to be a favorite. His studies of the beginnings of the Reformation of the Nineteenth Century were attended by a large and appreciative class. Whatever sentiment may have been worked up against him where he is not known, one thing is certain, no man is more dearly loved and appreciated here on the coast where he is known than the Dean of the Berkeley Bible Seminary.

Prof. McAneney, of Berkeley, was greeted with enthusiasm when he appeared to give his address on the Berkeley Bible Seminary. We think it safe to say that the people of California are more enthusiastic over their seminary than ever before, and no unprejudiced mind doubts their confidence in its management and agent.

Bro W. H. Bagby, of Phoenix, Arizona, gave his illustrated lecture on the Mormons and their Zion to a large and appreciative audience. Those interested in the study of these people will find this lecture very comprehensive and helpful.

The indefatigable Grant K. Lewis made a good president. The people liked him well enough to elect him unanimously for another term. Mrs. Grant K. Lewis is not a whit behind her husband. She did her part so well as president of the C. W. B. M. that she, too, was unanimously re-elected.

Allen Wilson, the rapid-fire evangelist, gave some stirring evangelist sermons. We attempted to time his words for one minute, but soon found that it would require a lightning calculator to keep up with him, so gave it up.

Bro. A. C. Smither was much missed from the convention; his name was frequently mentioned and his absence regretted.

Word from the north assures us that the Santa Cruz convention was great in every respect. We were delighted to hear that our old-time friends, Brother and Sister O. P. Shrout, made most favorable impressions on the California people. Their addresses are reported as being among the very best delivered at Santa Cruz. We knew they could do it.

A charming feature about a coast convention is that so many people take the whole family, and get either a furnished house or a tent, and stay to the close of the meeting.

A shadow was thrown over the joy of our meeting when the announcement came that our dear brother, T. D. Garvin, had been called home. Brother Garvin has spent many years on the coast, and was dearly beloved by a host of people here. He has been feeble for some time, but remained at his post up to within a short time of his call home. A large number of us went up to Los Angeles on a special car to attend the funeral services. The Broadway Church was filled with people who not only sympathized with Sister Garvin, but who also mourned the loss of a brother tried and true. Brothers Utter, Dowling, Kirkham and Swindle conducted the services in a beautiful and touching manner.

Twenty-five years ago your correspondent decided to see his own country and study conditions from personal observation. He has lived from Massachusetts to California, and from Wisconsin to Texas. He has lived and labored among the people of the different sections. He has made a special study of social and religious conditions, especially among the Disciples. He has now completed the journey, and feels well repaid. The person who imagines that all of the world's beautiful scenery is abroad, does not know his home land. Carlyle was right when he told the American tourists to go home and see their own country before they attempted to do Europe. You who feel that you must go abroad to see beautiful scenery, have you visited Niagara both in winter and summer? Have you stood on the top of Pike's Peak, or visited the canons and waterfalls of Colorado? Have you seen the Grand Canon of Arizona? Have you spent a day on some of our lakes, or taken a journey of five hundred miles on the Father of Waters? Have you ever stood among the chestnut groves of New England, or the pecan groves of Texas, or the walnut groves of California? Have you been among the great trees of California, or gazed into the mirror lake of Yosemite? Have you taken a trip across from New York to San Francisco, or have you gone from Colorado Springs to Cripple Creek on the Short Line?

If not, I would suggest that you postpone your trip abroad till you see some of these interesting sights. Is it climate you are looking for? Well, we have it, too. Do you want a dry, warm climate? Go to central Texas. Do you want a dry, cold climate? Go to Colorado. Do you need a damp, medium climate where you may be in the snow three months in the year? Go to Massachusetts. Do you want an equitable climate, neither too hot nor too cold the year around? Go to southern California. Do you want a place where you may experience every climate on earth and every condition of thermometer and barometer every twelve months? Go to Missouri. That is where we are going. That is home. God bless old Missouri. Let it be ever so changeable, there is no place like home.

The last of September will close one of the most interesting and delightful years of our whole ministry. At that time we are to return to our native state and take up the work with the Compton Heights Church, St. Louis. Our stay in California has been one constant delight. We have renewed old acquaintances and made many new ones that we shall ever cherish with special pleasure.

When the people gather about us and cry like children over our going away, we can sympathize with Paul when he said to the brethren at Caesarea, "What mean ye to weep and to break my heart?" Such dear friends inspire one to live a better life, and to thank God more and more for the hope of a meeting where partings will never come.

F. N. CALVIN.

Jamaica.

I presume Jamaica has been brought more prominently to the notice of the civilized world during this month than in many years. Of course it is in the zone of hurricanes and cyclones; and its past history furnishes records of many disastrous visitations. Moreover, August is the month in which they most frequently occur, and often have caused wide spread devastation. We have been favored with comparative immunity from these dreaded disturbances for a number of years, the last having occurred in the year 1886, or seventeen years ago, when the writer passed a night never to be forgotten.

On the 16th of this month we were again visited with a hurricane of great force, the destruction resulting from which has been widespread. No estimate can be regarded as at all accurate with regard to the amount of property destroyed. There is a tendency to exaggerate in the first hours and under the excitement of disaster; and afterward to minimize the less keen but abiding suffering which results. In this case there can be no doubt that the results are very serious for the whole island. Houses, large and small, have been overturned or blown away, when the storm was at its worst. Soon after daybreak, the coming of the light gave some relief to the horror of such a time of confusion and conscious helplessness. The loss of life was not large. But many persons narrowly escaped, having only their night dress for clothing, and had to fly through the blinding wind and rain. The poor, frail houses of the peasantry were blown down by hundreds, and the inhabitants were left shelterless, and in many cases clothesless. The churches and school-houses, which were left standing, were turned into refuges; and many charitable persons have been making great efforts to procure old clothing and to make some new, and to send bales of bedding to supply some of the urgent need. Two days after the storm, when the roads were open (for they were blocked by fallen trees and landslides from the hillsides) I went to one of our distant stations to see the state of things. The scene of desolation was one to sicken the heart. Acre after acre, and miles of uprooted and branchless trees and prostrate cultivation, especially bananas, of which not one was left standing. Breadfruit trees, cocoanuts, orange trees, cacao trees, and others, covering all the ground in wild confusion: houses and huts down, and here and there people picking out a few posts and sticks and broken boards to nail them together and try to make a shelter from the night. All this means that the food supply of the people is largely cut off, and destitution and famine are staring thousands in the face. The government and parochial boards are striving to provide some relief by giving charity in the worst cases, and providing work for the able-bodied. The wealthier inhabitants are also contributing to relief funds, and some help is coming from a distance. A few business firms in England have sent substantial gifts, and neighboring islands have also sent help: the island of Trinidad, to its credit, having cabled $5,000. I am hoping that some of our Christian churches in the United States will hasten to come to our aid. The need is so great that they are not likely to do too much. Help at such a time is a valuable and eloquent auxiliary to mission work.

The various missions in the island have suffered severely, churches and schoolhouses and mission houses having been destroyed. Providentially, no life has been lost at any mission station. In our mission we have our full share of misfortune. Six of our church buildings have been quite destroyed, viz.: Bloxburgh, Bethel, Lucky Hill, Providence, Chesterfield and Airy Mount, and most of the rest more or less damaged. Our total loss I estimate roughly at $6,600, taking the places as they were. To replace them will cost more, as the new must be better than the old. Of course we must have the buildings or our work will cease. I hope the C. W. B. M. will have the courage and the faith to make an earnest and prompt appeal, and that God will incline the hearts of the auxiliaries to respond liberally.

This great loss has come as a heavy blow on the whole island. The banana trade has assumed such large proportions as to have become the chief factor in the trade and resources of the island. In about three hours the whole crop has been destroyed, and the trade is stopped for months. It is perhaps hard to understand just what this means. At the same time all kinds of ground provision, on which the people so largely depend for daily food, has been cut off, and three months, at least, will be required before sweet potatoes and corn and peas, which are of the quickest growth, can come in. I am sure the executive board of the C. W. B. M. will be quite willing to receive any subscriptions in our aid at their office, 152 E. Market St., Indianapolis, Ind. Regarding the hungry multitude, our Lord said to his disciples, "Give ye them to eat."

News matters have been allowed to drift for a few weeks. The secretary was ordered off on a two weeks' vacation after the state convention. The work is in hand again.

J. S. Beem has accepted a call to the Wilber work, and has begun it. J. E. Wilson, formerly of Wilber, has located at Beaver Crossing. A. G. Smith has resigned at Broken Bow to take charge of the Christian News of which he is now editor and proprietor. Miss Myrtle G. King is associated with him in this venture.

Five additions reported at York in three Lord's days. Three by confession and baptism. Ten confessions at Bradshaw where T. B. McDonald is preaching first half of August. Chas. E. Richards visited Douglas on Aug. 30. Had some to baptize. Number not given. He may locate there. F. F. Grim has been spending his summer vacation at Overton, and has preached for the church there. Had three confessions, one added by statement, and one from Baptists on Aug. 23. Has returned to Chicago.

A. W. Henry has moved to his field of labor at Nelson. His daughter May was recently married to E. T. Dimmick, and lives now at Wichita, Kan.

H. J. Young has taken work at Blair.

One of the life memberships taken at the state convention was by C. V. Allison for his 10 months old daughter, Helen Marguerite.

A Bad Stomach

Lessens the usefulness and mars the happiness of life.

It's a weak stomach, a stomach that can not properly perform its functions.

Among its symptoms are distress after eating, nausea between meals, heartburn, belching, vomiting, flatulence and nervous headache.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Cures a bad stomach, indigestion and dyspepsia, and the cure is permanent.

Accept no substitute.

The sad word comes to me that this little member of the N. C. M. S. has been called home. Brother and Sister Allison will continue the membership as a memorial.

The secretary preached at the First Church, Lincoln, Aug. 16, and in the morning of Aug. 30. There was one confession, a lady almost blind, at the first service. Geo. Lobingier, N. K. Griggs and W. M. Maupin also supplied at this church during the absence of Brother Haynes. A crowded house heard Brother Maupin in his lecture, "Wit and Humor of the Bible," on the evening of Aug. 30. Some important internal repairs are being made at the First Church.

Eastside church will serve meals at the state fair this year as usual. Brethren from over the state attending the fair will do well to remember this.

C. S. Paine, the treasurer of the N. C. M. S., spent a few days in Colorado.

We are now ready to plan for the national convention at Detroit, Oct. 16-22. I would like the names of all those who are planning to go or think it likely they may go. Let us get together on this matter and see if we can arrange a route that will make the trip delightful as well as profitable. Address all correspondence to me on this matter. The rates have not come to me as yet. Will advise as soon as I learn what rate has been granted. Detroit is a fine place to visit and the convention promises to be excellent as to the reports and, of course, the program will be good. Nebraska ought to send up a good delegation.

It will be a matter of interest to the many attendants at the state convention to know that the dining tent netted a profit of $29.58. The necessity for buying everything besides an expense of over $12 for utensils and material, much of which is yet good for further use, reduced the net proceeds. We are well pleased, however, that there is not a deficit. Will we have a frame dining hall next year?

W. A. BALDWIN.

Church Extension in Oklahoma.

There are three departments that we as a people should have an especial interest in, if we desire to be in line with the great commission, "To disciple men and teach them to observe what Jesus has commanded."

These are foreign missions, home missions and church extension. These funds, if the work progresses, must not only be kept full, but enlarged by the willing and liberal contributions of the individual Disciple, as a church, on the days set apart for this collection. Two of these funds should demand our especial attention in Oklahoma, viz., home missions and church extension.

There is no riper field for the growth of our cause than is Oklahoma, and none more needy, there being a lack of workers and homes for the Disciples.

I desire to appeal to not only the churches of Oklahoma, but to those all over the land, and not only to the churches, but to the individual member in behalf of church extension. I wish I could in this article impress on your attention the necessity of your contributing liberally to it, but also your duty to do so.

In my three years' work in the field in planting churches and building houses, I have learned that there is no permanency in a congregation unless they are housed; and if housed, they will work in Bible-school, prayer meeting, social meeting, Endeavor, and grow without a regular pastor, and without a house go to pieces.

I further have learned that with a promise of aid from the Church Extension Board, we can stimulate the brethren to make an effort and build, that without such promise of aid, nothing can be done.

Last year the Church Extension Board only received the paltry sum of $207 from Oklahoma with a reported membership of over thirteen thousand. This showing surely teaches us a lack of interest or not realizing the importance of it. My brother, the board has sent to Oklahoma over $15,000, and the result of their liberality to us is church spires reaching heavenward, Disciples housed, and the cause permanently planted in the community. You are not only interested in this branch of the work, but it is your Christian duty to give, and willingly.

Allow me to say to the elders and deacons and official boards, as there are many of our churches without pastors, and where a preacher goes once or twice per month and preaches, going in on Saturday's train and out Monday morning, thinking more of his salary than the work, that church is in every sense of the word without a pastor, and it will be the duty of the official board to look after the church extension collection just to the same extent that it would be their duty if they had no preaching at all.

Brethren, do you love our cause? If so, give, and willingly. I reach congregations and find them dead, who have been meeting in halls, private houses and schoolhouses, that if they had had a home, been housed, our cause would have been in good condition, a lot of dead Christians that would be live stones, the Bible-school going and souls being won to Christ.

The cry goes up, not only from Oklahoma to you, my brother, and to the church, Give, give liberally to the church extension fund. I hope and pray that Oklahoma will acquit herself with more liberality this year than last.

R. S. SMEDLEY, Okla. Evangelist.

Buffalo, N. Y.

The Black Rock Church of Christ, Buffalo, has lately been transferred to new quarters. It began in August, 1897, with a Bible-school organized in a store on Niagara Street, with George R. Godfrey as superintendent, a position which he still holds. The church proper was organized in December, 1897, and began active operations in the building on Thompson Street, near Hamilton, originally occupied by the Salvation Army. The first lay pastor was Willis J. Benedict, followed, successively, by Reverends M. L. Jenny, H. E. Stafford and H. J. Aldrich. The writer has, at different times, occupied the pulpit once for several months. The church has recently purchased a house and lot on Dearborn Street at a cost of $1,700, making a small payment down, the Bible-school having raised the amount. The house has been altered to suit immediate needs, and preparations are now making to build a $1,500 front which it is hoped will be available by the beginning of the new year. The present membership of the church is about 50. The Bible-school roll contains 115 names. We all think the outlook is encouraging.

Richmond Avenue Church is undergoing extensive repairs and alterations, is to be newly decorated and furnished and will be immeasurably improved. Estimated cost $2,200. Bro. Miller is daily emphasizing his influence and gaining strength.

Bro. J. J. Tisdale leaves Forest Avenue Church for a charge in the west. Sorry to lose him. Bro. Ferrall comes to Jefferson St. Glad to welcome him. ANSON G. CHESTER.

ABSTINENCE FROM EVIL.—

1 Peter 4:1-11.

Memory Verses, 1. 2.

Golden Text. Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess.—Eph. 5:18.

The First Epistle of Peter.

This letter was written to the churches in Asia Minor by Peter probably from Rome (figuratively called Babylon, 5:13) or else from the ancient Babylon. It has to do largely with practical matters, with questions of morals and conduct. The writer is not answering questions of casuistry touching fine points of Christian propriety, but is laying down fundamental principles and essential precepts for the conduct of the Christian life. Since it is written to Jewish Christians ("sojourners of the Dispersion in Pontus, Galatia," etc. 1:1) the term "Gentiles" is used to signify the unconverted and sinful world.

Religion and Morality.

The epistle presents a view of religion and morality as being very closely akin to each other. Nobody now believes that a man can be religious without being moral, though some people act as though they believed it. But there is a popular fallacy that religion is about to be supplanted by morality, that the world can afford to forget about religion if it will only remember ethics. As a matter of fact, the world would not long think about ethics if it should throw religion overboard. But even if it did, the loss would be a fatal one. Peter takes pains to show how right conduct rests upon and grows out of right religion. After speaking of Christ and his death, resurrection and authority he adds: "Therefore since Christ suffered in the flesh, arm yourselves also with the same mind . . . that ye no longer should live in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God."

The Mind of Christ.

So the mind of Christ in us is to be our safeguard against the lusts of the flesh. It is to be our armor against the temptations that come at us like arrows. This is very different from being kept from sin by the threats of law and the fear of punishment. When one has the mind of Christ the things which the moral law prohibits are the very things which he does not want to do anyway, because he no longer takes delight in them. "Lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, carousings and abominable idolatries"—these things have no charm for the spiritually-minded man. He has a horror of them as a clean man has for filth and ugliness. For him the law of his own transformed nature is more effective than any external law with penalties attached could possibly be. But though the law which makes him hate these iniquities is now an internal law, it had its origin outside of man. It was the mind of Christ. And only when a person has received into himself the mind of Christ—has learned to love the things Christ loved and hate the things Christ hated, and to place upon all possible objects of desire the same estimate and valuation which Christ placed upon them—only then is he ready to meet temptation with safety; then he has the true guide to the conduct of life.

"Be of Sound Mind."

Peter exhorts his hearers to "be of sound mind," and in this he sums up the whole case regarding temperance and self-control. A mind is not sound if it cannot control the body which is its dwelling place and instrument. A mind is not sound if it allows the body to do things which are injurious to the best interests of both mind and body. A mind is not sound if it sells out powers of infinite and permanent value for a momentary gratification of some desire of the senses. To sacrifice the greater to the less is not a mark of sound mind. If a man sold a thousand-dollar farm for thirty cents his relatives would ask the courts to pronounce him insane and appoint a guardian. But it is an even worse bargain when a man sells the steadiness of his nerves, the keenness of his eye, the clearness of his brain, the respect of his neighbors, his own self-respect and finally his own soul's salvation—all for the draught of fiery liquor which does not quench thirst, but rather makes thirst unquenchable. "Be of sound mind," and the problem of self-control will be solved.

Popular Hymns No. 2.

By C. C. CLINE.

The ruling purpose of the author has been to give to the public a worthy successor of Popular Hymns. He has not sought to duplicate it, but to make a book as well adapted to the new methods of Church, Sunday-school and C. E. work as the first was to the conditions twenty years ago when Popular Hymns was launched upon its long and useful career. POPULAR HYMNS No. 2 is better than its predecessor, not because it contains better music, but because the music is better adapted to the present wants of all the working forces of the army of the Lord.

Evangelists will find the Gospel Proclamation in Song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

Choristers will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations and doxologies specially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

Christian Endeavorers will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-inspiring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing. The Solos, Duets, and Quartettes may be impressively used to enrich every session of the Society.

S. S. Superintendents who believe the Sunday-school should be the nursery of the church, the church at work saving the young, will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church.

Pastors who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed will NOT find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting, for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services. He will find that an expensive hymnal will not be needed unless it be to keep in style.

Like its predecessor, IT IS AN ALL ROUND BOOK.

WITNESSING FOR CHRIST. Acts 5:27-32.

Every Christian must witness for or against Christ. Which shall it be?

Though your tongue be silent, your actions speak. You may bear witness against him without speaking a word.

Worse than that, you may bear witness against him though your voice is raised in praise of him. "What you are speaks so loud that I cannot hear what you say." Evil or frivolous conduct can drown out the most eloquent testimony of the tongue.

First, then, if you would witness for Christ, you must be Christlike; a living epistle which even the illiterate can understand and which can be read by those who are too busy or too indifferent to listen to sermons. Milton said: "He who would be a poet must first of all make his life a true poem." How much more is it true that he who would be a witness must first of all make his life a testimony.

But do not despise the testimony of the mouth. Words are arrows. They may have poisoned points and make incurable wounds in the heart of a friend if carelessly or angrily uttered. Or they may fly wide of their mark, only wasting the strength and depleting the store of ammunition of the sender. Or they may pierce to the heart like a surgeon's knife which wounds only to heal. "Faithful are the wounds of a friend." Testimony for Christ may wound those who are out of Christ, but it is a wholesome and health-giving wound.

But do not make the mistake of thinking that witnessing for Christ consists in saying unpleasant things. There is much well-meant blundering in this direction. Nothing requires more tact than personal and verbal testimony for Christ. It is an art far too little cultivated and practiced. Even the surgeon's knife may be made painless, and love and tact and patience are the anæsthetic which will take away the sting from the most pointed and personal testimony for Christ addressed to one of those who need it most.

A witness is one who tells what he knows at first hand. He is not expected to report rumors or to tell his guesses, his suspicions, but to tell what he himself knows. Witnessing for Christ must have this same quality of certainty derived from first-hand experience. To witness for Christ is to show forth what you know of him; not what you have heard or read or guessed, but what you know. Has he helped you? Has he given you strength against temptation? Has he brought peace and joy to your heart? Has he given you larger and higher ideals that make life better worth living? If so, then there is something to which you can bear witness. The world is shrewd. It can detect the false note of perfunctory testimony. It will not hear you as a witness unless there is a note of personal conviction, of certainty born of experience, in what you say. If the religion of Christ has become to you a real and vital blessing, you may depend upon it that all the tumult of the world and all the opposing outcries of men and demons cannot drown out the resounding testimony of your life and words.

How great is the obligation to bear witness for Christ! Loyalty to him demands it; love to men requires it. If Christ has brought real blessedness to me how can I fail to tell whom I love. We recommend to our friends the things which we have tried and found good—books, shops, foods, medicines. Why should we not be glad to bear witness to the source of our greatest blessings—Christ.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Frank G. Tyrrell.

Sept. 16.

TEN STUDIES IN THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT. I. WHO ARE THE HAPPY? Matt. 5:1-16.

Blessed is a deeper word than happy, and therefore contains it; the happy man may not be blest, but the blest are happy. Looking at the beatitudes as a whole, let us try to get Christ's idea of a blessed life. He came to illustrate and to impart it. He came that we "might have life, and have it abundantly."

I. A CLEAN HEART.—"Out of the heart are the issues of life." Jesus touched the main-spring when he said, "Blessed are the pure in heart." There can be no enduring happiness without a mind and conscience undefiled. A few days ago the Master was saying, "Repent!" now he says, "Blessed!" Until the heart is cleansed by repentance and faith, there can be naught but a counterfeit happiness; after the cleansing comes the blessedness.

An Indian who had heard the gospel, prayed, "Give me clean heart, Lord, clear like glass." Every disciple would do well to repeat this simple prayer, and ask God for a transparent heart, for the tides of sin and corruption well up from many foul heart fountains. Do you seek lasting happiness? Do you long for perennial joy? Cleanse your heart until its every chamber is pure and fragrant.

II. A RIGHT DISPOSITION.—The poor in spirit, the meek, the merciful, are blessed. For most of us this kingly disposition must be cultivated, for by nature we have it not. Pride is sometimes nursed, as if it were a minister of good; and there are disciples that cherish anger. But Jesus does not say, "Blessed are the proud, the angry."

Think of the men he met, their narrowness, their selfishness, their earthiness. And yet in the midst of such men he talked of meekness, of mercy, of peace. He was an enthusiastic believer in the redemptibility of men; and therefore he set before his first disciples this glowing ideal of human life.

Who can suffer persecution unmurmuringly? Who can find happiness in it? Who will want to enter into the blessed life through those dark portals of pain? And yet Christ teaches that there is a gateway: "Blessed are they that have been persecuted for righteousness' sake." To be wrongly reproached, to be slandered—what teacher would ever think of these as means of blessedness? Surely, the fire is needed to purify.

III. RIGHT ACTION.—Desiring and doing are closely linked in this group of Christ's sayings. If you would be happy, be hungry! desire righteousness earnestly, and you shall be filled. The messengers of God will spread a heavenly banquet for you. And with a clean heart and a right disposition, you are equipped for glorious service. Go into a world all rent and torn, and make peace. Persuade men to be reconciled to God. Show them the divine art of beating swords into plowshares, and spears into pruning hooks. Turn them from fields of blood to fields of bloom.

As salt is pungent and purifying, so are you; as light is beneficent and awakening, so are you. Never was there greater need of moral pungency, or of moral illumination. There are towers standing in our midst whose light has suddenly been turned into darkness. Who will lay hold on this secret of the blessed life? The vision of God waits on purity of heart. And when once the heavenly vision is revealed, the life will be renewed and redeemed.

PRAYER.

Teach us, oh thou Savior of men, to seek moral strength and symmetry; to yield ourselves to the cleansing process. The stain and guilt of sin we cannot endure! Save us from the body of this death. Guide us to that gateway through which alone we can enter into peace, and give us courage to pass through, however narrow the way. Fill our hearts with the peace of God, and charge our depleted veins with the divine life, through Christ. Amen.

Our Budget

—Church Extension is still in order.

—Every Lord's day in September is Church Extension day until the offering has been taken.

—The approach of autumn means the beginning of the busy season, both for business and for church work. Get busy!

—One of the best things about a vacation is getting back from it. How sweet it is to rest after hard work, but how much more joyful it is to work after refreshing rest!

—Now that the summer is almost over and the autumn days are at hand, a period of great evangelistic activity ought to begin. We hope to be deluged by a perfect flood of evangelistic reports this fall and winter. Let the watchmen upon the walls of Zion, and the men in the trenches, and the leaders of forlorn hopes, and the standard bearers in victorious assaults send in their reports for the encouragement and instruction of others.

—There are still a few vacancies in Professor Willett's "Palestine Tour Travel-Study Class. This is a splendid opportunity for persons properly prepared to make a studious tour of Egypt and Palestine. Professor Willett will deliver daily lectures, and regular work will be assigned to those who desire it, for which credit will be given by the University of Chicago. The tour will occupy about fourteen weeks, beginning Feb. 1, 1904. Those who wish to go should apply at once, as considerable preliminary reading is desirable. For information, address Prof. H. L. Willett, the University of Chicago.

—Charles M. Watson succeeds W. R. Warren as pastor at Connellsville, Pa.

—Judge Scofield is writing a serial story for the Christian Century entitled "Altar Stairs," which is said to be very interesting. We are waiting for the book. It is a versatile sort of genius that succeeds equally in law, the ministry and in literature.

—Disciples of Christ visiting Denver will be interested to know that there is a first-class hotel in that city managed by a member of the Christian church—the Ellmore, kept by Arthur E. Pierce, who is an elder in the South Broadway Church.

—The Sunday-school at Brush Creek, Randolph Co., Mo., is in a flourishing condition, under the management of Bros. Geo. Goodell and W. W. Jones, both of whom were formerly members of the church in St. Louis. A protracted meeting is being arranged to begin Sept. 27.

—A new edition has been published of Mrs. Laura Delany Garth's beautiful little pamphlet, "My Little Sister in Far-away China." The sermon is in the story and not appended to it. It is well worth getting and reading. The Christian Century Co., Chicago; 5 cents a copy, 50 cents a dozen.

—To the Christian Churches in Clinton, Missouri district: The M. K. & T. R. R. authorizes an open rate of one and one-third fare for the round trip to the convention which meets at Nevada, Sept. 15, 16. This applies to all points within 75 miles of Nevada, Mo. Tickets on sale Sept. 15, 16, good returning the 17th. Other railroads are expected to make the same rate. Inquire of your agent before you start.—W. F. HAMANN, Sec.

—The Ministers' Alliance of Sedalia, Mo., recently passed a resolution commending the management of the State Fair, which was held there Aug. 17-22, and congratulating the city officials on the success of their efforts in behalf of good order and morality. That's right. When the officials do well, tell them so. A little timely encouragement to the people who do right may make unnecessary a good deal of criticism of the people who do wrong.

—"Tell Mother I'll Be There," is the title of a song by Charles M. Fillmore which, although a recent publication has already had a remarkable history. Mr. C. M. Alexander, who accompanied Dr. Torrey on his recent evangelistic tour around the world, sang the song to immense audiences in all parts of the English speaking world with the greatest success. He writes: "It has been used to the salvation of hundreds, I believe, during our tour around the world." Published by the Fillmore Bros. Co., Cincinnati, O.; 25 cents.

—M. E. G. Bennitt has resigned the work at Tarkio, Mo., on account of his wife's health, and the church is now looking for a pastor, young married man preferred. Address, H. W. Hearst. The church passed very complimentary resolutions upon the work and character of Brother Bennitt.

—A friend in Palmyra, sends us the following newspaper clipping:

"STRANGE BEDFELLOWS."—Politics do indeed make queer bedfellows. Here is Dr. Boyd (Baptist), Dr. Garrison, (Campbellite), the Anti-Saloon League, all piled up with Tony Stuever, brewer and dance hall landlord, shouting for Folk! And the humor of the spectacle has struck none of them.—Paris Mercury.

Somebody ought to get out of that bed."

Where is "the humor of the spectacle?" We are sorry the Mercury doesn't point it out. Mr. Folk is prosecuting boodlers and bribers, and seeking to purify our city and state politics. We have given him our hearty approval in this good work, as we supposed every other honest citizen in Missouri was doing. No doubt Dr. Boyd is doing the same thing. We are glad to learn that even one "brewer and dance hall landlord," favors Mr. Folk's good work of civic purification. We should be pleased to know that they all did. It would show that in spite of their business they were not utterly depraved. Why should any one "get out of that bed?" Is there danger that Mr. Folk will have too much support in promoting civic purity? Or is it feared that Dr. Boyd and Dr. Garrison's reputation, together with that of the Anti Saloon League will suffer, because "a brewer and dance hall landlord" favors the same good work they are favoring? We do not see the humor of the situation unless it be that certain editors, presumably church members, seem to be jealous of the growing reputation of Mr. Folk, as a prosecutor of evil doers. That is strange, if not funny.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

—Read the program of the Detroit convention published on another page of this paper. It is a strong program and well worth going a long distance to hear. Besides, if there were no program at all, it would be worth while to go to help transact the business of the convention, for there is joy and uplift in business when it is the business of saving men. And if there were neither program nor business, it would still be worth while to go for the blessing and inspiration of Christian fellowship. There are three good reasons for going to Detroit, and anyone of them is more than ample by itself.

—A brother in Arkansas sends this message which may be an encouragement to some preachers who think that their lines are not cast in altogether pleasant places: "I'm farming for a living, preach to anti-missionary and anti-pay congregations, and have never been offered one cent for my ministerial work. Am still trying to convert 'em, however, and making myself extremely unpopular thereby. Have never asked pay for myself, but induced our home congregation to begin to pay the district evangelist, and have some hope that they may some day awake to a full sense of their whole duty."

A Resolution and Some Comments.

The following is a copy of a resolution adopted at the Nebraska state convention, August 7, 1903.

"Whereas, We the members of the Nebraska Christian Missionary Society in convention assembled, contemplate with sorrow and humiliation the many compromising and unchristian controversies among our religious papers; and

"Whereas, These papers are the product of private corporations and the brotherhood is in no way responsible for them; and

"Whereas, This condition will likely continue while we have no co-operative publishing house; therefore "Be it Resolved, That we recommend to the consideration of our brotherhood the establishment of a Christian Publishing Society after the manner of our other missionary enterprises; and

"Be it Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each of the state and general secretaries and to each of our church papers."

The first item in the preamble of the above resolution shows that the hearts of the Nebraska brethren are in the right place. We are in the heartiest sympathy with their denunciation of "compromising and unchristian controversies among our religious papers." Such conditions, in so far as they exist, certainly ought to be contemplated "with sorrow and humiliation." We cannot agree with our Nebraska brethren, however, that these unfortunate conditions are so general as the resolution would indicate. It is not true that our periodical literature in general is characterized by acrimonious controversy and an unchristian spirit. That such phenomena do exist in some places is too true, but to bring a sweeping charge against "our papers" is most unjust and unjustifiable.

We will not argue the case—lest the Nebraska brethren interpret our argument as a "compromising and unchristian controversy"—but we drop this one suggestion which we hope will be carefully pondered: to defend one's self against unwarranted attack and to defend the reputation of brethren who are assaulted without justification or proof, is not equivalent to engaging in "unchristian controversy." If you should see a foot-pad attacking a woman and should go to her defense, it would be a poor friend of virtue who would class the assailant and the defender together as common brawlers. Yet this is precisely what is done by those who indiscriminately lump together all of our religious papers as disturbers of the peace to save themselves the trouble and responsibility of deciding the merits of the case. What a simple short-cut to justice it would be if the judge could always say to the two parties of a controversy: "You are probably both right and both wrong. We'll divide the honors and the blame, and save ourselves the trouble of examining the evidence."

As to the suggested remedy, a "co-operative publishing house," a "Christian Publishing Society," we are not much interested in that. With our people and our polity as they are, it it would not work. Which of our official missionary papers and magazines has ever been able to get enough subscribers to come anywhere near paying its way? To be sure, getting subscribers and paying its way is not the supreme test of a newspaper, but the paper which does not do that cannot do much else. Moreover, an official paper committed to the policy of keeping out of all controversies without regard to their merits or to the necessities of the case, would be a colorless sheet which would soon discover that it did not meet a long-felt want.

A few weeks ago our Cincinnati contemporary was hinting dark things about a threatened "trust" in our publication business, and, we believe, finally claimed to have "exposed" it. We were a good deal in the dark at that time, for we had heard nothing looking in this direction except a communication from a brother who publishes a little Sunday-school paper in Cincinnati, and in that scheme we had no interest nor was there the slightest reason why any sane man should take it seriously. But now we see it all. Our Cincinnati contemporary must have had advance information of the Nebraska resolution and based its surmises upon that. But even so we think its apprehension of an impending trust is quite out of proportion to the real danger. One more point. The statement of the Nebraska resolution that "the brotherhood is in no way responsible" for the papers which are published by private corporations, overlooks one important fact. These papers are supported by the brotherhood, and the brotherhood is responsible for what it supports. The best way to get rid of bitter, un-Christian and acrimonious papers is to stop taking them. When the people no longer subscribe for them, the publishers will no longer publish them. That is the easiest way out of the difficulty. "Mark them that cause divisions; cancel your subscription to any paper which is stirring up strife or engaging in un-Christian controversies. With such a policy the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is in the heartiest sympathy, for it believes that the great mass of our brotherhood are capable of discriminating between the necessary defense of good men and right principles in a Christian spirit, and that spirit of acrimonious and uncharitable controversy which the Nebraska brethren so justly "contemplate with sorrow and humiliation."

Another View.

[We are permitted to publish the following letter which, as it happened, was received by the same mail which brought the Nebraska resolution. Our readers will be interested in what this well-known and widely honored brother thinks about one phase of a recent controversy.—EDITOR.]

MY DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I have just read your editorial entitled, "Not a Question of Consistency, But of Charity," and I cannot refrain from writing you a personal note of hearty thanks for the manner and spirit of this reply to a most important editorial in the Christian Standard, bearing upon Brother Lord's unhappy position taken some years ago, concerning our accepting into our fellowship the unimmersed. I read his statement at the time, and have often thought of it since he became the editor of the Christian Standard. It has also caused me unhappy reflections upon the possible injury that the Standard might do in retarding the progress of the great movement in which we are engaged to restore the doctrine of Christ and teachings of the apostles to a sadly divided religious world. I think the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has rendered an invaluable service to the current reformation by calling this matter up and having it settled in the minds of the brotherhood, for it hung like a cloud over the Standard in the minds of tens of thousands who, like myself, had read and preserved in memory the occasion upon which Brother Lord contended for his departure from the organic principles upon which we claim to justify our separate existence among the many churches, composed largely of the best people in the world, at the time this restoration dated its commencement. A more timely and important service could not have been rendered our cause than the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has done in this instance, and the spirit pervading your editorial endowed it with a persuasive eloquence that gave it a power and influence that gladdened my own heart and, doubtless, the hearts of many thousands of others. Then, too, the adherence and uncompromising devotion manifested in the editorial to our plea as a religious and progressive people, fell like sunshine and hope upon the sincere and devoted hundreds of thousands of our people. God bless the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and its beloved editor.

Bethany Assembly.

The National Chautauqua of the Christian Church.

The season of 1903 of "Dear old Bethany" has closed, and we are glad to be able to record, by far, the most successful year in its history.

1. The attendance was uniformly good; more people were on the assembly grounds on opening day than were ever there before on the first day of the assembly; while on the last day 5,000 people were present to hear the silver-tongued orator of the Platte, Hon. William Jennings Bryan, of Lincoln, Neb.

Not only was the general attendance large, but all the special days drew large crowds. Children's Day was one of the great days. The commodious tabernacle could not accommodate all with seats. Temperance Day was a red letter day. Butler College Day, Foreign and Home Missionary Day, Assembly Rally Day, all drew large crowds. From start to finish there was not a single day that had a small attendance. The gate receipts and the railroad admission coupons were very satisfactory to the managers.

2. The program all the way through was uniformly good. In other years old Bethany has had strong programs. It was the testimony of all that the "bill of fare" for the season of 1903 was by far the best one ever provided for the Bethany family.

Never before had there been such a great variety; never before had all the interests of the church been so carefully looked after; never before was there such a happy mingling of exercises, that all, old and young, seemed to be continually delighted. The Chautauqua exercises were so intermingled with the conventions and entertainments that there was not a dry session during the entire assembly. All of the old features that originally made Bethany so popular with the people were reinstated, and many new and very attractive ones were added.

There was not a dry or poor sermon or lecture during the entire sessions. On Monday, the closing day of the session, Hon. William Jennings Bryan, of Lincoln, Neb., twice candidate for President of the United States, addressed the largest audience of people ever assembled on the Bethany grounds. His theme, "The Value of an Idea," was handled in a masterly way, and was received by the great concourse of people in the most hearty and enthusiastic manner.

3. The conventions: All of the conventions of the Christian church in Indiana, except the state missionary, were held during the assembly.

The first one held was that of the C. W. B. M. The women have never yet held a poor convention in Indiana, and the one this year was fully up to the very best. Their very best workers were on the program. The presence of several of their returned missionaries, the careful manner in which they had arranged for all of their business, and addresses, their prompt and business method of conducting their conventions always, make it a great treat to attend one of their state conventions.

The state Sunday-school convention followed the ladies' convention. In other years the Indiana Sunday-school Association held the greatest religious conventions ever held in the state. Of later years they have not been so large, but more representative.

The convention this year was a good one. Brother McNeill, the Sunday-school revival man, was present and told about the great work that is now being done by the "Red and the Blue." The convention caught much of his enthusiasm. The business was attended to promptly, and the addresses were of a high order.

The convention of the Indiana Ministerial Association was really a continuance of the School for Preachers with the added business of the convention. President Frank's annual address was one of the strongest ever delivered before the association, and was received with great favor. The association is the second oldest one among the Disciples. It was organized with fourteen charter members. L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., is the only charter member living.

The state convention of the Y. P. S. C. E. presented an exceptionally fine program, and should have commanded a much larger attendance than was present. The School of Methods, as well as the set addresses, was valuable.

The Endeavorers who spend time and money attending the union conventions would do well to attend our own conventions. We hope that the coming year will witness a great revival in Endeavor work in Indiana, and that at our next convention all societies in the state will be represented. Let us this year inaugurate a great revival in Endeavor work. There are thousands of young men and women who should be enlisted to work for "Christ and the Church."

4. The School for Preachers: Perhaps the most valuable and far reaching part of the assembly work was the ten days' School for Preachers. With a faculty composed of such ripe Bible scholars as D. R. Dungan, of Missouri, W. P. Aylesworth, of Nebraska, B. C. Dewees, of Kentucky, C. B. Newnan, and A. B. Philputt, of Indiana, our preachers, old and young, had such an opportunity for biblical instruction and ministerial education, as heretofore has not been provided for them by our assemblies. This was the second year that Bethany has given our preachers the benefit of such a school. Both years have been marked with such a large measure of success that it will be a permanent feature of the assembly.

5. The Assembly Lectures: This year the lectures were fully up to the high standard of other years. The eleven o'clock hour of each day is reserved for the assembly lecture. The Bethany platform has been graced with some of the finest orators in the country. We would like to speak in detail of each lecture, but space forbids. These lectures alone were worth all that it cost in time and money to attend the assembly.

6. The Entertainments this year were of a pleasing character. Six nights were given to stereopticon lectures, two to elocutionary, readings and recitations, four to concerts and one to a magician. Mingled with rest and solid instruction, these entertainments proved to be exceedingly acceptable to the great crowds who attended them.

7. The Lord's Day Services: Each of the four Lord's days were seasons of great spiritual refreshment from the presence of the Lord. At nine o'clock there was a Bible-school with officers and teachers from among the best of the brotherhood. Morning, afternoon and night the old gospel was preached in its primitive simplicity, beauty and purity. It is safe to say that no better sermons were ever preached at Bethany than the twelve preached there this year.

At half past three each Lord's day the Disciples gathered around the Lord's table and remembered their divine Lord by partaking of the emblems of his broken body and shed blood. The thousands of Disciples who gathered at this spiritual feast will never forget these sweet seasons and holy communions.

8. Morning Prayer Meetings: Each morning at six thirty o'clock, during the entire assembly, the Bethany family met in the tabernacle and spent one half hour in family worship. Never will the Bethany family forget the sweet, soul-inspiring songs, the precious Scripture texts quoted, the fervent prayers offered and the blessed words spoken. Like Peter on the Holy Mount, we all said, "Lord, it is good for us to be here."

9. While Bethany Assembly is located in Indiana, it is not a state, but a national, institution. Persons were present from lakes to gulf, and from ocean to ocean, while others came across the lines from the King's dominions, one from far off Germany, while returned missionaries were there from India, Japan, China, Thibet, etc. The following states were represented: Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Texas, Louisiana,

WHAT SULPHUR DOES

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver, the excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles, and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate, people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, North Dakota, Montana, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas and California.

It was a great gathering of a great brotherhood.

10. The Future of this great assembly is assured. It has won its way to the hearts of our great brotherhood. They are giving it their money, and purpose in the year before us to so improve and beautify its grounds and to secure for its platform for the next year the very best attainable talent, that none can well afford not to attend its sessions.

Its central location, within a few miles of the center of population in the United States; its grounds, the most beautiful of any in the state; the fact that it is a church, not a private organization; its great success as a place for rest, recreation and religious instruction; its health-giving mineral water; the sacred associations that gather around "Dear old Bethany," make it a place where our spiritual Israel will delight to gather in the years to come, to sit together in heavenly places in Jesus Christ, our Lord, and to have sweet fellowship one with another. Church Extension Notes.

We trust that last Sunday was the beginning of what will be the largest offering ever received for Church Extension. Remit to G. W. Muckley, 600 Water Works Building, Kansas City, Mo.

Because of lack of funds, and because of so many loans having been granted which the board has obligated itself to pay, no loans were granted at the board meeting held on September 1.

On the first of September, the receipts for Church Extension since the first of October, amounted to $28,807.34, which is $1,682.15 behind last year's receipts for the first eleven months. The falling behind is in individual receipts. For the first eleven months of this missionary year, churches have sent $2,083.25 more than last year.

On the first of September there was $371.139.82 in the permanent Church Extension fund, including annuity money, named loan funds and the general fund. In taking collections through September, the churches should bear in mind that it will take about $29,000 to reach the $400,000 point. If the foreign society can pass the $200,000 mark and the home society the $100,000 mark for their receipts this year, and the board of Church Extension can reach the $400,000 goal of a permanent fund, and the C. W. B. M. can reach its mark set, there will be nothing but rejoicing at the Detroit convention.

The board of Church Extension was besieged by numerous applications for help at their meeting on September 1. All applications, however, were laid over until the October meeting. At that time, the board will have heard from the September offering and will know whether these appeals can be answered. The board is asking for $30,000. of an offering while there are more than enough appeals to exhaust $60,000. What answer will the brotherhood give in the September offering to these demands?

Missouri Bible-School Notes.

Every Bible-school should have its fall rally and nothing will add more interest to such than the Boys' and Girls' Rally Day, usually on the Sunday before Thanksgiving, but in September, if you prefer it, or October, only write B. L. Smith, Cincinnati, Ohio, care Y. M. C. A. building, and he will send you all supplies free. You will thus rally the school and do a good deed for home missions.

The coming six months, our lessons are in the Life of Christ, and the wise worker is looking ahead by reading Lamar on Luke, McGarvey on Matthew and Mark and Johnson's New Testament, preparing yourself for good work when the time comes.

R. B. Havener reports the house at Franks as receiving the final touches, while Dixon will soon be ready for dedication and goes this month to hold a meeting and organize a congregation, and if possible build a house in Montgomery. Bro. T. J. Head is doing good work with his tent in Southeast Missouri, and the days are drawing nigh when our work will be established permanently in that territory, but we must learn patience and forbearance.

Senator Clay reports that the campaign was so successful and beneficial that they are to inaugurate another immediately, while Seymour is preparing to put theirs into operation and Huntsville is in operation, but all the schools should get right into it now, and the sooner the better.

The Howard County meeting, for numbers, just surpassed all expectations, though many feared the fair would interfere. The County Board made a good report and the brethren readily increased their giving to the work. While this county is good to our State Bible-school work, the congregations do not stand by their local work as they should and will some day.

S. G. Newland, so often our friend, will support the meeting to be held in Montgomery by Brother Havener, and we will report to him the results, and T. J. Head has fine opportunity to hold another, and if some one wants the pleasure of supporting him while there, why not write me? It will do you good.

Audrain, with A. W. Kokendoffer and P. W. Harding, is in fine shape as manifested at the Farber county meeting; but this year, some work will be done that will increase the interest of the people in it as a good investment.

Pike, at Clarksville, was one of the best, while the entertainment, as at all our county meetings, was of the very highest class. But this year the co-operation will seek to make four of the congregations self-supporting, and that is the thing.

Little Rall is always to the front, and at New London, though a good town, the meetings are most successful, though not always the case, while the giving in view of the work to be done was the freest and most generous imaginable, the delegates announcing the amounts as soon as the congregation is called, and every church in the county gave liberally, all things considered. New London is at its best in entertainment.

Minister or not, S. D. Thompson and Cameron never fail in their duty, and this year, as usual, send in their pledge and half cash, with good words.

J. H. Jones has just held a fine meeting at Knox City, with over 4 additions, and the school sends its apportionment in full, and that was the preacher. H. F. DAVIS.

A Reminder.

The first Lord's day in September is past, but the opportunity to give for Church Extension is still yours. Every church that did not take an offering for this purpose last Sunday should do so as soon as possible. You speak much about home and foreign missions, but you say nothing about the work that the Church Extension board is doing. Nearly 1,500 churches give annually for home and foreign missions that continually neglect Church Extension.

Come, let us reason together. Every church, whether large or small, should take an offering for Church Extension for the following reason:

1. Because it is a business way of investing money for the Lord. Every dollar that you give is gaining interest continually and both the dollar and its interest will go on building churches years after you have gone to your reward. The money given through the Church Extension board has been handled with the best of business skill. During its fifteen years' history not one dollar has been lost. Experience has proven that it is generally better to loan a church money than to give it outright, hence the money not only comes back to be re-loaned, but it does a double service everywhere it goes, and the mission church, borrowing is stronger for paying back the loan.

2. Because it saves congregations. Several of our good congregations would not now be in existence had not the Church Extension board helped them in their infancy. Many of these churches have not only paid back their entire loan, but are yearly contributing to the Church Extension fund.

3. Because it works systematically. It carefully investigates all appeals and puts the money where it will do the most good. No church is helped unless it is worthy and really needy—one that has done its best to help itself.

4. Because the board has only enough money to say "yes" to about one-third of its appeals. The work is greatly handicapped because of the lack of funds. What a wonderful work could be accomplished if we would give our board enough money to answer favorably all the appeals that come to it.

5. Because each church that gives is itself blessed. It is better prepared for a larger work at home.

6. Because the board has no more income from the five year pledges. Heretofore these pledges have increased the annual offerings.

Finally, because God's blessing is upon the work. During the fifteen years of its history the board has helped build 716 church houses, or an average of nearly one each week.

Of the $370,000 entrusted to its care, $290,000 has been returned and has gone out again.

A Great Railroad.

It may be truthfully said that railroads, more than any other medium, make a great city. St. Louis is truly great in her railroads, having some twenty-one important lines terminating within her borders.

One of the most important of these roads to St. Louis is the WABASH LINE, from the fact that it draws the commerce of nearly all sections of the country to this metropolis, as a magnet draws kindred metals to itself.

The great arms of this growing system reach to Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Albia and Ottumwa, Ia.; Chicago, Toledo, Detroit and Buffalo, and attract business from beyond these important gateways, even from the remote Pacific Coast, the extreme Northwest, the Great Lakes and the Atlantic borders.

It is commercially aggressive, and in its never ceasing activity is to-day reaching its great steel tentacles toward Pittsburg, Pa., and Baltimore, Md. In a little more than a year these two beehives of industry and all their tributary territory will be bound to St. Louis by the continuous rails of the WABASH.

Its through-car system is perfect, running solid, fully equipped trains for night and day service to Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Toledo, Niagara Falls and Buffalo, and through sleeping cars to New York, Boston, Montreal, Denver, Portland, Ore., Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Its train equipment is modern in every particular, there having recently been placed in service many new passenger cars consisting of Observation-Cafe and Library Cars, Reclining Chair Cars, Dining Cars, Day Coaches and Combination smoking and Baggage Cars, which are models of beauty and neatness, representing the highest state of development in car building.

This road will be called upon to transport hundreds of thousands of visitors to the World's Fair in 1904, and its facilities will be found ample for so gigantic an undertaking.

THE WABASH is essentially a St. Louis line, having its General Officers, from the President down, located here, and has an army of employees, necessary to carry on this vast system, who are citizens of St. Louis.

It spends its money largely in St. Louis and it has the interest of St. Louis always in mind.

Truly this is "A GREAT RAILROAD," and above all things, it is a St. Louis railroad.

With the funds ever increasing a greater work will be done from year to year. The pound you gave ten years ago has already helped build two churches. Behold thy pound is gaining another pound. Christian, put a part of your earnings into the Church Extension bank and then when finally you shall receive your heavenly promotion you will have treasures in the eternal divine deposit bank.

Dedication At Flora, Illinois.

The new house at Flora, Ill., is among the very best ones owned by our people in the state. Something more than a year ago we visited the church and raised some $8,000 as a starter for this new church house.

They have built an exceedingly beautiful, commodious house, and on Lord's day, August 30, we met with the brethren and friends, dedicated it to Almighty God. We raised $4,200, and was able to give the house to God with all of its debts provided for.

In addition to the church house they have built a fine parsonage. Bro. A. B. Cunningham is the hard working and very successful pastor at Flora. His work is being crowned with a large measure of genuine success.

Illinois State Encampment.

The annual gathering of the disciples of Illinois occurred at Eureka last week, Aug. 31-Sept. 3. The encampment plan was resumed after two years' of holding the convention elsewhere. The classic shades of the college campus brought many an old student back to review the scenes of some of the happiest days and tenderest memories of life. To such the encampment was half begun with the sight of President Hieronymus and Prof. Radford upon the college campus.

The C. W. B. M. occupied the opening sessions of the convention. Anna M. Hale and her co-workers are leading the missionary forces among the women of Illinois unto greater and greater success. They undertook (above all state and foreign mission contributions) to raise $4,000 for the Burgess Memorial fund. While that sum was not realized yet the half of it was. And during the session Bro. Forrest made an appeal, and $200 more was pledged. This is a marvelous work, for the less than 350 auxiliaries of the state. More than $8,900 was contributed by the C. W. B. M. of the state during the year.

W. M. Forrest, of Calcutta, India, gave two addresses. It was a rare privilege to hear a man who combined such wide personal experience on the mission field together with such power as an orator. His lofty, eloquent and chaste appeal for a second Burgess Memorial was mightily reinforced by the one there standing on the campus. Brother Forrest brought us the philosophy of Indian mission work as well as the facts and incidents.

J. E. Lynn.

The motto for the new year among the auxiliaries is, "State improvement." There will be no relaxation in raising money, however, for the society has apportioned $600 to support Bertha Lohr, of India, $1,500 to Chicago, $300 to Mexico mission and $2,500 as a special fund.

The Illinois Christian Missionary Society had as its excellent president, Bro. J. E. Lynn, of Springfield. His gentle, yet forceful spirit tempered the entire convention. He justly deserved the unstinted praise he received for his courteous treatment of all and his businesslike procedure. The opening address on the convention was his upon "The Spiritual Life of the Church." And the lofty tone of this opening speech was continued to the end of the program. There were but two who failed to appear. Of those deserving especial mention are Bro. C. C. Morrison who preached the convention sermon on, "The Authority of Jesus;" W. H. Cannon, of Lexington, who always stirs a convention, on "The Old Paths;" O. W. Lawrence, of Rock Island, on "Church Methods;" Alva W. Taylor, the beloved pastor of Eureka on "Christ and Sociology."

Christian education received a larger share of attention than ever before. J. G. Waggoner and Prof. B. J. Radford kindled a sense of loyalty for Eureka. Delegates were appointed to assist in arranging a national day for the observance of "Christian Education" at Detroit.

Bro. Benj. L. Smith, Bro. A. McLean, Bro. A. B. Phillips, of Augusta, Ga., and others represented our various missionary boards until it seemed a National Convention, slightly condensed.

The features of Illinois mission work, which are to be emphasized this year are: (1) Chicago work. The whole state is pledged to the fullest support to Chicago. (2) The evangelization of neglected fields by local pastors under the direction of the District Boards. (3) An attempt to foster and multiply our Bible-schools.

It will be of amusement to some and gratification to countless thousands of others to know that in convention assembled it was "resolved that we discountenance the use of tobacco upon the part of the ministry particularly."

About $11,000 was raised during the year for state missions. It was impossible to get the exact increase in membership, because 400 churches did not make their reports.

The same officers were re-elected. W. W. Weedon as president; J. P. Darst as treasurer; J. Fred Jones as corresponding secretary.

W. H. Cannon, of Lincoln, was elected president of the I. C. M. C. The next convention goes to Champaign. FINIS IDELMAN.

St. Louis News.

The Hamilton Avenue Church took a collection Lord's day, Sept. 6, for home missions amounting to $15.

At Old Orchard, the C. W. B. M. auxiliary held an open meeting at the Village Hall, Lord's day evening, Sept. 6.

Mt. Cabanne held morning and evening services in the renovated auditorium last Lord's day. There was one addition by letter.

Tuxedo Church observed Church Extension day, Sept. 6. The collection reached a total of $33.

The contribution at the Fourth Church for Church Extension amounted to $25. A collection of $56 for a new baptistry was taken at the same time. A "gold and silver" contest has been inaugurated.

The church at Carondelet opened its new branch Bible school work at the Bellefontaine car sheds, Lord's day, Sept. 6. The school is held in the afternoon and the use of the room is granted by division superintendent Sparrow of the Transit Company. The attendance at the opening session was encouraging, the entire hall being filled. There is no church in the immediate vicinity and the school will supply a real need.

Kentucky Convention Announcement.

All things are now ready, as far as they can be, for the Paris conventions. Remember the time is Sept. 21 to 25. The brethren at Paris are preparing to entertain a great convention. We must not disappoint them. If you intend to go, notify Carey E. Morgan at once of this intention, if you have not already done so.

We have the best railroad rates in our history as convention goers. Tickets will be on sale Sept. 21 and 22, instead of 20 and 21, as previously announced. They will be round trip tickets, and will be at one fare plus 25 cents. No certificate to sign or be signed. This in itself will increase our attendance. Practically all the lines have agreed to this, and I think without question that all will in a day or two.

We have one more word to say to our churches that are yet on the delinquent list. Some of our strong churches have as yet given nothing for Kentucky missions, and others have paid only a part of the apportionment. Let us avert a disaster in the history of our work by prompt action. There remains enough time even at this late date to remedy this matter. Let every church that has not paid the full apportionment take an offering and send it in at once, and let us go to Paris with the best record we have ever made in every respect. H. W. ELLIOTT, Sec.

Sulphur, Ky., Sept. 3.

Kansas Convention Announcement.

Newton is the place, Oct. 58, is the time. The Western Passenger Association has granted a rate of one fare, plus fifty cents, for the round trip from all points in Kansas and from Kansas City and St. Joseph, except where one and one-third fare would be less. That is, those living within less than fifty miles of Newton will pay one and one-third fare. No certificates are required. The minimum selling rate is fifty cents. Tickets are good from the 4th to the 8th going, and including the 9th returning. Continuous passage both ways. This is a good rate, and we should have a large attendance. Watch for program. W. S. LOWE.

The Missouri Christian Convention, September 21-24.

Only a little more than one week from the time this appears in print till the workers from the different parts of Missouri will assemble in convention at Columbia. So far we have received not more than fifty names. This cannot mean the attendance will be smaller than usual; everything points to a large attendance; it means you have neglected to notify us of your coming. Will you, upon reading this notice, sit down and send us your name at once, and thus help the committee in providing you with a comfortable home? Send name to L. H. Rice, chairman of assignment committee, or to the undersigned. C. H. WINDERS.

HORD.

Chas. Allen Hord was born in — county, Ky., and died at his home near Grayson, Mo., Aug. 29, 1903. He was baptized into Christ at the age of 17 by W. C. Rogers. He served as a deacon of the church at Gower, Mo., for several years. He had behind him a generation of religious ancestry. From his mother's side have come some of the ablest and most successful preachers of the Reformation—the Trices and Allens. Our brother possessed that human sympathy and good will which makes one beloved for his own sake. He was a friend to the poor, the widow and the orphan. Our Orphans' Home at St. Louis, Mo., often received kindly help from his hand. His devotion and zeal to preach the gospel to the "whole world" ever moved him to promptly respond to duty's call with an open hand and a generous heart. Here we have a practical object lesson exhibited in the devotion and liberality of Mrs. Lucy Bland Hord, his Christian wife, whose cordial co-operation with him in the good work is proverbial. The vast throng at the funeral service was a grand tribute of respect, honor and love from his numerous friends and fellow citizens to his Christian character. His good wife preceded him to the better world about five years and now they are again united! May the noble Christian children, the loving mother, brothers and sisters and numerous relatives, in their sad bereavement, look up to God, their only refuge, and bow in sweet resignation to His will. Farewell, beloved father, brother, friend, till we meet in the mansions above, when "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and death shall be no more; neither shall there be mourning, nor crying, nor pain any more; for the former things are passed away." JNO P. JESSE.

Gower, Mo., Sept. 5, 1903.

GARVIN.

Thomas D. Garvin was born in Pittsburg, Penn., Aug. 13, 1829. And after a life of almost 50 years of indefatigable study and work—preaching the pure gospel of Christ and thereby leading men and women to Christ by the hundreds and thousands; holding pastorates, doing evangelistic work, purchasing lots, repairing houses, building new ones in the country, towns, cities, in 24 states and territories, Canada and Islands of the sea, he fell asleep in Jesus at his late home in Los Angeles, California, Aug. 11, 1903, aged 73 years, 11 months and 28 days. His grand-parents James Hanan and wife were immersed the same time that the Campbells were. Later Bro. Garvin attended college at Bethany; having graduated at Bethany he then entered the Miami University at Oxford, Ohio, from which institution he also graduated. He was president of the Franklin College at Wilmington, Ohio, for some years and taught in the Oxford University. During his educational work he was also actively engaged in the work of the ministry.

He was married to Kate C. Craig, April 2, 1856, and to them were born four children: Samuel T., Harry B., Charles L. and Mary Alma; two of whom, Harry B. and Dr. Charles L. survive him.

From 1856 to within a few days of his death he devoted his time exclusively to the work of the ministry. In 1869 he was called to the Sixth Street Church in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he preached for three years. In 1871 he began his work in Columbus, Ohio, organized a church, built a house and preached for the congregation for ten years, leaving the church strong in every way. In 1881 he entered upon his work at Elyria, Ohio, organized a church, built a house and preached for the congregation three years. During all this time, in addition to his regular pastoral duties, he was preaching, conducting courses in Bible study, holding revival services here, there and everywhere as opportunity offered.

September 17, 1883 he lost his wife in Ohio, and in 1884 he came to California and was eminently successful in every work that he attempted. Such a thought as fail seems to have never entered his mind. He was determined to preach a pure gospel and he believed that he was sustained by Him who possessed all power in heaven and earth. He was married in San Francisco, Dec. 31, 1885 to Mrs. Sarah E. Price, who survives him. She is a sister to Bro. B. F. Coulter, of Los Angeles, California, and no wiser, better, more faithful, devoted and consecrated workers ever entered the vineyard of the Lord than Brother and Sister Garvin. Both being very strong mentally, socially and spiritually, their very presence was a benediction and an inspiration to all.

Bro. Garvin preached for the churches at Santa Ana and Orange, and when he went to Pasadena they had an old house that could not have been sold for enough to pay the debt on it and it finally blew down. He rallied the members, built a beautiful house of worship, preached for the congregation three years, and left them in fine spirits. While at Pasadena, he held two successful meetings in East Los Angeles. He went to San Francisco, soon organized a church, built a house and preached for the congregation for three years. His work here was not only a success, but an astonishment to all who knew anything about the conditions. At Santa Barbara he preached with great acceptance for two years.

In addition to the above, he held successful meetings all over Southern California and spent one year exclusively in evangelistic work, in which he was marvelously successful. He never failed in a single meeting.

In 1894 he went as an independent missionary to Honolulu, and, as was his custom, he organized a church, secured land and built a churchhouse, which property is now worth ten thousand dollars. And the work begun by him in the islands, now has missions for the Japanese, Chinese and natives. Bro. Garvin himself baptized more than a hundred Japanese while there. When he left Honolulu, he went to Clarksville, Tenn., where he remained one year, when, on account of the climate and failing health, he came to Los Angeles and preached for the East Los Angeles church for several months, and, notwithstanding his great age and his manly form tottering beneath the burden of years, his work there was so successful that the people were just as loth to give him up as he was to give the work up. He then received a call to do missionary work in Honolulu, which call he was considering, but decided to take the Vernon work, this city, a mission of the Broadway Church. He accepted this work and prosecuted the same with as much zeal and enjoyment as if it had been some great central church. The membership increased, they had a good Sunday-school, young peoples' society, and best of all, as perfect peace and harmony as was ever seen in any congregation. And now, with every pulsation of Sister Garvin's heavy heart, there comes a responsive beat from every heart in that entire congregation. Those who knew Bro. Garvin best say that he was one of the most perfect characters they ever saw.

He was a most devoted husband and father, a good citizen, a brother in Christ, a father in spiritual Israel. He was a scholar, student, worker,

Copper Cures Consumption

New Treatment for Consumption Indorsed by Member of British Tuberculosis Congress—"Antidotum Tuberculose" (the Copper Cure), Marvel of the Medical World—Hope for All, No Matter How Bad Off—Large Trial Treatment Absolutely Free.

Benefits Congressman Dingley's Son and others of Consumption in Their Own Home—Remember there is No Expense or Obligation Attached to the Offer of Free Trial Treatment.

O. K. BUCKHOUT.

Chairman Kalamazoo Tuberculosis Remedy Co. (Ltd.); Member of British Tuberculosis Congress; Member National Association for the Prevention of Consumption.

Consumptives need not worry about their future any more, as the long-looked-for cure for consumption has at last been found. To satisfy yourself of this you have only to write for free trial treatment to the Kalamazoo Tuberculosis Remedy Co. (Ltd.) 1307 Main St., Kalamazoo, Mich., of which the chairman is Mr. O. K. Buckhout, a noted member of the British Tuberculosis Congress and also of the National Association for the Prevention of Consumption, composed of world-famous men who have made consumption—its cure and prevention—a life study. "This cure is something entirely new and is called "Antidotum Tuberculose," or the Copper Cure, and is the only discovery known that kills all tuberculosis germs which cause consumption, as unless this is done the disease cannot be cured.

You can tell if you have consumption by the coughing and hawking, by continually spitting, especially in the morning when you raise yellow and black matter, by bleeding from the lungs, night sweats, flat chest, fever, weak voice, peculiar flushed complexion, pain in chest, wasting away of the flesh, etc. Find out how the Copper Cure kills the germs, then builds up the lungs, strengthens the heart, puts flesh on the body and muscles on the bones until the consumption is all gone and you are again a strong, healthy, robust man or woman.

Don't doubt this, for the very same discovery benefited A. H. Dingley, a son of Congressman Dingley of Dingley Tariff Bill fame, who after going West and South for relief was benefited by "Antidotum Tuberculose" after all else had failed.

So don't give up hope and don't spend your money in travel. Attend to it right away, for consumption spreads to other members of the family. If you have consumption or fear you are predisposed to it, write to-night to the Kalamazoo Tuberculosis Remedy Co. (Ltd.) 1307 Main St., Kalamazoo, Mich., for the FREE Trial Treatment and the plain and comprehensive literature which they will gladly send you, all charges prepaid. Remember the trial treatment is absolutely FREE.

and as aggressive as a man could well be, never fearing or failing to declare the whole counsel of God, yet in such a way and manifesting so much of the spirit of Christ, that even those whom he opposed loved and honored him. If there ever was a ripe sheaf, a full corn in the ear; one who could look back over a life which had been well spent in the service of Christ; one who could say, I have fought the fight, I have kept the faith, I have finished my course and henceforth there is a crown laid up for me, it was Brother T. D. Garvin.

The funeral services were held in the Broadway Church, Friday afternoon, Aug. 14. Brethren Utter, Dowling, Dr. F. M. Kirkham, John C. Hay and the writer participating. Because of Bro. Garvin's having been so intimate with Brothers Dowling and Utter's fathers, they were requested to do the speaking, which they did. Sister Princess Long sang. There were at least a thousand people present and the most appropriate and impressive service that it has ever been our privilege to attend.

Harrison, O., Sept. 3., 1903.

ARKANSAS.—Little Rock, Sept. 2.—I closed my first year's work with the N. Little Rock church here the middle of last month, while for some reasons I might have accepted another field, yet it seemed that I could not well let go of the work here at this time. An overruling providence seemed to bid me continue and so I have accepted their unanimous call for another year. We feel encouraged in the outlook for the coming year. Since August of last year our membership has more than doubled, our Sunday-school trebled. Our church building has been greatly improved both outside and inside; in nearly every way we are in a far better position to push the Lord's work than ever before. A few weeks ago I immersed a gentleman 76 years old. Next Lord's day I will immerse a gentleman over 50 years of age. How truly did Christ say, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."—C. BURTON STEVENS.

COLORADO.—Longmont, Sept. 2.—We have had five accessions here lately; two by letter and three baptisms.—W. S. HAYDEN, Jr.
Trinidad, Aug. 30.—Two additions by baptism at Trinidad, Colorado, Aug. 26, Wednesday. Present membership, 184.—DAVID CARY PETERS, minister.

ILLINOIS—Murphysboro, Aug. 31.—Baptized one young lady at close of evening service. Have a good set of "Preacher's Home-letics" that I will sell cheap.—HARRY E. TUCKER.

INDIANA.—Angola, Sept. 5.—Having just returned here from spending the summer with the church at Grand Junction, Col., I have a word about last Lord's day service at the place: There were three added, making nine in the last few weeks. Our fellowship with Grand Junction brethren was delightful. I go next week to Lexington for a year in the university.—NEWELL L. SIMS.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—Nowata, Aug. 30.—Meeting closed last Tuesday night at Alluwe, Indian Territory, with fifty heads of families that had confessed Christ; thirteen by letter. The brothers there are going right ahead and build a church. In all, Brother Flowers had a grand, good meeting. We are going to have preaching half time.—W. A. ATKINSON, deacon.

IOWA.—Colfax, Sept. 1.—Two additions yesterday.—THOMAS H. POPPLEWELL.

KANSAS.—Horton, Aug. 31.—August has been a good month for the church here. One from the Methodists, three by confession, three by letter, three by statements. We have been having good audiences through August.—LEE H. BARNUM, pastor.

Cherokee.—Just closed a meeting at West Mineral, Kan., with 13 additions; only four by primary obedience.—W. C. WILLEY.

Wichita, Aug. 31.—One confession at the S. Lawrence Avenue Church yesterday.—W. T. McLAIN.

Winchester, Sept. 5.—Short meetings recently held by the writer at Mt. Olive, Jackson county, with one confession, and at Bancroft with three confessions and two added by statement.—WM. M. MAYFIELD.

KENTUCKY.—Lexington, Aug. 29.—The Pond church, near Richmond, Ky., recently closed a sixteen days' meeting with home forces. The interest throughout the meeting was good and results gratifying. There were 43 additions; 30 of whom were by confession and baptism.—O. N. ROTH, minister.

Owensboro, Sept. 4.—At the basket meeting at Powers Station Sunday, Aug. 30th, we raised in the afternoon a sufficient subscription to build a church. The house will be erected in the near future. We have about 30 members in the community and this house of worship will greatly strengthen the work. Two additions at the evening services.—R. H. CROSSFIELD.

Erlanger, Sept. 5.—Last services by Bro. E. D. Jones Aug. 30th. Crowded house morning and evening. Much regret at losing Brother Jones to Cleveland, O., but rejoice that a larger field is opened to him. All lines of work here doing well. Five by letter and two confessions in past thirty days. Twenty dollars for state work, and new church being now roofed. Hope to dedicate before Thanksgiving.—L. C. YAGER.

MINNESOTA.—Eagle Lake, Sept. 4.—The good work continues, we thank the Lord. Three accessions last week at regular services and we will raise more than our apportionment for Church Extension.—J. P. CHILDS, Minister.

Ronneby.—Closed a two weeks' meeting here, resulting in 23 accessions, 15 by baptism. I organized this church three years ago. They now have a house of worship paid for, and 100 in the Bible-school.—H. E. RUSSELL.

MISSOURI.—Cobb, Aug. 24.—Having no house in which to worship at this place, we had a basket meeting in the woods near here yesterday, resulting in the confession and baptism of 6 persons.—A. CALHOUN.

New Franklin.—Bro. A. N. Lindsey recently closed a successful meeting with the church here, there being 40 additions; all men and women except three from the Sunday-school. In many respects this was among the best meetings in the history of the church. Brother Lindsey is an untiring worker, and his success is due to the fact that he preaches the gospel in its simplicity without apology. He has the love and esteem of the membership. We are now comfortably situated in our new church, recently completed at a cost of $6,500. The church is progressing in all departments, with 200 members.—J. M. SETTLE.

Springfield, Sept. 4.—Our meeting at Calhoun closed with 20 accessions, 10 confessions.—JOSEPH GAYLOR.

Doe Run, Aug. 31.—We are in a great meeting, with four additions to date, the Hon. J. A. Hill, county judge of St. Francois county, being one of the number. The church is greatly revived. We have organized a Bible-school with bright prospects for continued success. Let the brotherhood of Missouri praise God for what has been done in the Master's name at Doe Run. The meeting still continues. I go from here to Bloomfield. Have had 17 additions since last report.—T. J. HEAD, Bible-school evangelist.

Auxvasse, Aug. 31.—Have preached here a week, with weather and other things against us. Six confessions.—R. L. McHATON.

Kirkville, Aug. 31.—There were three additions to the church here yesterday.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Moberly, Aug. 31.—One confession yesterday. I am helping G. L. Surber in a little meeting at Antioch church.—JAMES N. CRUTCHER.

Bethany, Sept. 1.—We had one baptism last Lord's day, and one addition by letter a week before. Getting ready for Church Extension.—O. ORAHOOD.

Liberal, Aug. 31.—Since last report we have had 20 additions at regular services—70 since coming in January. Have taken every offering so far this year, and in all have gone beyond our apportionment. Have organized a C. W. B. M. auxiliary of ten members, a Junior Christian Endeavor of 30 members. Among our recent converts was the banker's wife, the only daughter of G. H. Walser, the man who laid out Liberal as an infidel colony. The pastor acknowledges a surprise on her 40th birthday. More than 100 present; a beautiful dress and other presents; refreshments.—MRS. S. MCCOY CRANK.

Windsor, Sept. 1.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting at Franks, Mo., resulting in 12 additions, 9 by primary obedience. A new house is on the way, and the brethren say it will be ready to use by October; and their Bible-school is doing a good work, and the ladies have been working and have money to buy all the lumber to enclose the house.—R. B. HAVENER.

Dearborn, Sept. 4.—Closed a two weeks' meeting at Pleasant Grove, Kan., Sept. 1: 13 added; nine baptisms, two from Anti-Missionary Baptists and two from Missionary Baptists. The church at Bethel, Mo., where I have completed six months' work of my first year, has unanimously called me for second year.—R. E. CALLITHAN.

St. Louis, Sept. 7.—The ministers' meeting, which is held every Monday morning at the office of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, was resumed to-day after adjournment during July and August. The attendance was not large. S. B. Moore reported for Hammett Place 35 additions during the summer, and a new mission established. G. E. Ireland, pastor of Carondelet, reported 10 additions during the summer. A mission has been started by the Carondelet Church in the Bellefontaine line car barns, where the manager of the division kindly gives the use of his office for the service. There were 70 present on the opening day, yesterday. The West End Endeavor Society is having a contest modelled after the Sunday-school contests which have been so popular. Tuxedo paid $200 on its debt during the summer, and made an offering of $33 for Church Extension. Ellendale gave $10 for home missions. First Church, 1 addition by letter yesterday. S. M. Martin was present at the ministers' meeting and reported a good summer's work in Louisiana and Texas.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.—Weatherford, Sept. 1.—Last Lord's day was a great day for the church here. There were eight accessions, two reclaimed, one from the Baptists and five by confession. There will be many to follow, I am sure. We rejoice, especially in that these are all influential people.—FRANK L. VAN VOORHIS.

Lone Wolf, Sept. 4.—I have been doing mission work in this community for the last fifteen months. We have a noble band of brothers and sisters here, but the little organization is being badly depleted by removals. I baptized an excellent lady last Sunday, and others are ready to come if a good meeting were held. I am leaving here to locate in Guthrie, O. T. Brother Dunkleberger will probably take up the work at this place.—JOHN T. OWENS.

TEXAS.—Whitewright, Sept. 1.—During my vacation this summer, I held meetings at Bertram, Johnson City and Llano, in southwest Texas, giving in all five weeks to evangelizing. Total results: eighteen confessions, two from the Baptists and six by letter, twenty-six in all.—EDWIN C. BOYNTON.

Riddles of the Bible.

One of the chief stumbling blocks in the way of wavering or fickle searchers after truth is the great collection of "hard sayings," or enigmas, particularly in the Old Testament—or rather, in the various and contradictory modes of interpreting them adopted by rash and opinionated, self-appointed oracles, who first evolve their theories (or inherit them), and then proceed to search out isolated texts to verify themselves, instead of studying the scriptures to start with and allowing the opinions to be formed afterward.

The outsiders and skeptics say, "The riddles are there; many of them seem to us like nonsense. There's no lack of interpreters, either, but your interpreters don't agree, sometimes holding even opposite views! The worst of it is, each one is dead sure he is right and all the rest wrong! Now, of course we know they can't all be correct. Then who or which, are, if any?"

Some of them add: "Just show us a man—or angel—who can make sense of these ambiguities, and we will believe and no longer resist you; aye, we will join the church: we'll roll up our sleeves and go to work to bring in everybody else!"

Our people usually answer: "There's no mystery about the plan of salvation—that is, no uncertainty, no inconsistency. That's plain enough. That's all you need to know."

Yes, but alas! this off-hand return seldom satisfies, as if some things in God's word were of no great consequence—might as well be left out! Of course our folks do not really take that position, but we do not always take pains to explain that we consider the mysterious passages important, nor why they seem mysterious.

This is going to the other extreme, although not so fatally as does the sectarian, who, at the first end, takes a riddle for the foundation of his creed!

The intelligent critic continues to question: he can't believe any portion of the Bible unless he can discover a reason for the existence of the whole; and a few demand very plausible reasons—no uncertain nor contradictory excuses for them, if you please.

Christ interpreted his own parables. Why didn't he (or some inspired disciple) unfold all the other enigmas, instead of multiplying them, as John the Revelator did, and as modern divines are doing! they exclaim. Or, "If the Bible is truly the word of God, and consequently perfect, and if there is a God, why doesn't he compel his ministers to give an exegesis that all mankind can accept—so clear and complete that no honest person can doubt or fail to comprehend—leaving not one aggravating puzzle for people to quarrel over, or to send them to the madhouse?"

Now, brethren of all denominations, what are we going to do about it? Is it not plain that we can never hope to lay the whole world at the feet of our Master while this condition continues—while we flatly contradict each other, and that, too, over passages that may not apply to our times?

"But," some one responds, "how can we better the matter? We must try to interpret those riddles. That's what they are for. It is our duty to do the best we can with them, whether we agree or not! Indeed, infinite wisdom cannot be expected to appear the same to every finite vision. If we are earnest in our opinions, we are guiltless."

Of course we all have a right to "our opinions," if only we would humbly acknowledge that they were not to be taken as convictions, and were entitled to no greater consideration than those of others. The trouble is in speaking authoritatively when we are merely guessing!

There would be more respect for the Bible, and for every professed servant of God, if we would practice even common politeness toward each other, and never contradict a man until we are sure the Bible contradicts him!

The proper thing, then, is to acknowledge that we don't know it all, that there are mysteries in the book which we do not understand, and which no man understands, and probably none ever will until the right time, in spite of such admonitions as "Blessed is he that understandeth," and "If any man have an ear, let him hear." And when the time comes, God will raise up one, most surely, who will make each riddle so plain that all our former guessing shall seem ridiculous.

"What, then, shall we cease to study them?" By no means. Some of them may apply to the present. Very likely so. Which of them? Let us try to find out. But, meantime, let us refrain from offering an interpretation until we can proclaim to the world, one that shall be in every respect sensible, reasonable, consistent with the love and justice and wisdom of God, and the needs of man!

Hot Springs, Ark. L. R. MORPHEN.

An Aged Man's View.

In my younger days I learned of A. Campbell, W. Scott, Jones Hartsel and the Haydens that Noah was saved by water in the sense of being pardoned, and that his salvation was "the like figure whereunto even baptism doth now save us," in the same sense; and I have presented the same thoughts hundreds of times during my ministry of more than sixty years; but in later years I have come to the conclusion, from the divine record that Noah was a righteous man and a preacher of righteousness for many years before the flood; yet he needed another salvation, which was effected by water. His salvation by faith saved him from sin. His salvation by water saved him from sinners. "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us," Peter, in his ever memorable sermon on Pentecost, in answer to the inquiry after duty, said, "Repent and be baptized, everyone of you, in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; for the promise is to you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call; and with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation." Then they that "gladly received his word were baptized," and the same day three thousand were added to them. Now as Noah was saved from sinners by water, so were these saved from this wicked (or untoward) generation by being buried by baptism into death, wherein they were risen through the faith of him who raised him from the dead, forming "a chosen generation", (Peter) with whom Christ would deign to dwell by his Spirit, giving them power to endure, as seeing the Lord who is invisible. Now, if I am wrong in my conclusion, please set me right, and I will sit at your feet and learn, if I am 80 years old. Your brother in Christ,

Orient, Ia.

O. E. BROWN.

[Our correspondent, we think, is right in his present understanding of the sense in which Noah and his family were saved by water. We must think, however, that he misunderstood the venerable pioneers whom he mentions, in supposing they taught a different view of the matter. We must not infer that the 3,000 who were exhorted to repentance and baptism in order that they might be saved from an untoward generation, did not also receive remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit. Those who repented and turned to Christ were saved, also, from the fate which overtook that wicked generation who rejected Christ. If this be our brother's meaning, we think it is quite correct.—EDITOR.]

The Tobacco Fiend.

The tobacco fiend damns the immaculate air for ten times the space of his own bulk. His eyes glare and glisten like the eyes of a jealous beast gnawing a bone, and the contortions of his face are quite as beastly and threatening. Try to look into his soul with the lamp of truth and you will feel like you are looking through smoked glass. The body of air on which we live momentarily, the creator has made invisible, but the smoker renders it visible, laden with tangible poison, offending the natural senses and veiling the crimped face as with an incense of Lucifer from the pit. It is a double offense, for we are both suffering from the smoke and also self-consciously we are breathing over again his baleful spent breath.

Behold his protruding mouth, his squinting eyes, his head turned to one side, and away from the eruptions of his own mouth with quick contortions of face like heat lightning, in short cursing the air with his stinking breath and making faces at you at the same time. How callous must one become to so disregard the natural rights of others who justly hold momentarily contempt of his vice. He must have gained it by losing so much of self-respect and continued by so many excuses and evasions, if we call them less than lies, that he can scarce ring true on any moral principle or urge any reform. I have just as good a right to throw a dead dog in your well for you to drink from as you have to pollute the air I am compelled to breathe. How can such a person truly believe in equal rights, or how be a genuine American? As to his belonging to church, his first allegiance is really with the smoking, chewing crowd that blows out and spits out more than five hundred million dollars annually. As to his being a Christian, it is the bitterest irony. The Christ he fain would follow lays it down as the first condition to enter His service, "deny yourself and take up the cross if you would follow me." "Look at me," says the tobacco man, "and see the self-denying Christ. I am His follower."

Weakly confessing his vice, but loudly professing his power to desist, it is yet a power he will not use, neither from self-respect nor the respect of others, nor respect for religion. Christ when tempted to do evil would not use His power to please Satan, but this man when urged to do good will not use his power to serve God. The seat of all sin is in the will. "If any man wills to do his will he shall know the truth and the truth shall make him free." The very last despair of the last evangelist from heaven closed his divine message heading the list of the hopelessly lost with this, "Let him that is filthy be filthy still, for without are dogs and sorcerers." The Quiet Hour

"He restoreth my soul." This is a universal human need. When the psalmist uttered the conviction that Jehovah, as his Shepherd, could be relied upon to meet this fundamental need of his nature, he gave evidence of his own profound religious experience. Who of us has not learned the power of the world to dampen our religious ardor and to weaken our religious faith? How comforting it is to know that if we turn to our Heavenly Father in penitence of spirit, he will restore our souls that we may go joyfully forward in Christian service.

It is one of the chief benefits of this Quiet Hour that it affords us opportunity of looking into our hearts and of noting the tendency of our lives. There are many nominal Christians, we fear, who do not take time to meditate upon their spiritual condition, and needs, and who therefore know nothing of that joy which the psalmist experienced in the restoration of his soul to the favor of God. They are sick, but do not know it. Their spiritual health is undermined, and they are unconscious of it. How much we all need to pray with the psalmist:

"Search me, O God, and know my heart;
Try me, and know my thoughts;
And see if there be any wicked way in me,
And lead me in the way everlasting!"

The eternal destiny is in you, and you cannot break loose from it. With your farthing bribes you try to hush your stupendous wants, with your single drops to fill the ocean of your immortal aspirations. Oh this great and mighty soul! were it something less, you might find what to do with it; charm it with the jingle of a golden toy, house it in a safe with ledgers and stocks, take it about on journeys to see and be seen. But it is the godlike soul, capable of rest in nothing but God; able to be filled and satisfied with nothing but his fullness and the confidence of his friendship. What man that lives in sin can know it or conceive it? O Thou Prince of Life! Come in thy great salvation to blind and lost men, and lay thy piercing question to their ear. What shall it profit a man to gain the whole world and lose his own soul?

—Horace Bushnell.

Four things a man must learn to do
If he would make his record true;
To think without confusion clearly;
To love his fellow-men sincerely;
To act from honest motives purely
To trust in God and heaven securely.

—Henry Van Dyke.

How "Throw Out the Life-Line" Was Written.

"At Nantucket Beach, I one day visited the life-saving station," said Rev. E. S. Ufford, "and I had shown me for the first time a life-line with its silken strands, and had its uses minutely explained to me; the story of a wreck on this dangerous coast was at the same time related by a friend. These two incidents formed the basis of the song.

"A title, you know, has much to do, many times with the success of a composition. It not only impresses the author, but it catches the ear of the public. So in this case, when the four words, 'Throw out the life-line,' came to me, I had my inspiration. The sentence stayed with me, and I could not have thrown it off, had I been so inclined.

"On reaching home I took paper and pencil, and wrote down the words hurriedly; then, seating myself at the instrument, I seemed to play the tune without any effort. I do not think there was more than fifteen minutes consumed in the production of both words and music. They seemed ready. I had only to write."—John R. Clements, in Christian Endeavor World.

Another vision that the soul needs, that it may not be mired hopelessly in the slough of despond, is a glimpse of immortality. Men are so pressed about by the things of this world, the burden of this life so takes up their attention, that they lose sight of the endless life beyond. They come to be men who live without the sky of eternity, and you can make no great appeal to any man who has no vision of the world beyond this.

—Louis Albert Banks.

My God is any hour so sweet,
From blush of morn to evening star,
As that which calls me to Thy feet,
The hour of prayer?

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for this sweet hour of prayer and meditation. May it be that there shall come into our hearts that divine restorative power which will fill our souls with health and with life. If there has come to us the consciousness of added strength by reason of this communion with Thee, may we manifest that fact in the added helpfulness which we may be able to extend to others about us, both by what we are and what we do. In Christ's name. Amen!

Was His Message Really Gone?

after Righteousness; and, finally, the classic sources of faith, in which these great themes of life and death are illuminated with that insight and originality which ever refresh the spirit of man—the Bible as it is.

Now, there is a certain type of mind—generally, though not always, young minds—which fills up to a certain point, then effervesces, naturally, inevitably. We expect these sporadic ebullitions as a matter of course; feel that we haven't got our money's worth if we don't see it once in a while. But the situation, as outlined above, is tragic: A young man in the very glory of his youth, magnificently equipped for his life's work, because of intellectual difficulties and moral honesty, somehow feels himself out of harmony with the church's idea of how that work ought to go forward in the world. Is the gospel to save men of culture in this new era? Then it must be domesticated upon the soil of the new life. Shall false issues be allowed to tyrannize over the minds of men, to drive them from the Master's vineyard? If so, then the outlook is precarious. Whatever worths religion may have—and I, for one, am old-fashioned enough to believe that her worths are unique and unparalleled by worths to be found elsewhere in the realm of psychic activity—can most assuredly not be conserved at the cost of moral candor. These be things upon which to meditate.

A Cheerful Giver.

We give away very cheerfully sample bottles of a constipation cure that actually cures. It is Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine. It is not merely a relief. It permanently cures any kind of a case of constipation, no matter of how long standing. It is not a purgative nor an irritant cathartic. These simply lash and hurt the bowels and bring but temporary relief. The condition left behind is worse than the first. Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine does just the opposite. It is a tonic laxative of the highest order. It tones, strengthens and gives new life and vigor to the bowels. Only one small dose a day removes all the causes of the trouble and leaves the bowels well and able to move themselves without the aid of medicines. It cures dyspepsia, kidney and liver troubles, indigestion, headaches, catarrh of the stomach and all other diseases and conditions growing out of a clogged condition of the system. Try it free. Not a patent medicine or liquor. A list of ingredients on every package. A free sample bottle for the asking. Send for the sample to-day Address, Vernal Remedy Co., 19 Seneca Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

Opinions of The Christian-Evangelist

I think it is the duty of our preachers who love fair play and balanced editorial judgments on living questions, to use their influence in circulating THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. W. G. JOHNSTON, Roanoke, Va.

I like THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for the broad, sympathetic spirit it brings to bear in discussing the application of Christianity to human conditions and in dealing with the many problems of our age.

I. N. GRISSO, Princeton, Ills.

I am exceedingly pleased with THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and take great pleasure in recommending it to our people. You may depend upon a thorough canvass of the congregation. Thanking you for the many good things you are giving us in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and for its Christian spirit, and assuring you of our support in every way possible, I am,

W. C. BOWER, North Tonawanda, N. Y.

I have been greatly delighted with THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST this year. In my judgment it is the most spiritual, the most informing, the most thoughtful and helpful, the nearest ideal church paper we have.

H. L. ATKINSON, Geneva, O.

I have been reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST ever since I entered the ministry. It has been of great help to me. It suits me. I approve its spirit. The character of its editorials, special departments, and contributed articles is far above the average. I like to have it read, not only in my study, but in my home.

Family Circle

Afterwhile.

Mary E. H. Blair.

A mother toils for those she loves,
The care lines deepen in her face,
With weary feet, alone, she moves.—
Ah! who can take a mother's place!
Our hearts are touched. We vow that we Will sometime share that heavy weight.
But see! Her spirit's crushed! Soon she
At rest forevermore will be,
Sometime? It may be now too late.

A sister suffers bitter pain
And agony through months and years.
In loneliness of heart she's lain
And longed for sympathy, with tears.
She dies—and o'er her coffin-lid
Are spoken words she longed to hear.
How they'd have brightened days amid,
Her life's sad darkness. But we hid
In "Sometime" all our words of cheer.

A wanderer hears the Savior's voice
In tenderness and pity plead,
"Oh weary soul, make me your choice
The way is rough, your hand I'll lead,"
But Satan standing by his side
Says, "Afterwhile, but not to-night"
He heeds that voice, and Christ, denied,
In sorrow sees the last sands slide
Through his life's hour-glass, without light,

Oh soul, take warning while you may,
Ere for you too, the sands have run.
You're sure of life but for to-day.
It may be gone ere morning's sun.
The Savior's voice in love supreme Pleads with you. See at Heaven's gate
His bleeding, nail torn Presence seems
To welcome you to Glory's beams.
Haste! Afterwhile may be too late.

(Founded on fact.)

By Alice Curtice Moyer.

"After a two years' residence on the plains, Aunt Amy, you ought to be able to tell us dozens of thrilling things. What was it that most impressed you while there?"

"Girls and cyclones, perhaps," replied Mrs. Maynard, whom Irene Daniels had addressed as Aunt Amy. She smiled as she answered Irene's inquiry, and this so roused that young lady's curiosity that she immediately demanded, with all the authority of a favorite niece, to know the why and wherefore of it. "I do not doubt," she added, "that the cyclones are interesting enough, but I suppose the girls are anything else. I have heard that they ride like Indians and lasso cattle like cow boys. I don't suppose there is a particle of style about them."

"That is one of the mistakes that eastern people make," replied the aunt, "especially those easterners who are born, brought up, live and die in their own little circle. You are a stylish looking girl, Irene, but you are not one whit more so than the girl of whom I was thinking when I said that girls and cyclones were two of the things that most interested me while in the great west. There are hundreds of others there just as interesting, but this one in my mind stands out clearly in the foreground. I think it will do you good to hear about her." Then, without further pleading from her niece, Mrs. Maynard began:

"Some of the pleasantest people I met while out there were the Right-mans. The parents are native Virginians, having moved to the plains when they were first married. Their three children have been born there—a son, the eldest and a fine young fellow, May, the heroine of this story, and a dear little younger sister. They are children of the plains, every inch of them, and I think better representatives of the great west's young people could not be found anywhere.

"I was so fortunate at to have an occasional invitation to visit at their home, three miles from town. It was an invitation which I could never resist. At this particular time, of which I am telling you, May was to call for me in the late afternoon. All day it had been sultry, but I did not suspect that danger was close at hand. At the time of starting, there were nothing more than a few little innocent looking clouds sailing about, so far as I could see. We left the carriage top down so that we might have the benefit of any passing breeze.

"We had scarcely reached the edge of the town before the condition of the atmosphere seemed changed in some way. Not a breath of air was stirring. All nature seemed arming herself for something that was about to happen, and to hold herself in readiness for resistance. May understood it. After looking anxiously backward a number of times, she said: 'We shall have to run for it, Mrs. Maynard.' She said it as calmly as she said later in the evening, 'I'll play for you, Mrs. Maynard.' Her calmness reassured me. She gathered up the lines and said something to the horses. They seemed to understand the situation and to determine to do their best for us. I held on to the back of the carriage seat breathlessly, and looked back. Words fail me to describe what I saw. I had heard of cyclone clouds and what they look like, but never had it been my privilege to see one of the awful, twisting, writhing, swirling, funnel-shaped creatures before. It seemed to be not far beyond the town and traveling in our direction. I looked at May. She was a little pale now, but she held the lines firmly, and the horses, great, beautiful creatures, were reaching out with all their might. Even in the terror of the moment, I admired the evenness and ease with which they kept together in their run.

"I again looked back. The mist in the town told me, even in my inexperience, that there was havoc there. Then, in a time so short that it seemed but an instant, a farmhouse not far in our rear was lifted like a feather. Then, I do not know why nor how, the creature 'lifted,' as they call it, and we were safe, thanks to the coolness of May and the swiftness of the faithful horses.

"By this time the rain was pouring upon us. Sand and soil, lifted from the ground, pelted us as mud, filling our eyes, our hair, our mouths. We had only a quarter of a mile more to go, but when the horses dashed under the big covered shed and came to a standstill, we were dripping wet. My bran new frock was ruined, and our hats were unrecognizable, but we were saved and were too thankful to grieve over our loss in millinery.

"Now, to outrun a cyclone is only one of the things that May can do. She expects soon to graduate from the high school in the near-by town. She can play the piano, and she knows as much of society as a 16-year-old girl needs to know. She shares the household burdens with her mother, and she can ride horses and lasso cattle with her brother, if she wants to or if it is necessary. Now you, Irene, are as sweet a girl as one can find, I think, (favorite nieces always are) but you have a number of false notions. You imagine that it is pretty and ladylike to be horrified at the thought of a girl having independent ideas, fearlessness of action and self-reliance. I wish you could comprehend that the babyish, pouting, sickly creatures of a half-century ago are entirely out of date in this day and age of the world.

"The typical western girl is an all-around girl, and this does not make her one whit less womanly and sweet. She excels in everything she undertakes. Nobody is more level-headed, and nobody is ahead of her in any profession she may choose. And last, but not least, no girl in all the world makes a better wife or develops into a more devoted mother."

Story of the Telephone.

It was not beautiful; no telephone ever is, and Mrs. Harding declared that it would never pay for itself by proving useful, but when she made that statement she did not take into account the nature of the owner of the new telephone. That telephone had long been Nora's heart's desire, and now as she learned back in her invalid's chair and gazed at the little oak box from which hung the homely black receiver, her eyes were filled with happy tears.

How much it meant to her to know that she was really no longer alone! She had only to take the receiver into her hand, and somewhere from out the spaces stretching away toward Dalton she would hear a friendly voice in reply.

She turned in her wheeled chair and looked out of the window; the church spire of Dalton gleamed above the green trees and cultivated fields of the valley; smoke from huge factories and hundreds of homes lay in drifted masses toward the east. Down the road, a quarter of a mile away, the telephone men were speeding in their light wagon; along the highway, paralleled lines of poles hung with wires marked the friendly approach of the town to the country.

While she was gazing at the scene before her the telephone rang. The suddenness of the sound startled her. Her heart beat quickly; she took up the receiver: "Is that Markley farm? Is the telephone connection finished?" "Men are—" "Gone! oh, that's all right; your number's Pike 12. Better make a note of it until it's printed in the directory next quarter. Good-bye."

Nora hung up the receiver, turned back to the window, and said self-reproachfully, "I didn't really need it! Aunt was right; she said I'd nobody to call up, and as I am shut in for life, I'm not likely to meet many new people, but it makes me feel as though I had a real person right in the room!"

Aunt Alice came in, glanced at the unwelcome intruder hanging so near to the invalid's chair, and said, "A waste of money, Nora; you could have spent it doing better for yourself and your family than that!"

Mrs. Harding, who had never been ill for a week during her whole fifty years of her life, hurried out of the room bent on an errand to town, a tea at the home of a friend two miles in the country and a week's mending all before ten o'clock in the evening. To be sure, it was not yet eleven in the morning, and if one lost no time—but, left to herself, Nora refused to follow her aunt's itinerary further. She returned to the contemplation of her telephone. "It's the only one in a half mile, and it may prove useful. Perhaps she may want to call me up when she gets to town!"

Taking the directory from its hook she scanned the names eagerly; there were not many of them familiar. She put it aside and restlessly took up some fancy-work, glancing often wistfully at the pleasant country scene spread before her window.

It was almost noon when her telephone rang sharply as though some one were in a hurry; she hastened to receive the message: "That you, Nora?" (It was Aunt Alice after all.) "I left my desk unlocked, and there is a large sum of money in it. As I am not coming home for several hours, I'd like to feel that all is right. Call down to Jane, tell her to lock it and bring you the key. I'll hold the line a minute to hear that she's done it."

Nora wheeled herself to the speaking-tube and whistled several times, then out into the hall and called loudly, but could hear nothing in reply. She began to grow frightened; Jane was a comparatively new servant, and the two were alone in the house. How her helplessness weighed upon her soul at this moment. She returned at last to the telephone.

"Aunt Alice, are you there? Well, I can't get Jane; I've called and whistled. Something's wrong; can't you come home?"

"I'll come at once!" and Nora heard her aunt ring off sharply.

After a few minutes the girl heard a footstep in the servant's room overhead, then a door opened somewhere, and presently the front door closed with a bang. From the window she saw the maid go out of the gate carrying a satchel. She followed the highway in the direction of a little station half a mile down the road, where the express trains would stop on signal. It was clear enough that she had rifled the desk and was running off.

With trembling fingers Nora seized her directory and turned its pages. Yes! the station had a telephone. Quickly she told her story, described the appearance of the servant, her baggage and her dress. She asked the operator to detain her, and he promised to have the policeman in charge look out for her. The girl's mind was working alertly now, and the telephone was rapidly proving itself an able assistant. She next called up the Dalton police station, again told her story, and asked that an officer be sent out on the express which would stop at Oakley, and would they please be quick about it, for the train was due there at one o'clock!

Then she leaned back in her chair exhausted, and waited, as the smoke marked the pathway of the express along the valley. She saw her aunt driving rapidly down the road; soon she burst into the room in a whirlwind of excitement, "Child, we've been robbed! What shall we do?" and strong Aunt Alice sat down weakly in a rocker, actually on the verge of tears.

Nora turned to the telephone; "Wait, Aunt Alice, I'll see if she's caught!"

Mrs. Harding listened in bewilderment to the conversation that followed. Although it was one-sided she gathered from it that in some manner Jane had been apprehended before she had fairly started. Her niece turned to her after a minute, trembling but eager: "They've taken her, and she had a lot of things besides the money; the chief himself came out to arrest her and the whole party's coming here so she can be identified!"

Then Nora told the rest of the story, while her aunt leaned back on the cushions of the chair and tried to understand it.

Mrs. Harding started to her feet as the chief, Jane and the operator from Oakley, with a miscellaneous party following entered her front gate. "I don't know which to admire most," she exclaimed, your presence of mind and simple common sense, or that wonder of modern inventions, the telephone, but I believe I'll decide on the common sense. Man may invent all he pleases, but only the Lord can fashion a mind that works when the occasion demands it," and the aunt departed to interview her faithless servant, while Nora, through these rare words of praise, received an uplift that long afterwards bore her triumphantly through hours of loneliness and pain.—Elizabeth Ferguson Seat, in Young People.

Hold Out Your Hands.Mrs. Kate W. Searcy.

My neighbor's baby went walking,
The daughter, just four years old,
Quite down to the corner of Broadway,
Well wrapped up to keep out the cold.
She called merrily back to her mother,
Her bright eyes like stars in Heav'n's dome;
"Hold out your hands to me, mamma,
When you see me coming home."

"Wish you could go with me, mamma,
'Twould be safer than going alone.
Be sure to stand at the window
And watch for me while I'm gone
It's a long way down to Broadway—
Are you sure there's no horrid gnome?—
Hold out your hands to me, mamma,
When you see me coming home!"

* * * * *
Years have rolled by since that morning
Baby grown to womanhood's prime,
Has gone far down toward Broadway—
The broad—way that borders on crime.
Her story's too sad for singing—
Pitying hearts will understand—
Fallen, with no near protector,
Or loved one to touch her hand.

Bowed head, crushed heart has my neighbor.
She wails, "Oh, what shall I do?"
Quickly send your daughter a message:
Tell her your love is still true.
Tell her you're still at the window,
To watch, where'er she may roam;
And hold out your hands to her, smiling
When you see her coming home,
Elk City, Okla.

"Read the Bible First."Kate W. Searcy.

[Bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.—Eph. 6:4.]

"Oh, please mamma, read the Bible first; I always like to hear about God!"

Thus said the five-year-old to-night when called from her play at bedtime. It is the custom in this family to have a quiet talk, the telling of stories and reading from various books and papers when her "bedtime hour" approaches. To-night she came running, willingly as usual, for the "bedtime hour" is the goal of her day, brought the Bible, an illustrated story book and a child's magazine, and said, eagerly, "Please, mamma, read the Bible first; I always like to hear about God!"

Mothers, more than others, realize the swiftness of time and the rapid growth of the infantile body and mind, and the necessity of promptly teaching the important things of life before the dependent, trusting baby drifts beyond reach.

In this family, talks and story-telling mingle with religious instruction, the aim being to make it entertaining and informal as well as serious. It is a hard study in itself, this one of imparting religious information, instilling holy precepts in the child mind in just the way that will do good.

There are some who give it up in despair. They say, "It's no use. It's worse than a waste of time. The only way to get a child to do right is to make it do right. Religious instruction and love of right must come with maturer years. My child will actually hate the Bible if I keep on trying to teach him what it says about good and bad."

Such have our commiseration, if not our sympathy. We know how hard it is sometimes, yet it is worth while. It is a mother's priceless privilege. Do not give it up. Talk of Bible characters as of real people, people who lived and thought and felt and acted.

Define the big, strange words, explain and illustrate with present-day objects. Patient continuance, judicious choice of subjects, sweet interestedness of manner, thoughtful consideration of childish comments, and charming little dashes off into byways, these may not work wonders altogether, but they will bring good results.

And so, then, after many days though it be, a part of your reward will come to you, as it came to this other mother to-night, when your little one will surprise you and gladden your heart by saying, "Read the Bible first, mamma, I always like to hear about God."

*Elk City, Okla.Nellie's Raspberries.

Little Nellie was angry. She had some raspberry vines—her very own—and now the robins and other birds were picking the fruit as fast as it got ripe.

"If only they'd leave me just a few," she said, tearfully, to her mother, "I wouldn't mind it so much; but they won't; they just watch the berries all the time, and pick 'em even before they get ripe. I haven't had one, and they've been eating them two or free days."

"Oh, well, never mind," said her mother, consolingly; "papa's big patch will commence to ripen soon, and then the birds will go down there. You see, yours are on the hillside and get ripe first; that's what makes the birds watch them so eagerly. As soon as papa's are ripe, there will be enough for both of us and the birds."

"But it's the first ones I want," said Nellie, plaintively. "That's what makes mine so nice. After papa's get ripe, there'll be so many they won't be any fun. They'll be too common. If only the birds would scare; but they won't. I frowed sticks and stones, and shoo'd 'em and runned after 'em; and they only laughed at me. I know they laughed, 'cause a big robin said 'Chip, chip, chip,' and then picked a raspberry and flew right past. Well, 'taint any use," she added, resignedly; "but I'll go down and try to scare 'em once more."

Half an hour or so later she returned with a radiant face.

"I think you have succeeded in scaring them away," said her mother, smiling.

"Oh, no," answered Nellie, eagerly, and flushing a little. "I've just made friends, that's all. You see, I chased a robin 'way down to the orchard, clear to the quince bushes where the limbs grow low down; and I pulled the branches aside; and—what do you think, mamma?"

"I'm sure I couldn't guess."

"Well, there was the loveliest robin's nest, with free little baby robins in it. And they opened their mouths—oh, ever so wide! I s'pect they was hungry."

"Very likely. And what did you do?"

"Just slipped away, soft's I could. She paused a moment, then said: "Oh, mamma! I'm never going to frow anything at a bird again, long's I live! Maybe the mamma robin was getting raspberries for her babies."—Churchman.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

Last week I promised to tell why I missed one of the Advance Society rules. It was this way: I went out to the country home of my cousins, whom you all know—Louise and Annie Laurie, you will remember—are the little girls who ride their ponies to school; and their sister, Susie Seare, is the one whose name now and then appears on our Honor List. While there I camped out with two boys and as many dogs, by the side of a large body of water—not exactly a lake, but not a cistern, either. There was a raft on it, which had been in existence and in the water nine years, so it was water soaked and could hardly keep itself afloat when all six of us were on it at once. That made it fun, because it might dip under at any moment, which gave us something to look forward to. We built an oven at the margin of the water, and again I tried cooked mussels which we found in the bottom of the fish pond. They tasted just as curious as ever, and I believe there is some part of a mussel that ought to be taken away from the rest of it before it is fried. I have read of people walking by the seaside and eating mussels as found in their wild state of nature; you have read about it. But I say, if they taste cooked as they do taste, how would they taste raw? There is a point of land that runs out into the middle of the stream. A few years ago I cut the tip end of the point away from the mainland, making an island. This summer I cut the channel deeper and wider, so to get to the island now, you cross a bridge (one plank) which I erected on a high pillar of dried mud. Next summer I hope to cut the mainland farther back, so the island will be more out in the water. I would hate to be an island and have people able to step on me from the mainland, with one step! At night we had a camp fire and there was no moon, and we sat and talked while the water looked solemn, and the lantern shone dimly from the tent, and the dogs curled themselves into balls, with their noses between their hind legs. And somehow or other I forgot one of my Av. S. rules.

Donnie Swift, Billings, Mo.: "In a late CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST you inquired if I were lost. No, I am not lost, but I acknowledge I have neglected writing more than I intended when I joined. I am going to begin my 3rd quarter. A pretty quotation:

'Tis said and by most folks allowed
That the lining of every cloud
Is bright and shining;
So I'll turn my clouds about
And always wear them inside out
To show the lining.'

On my last birthday I was given 'The Wide, Wide World.' I have also read 'The Hoosier Schoolmaster.' (Both are splendid.) "Saturday we went to a picnic. It rained just before we started, but it stopped and we had a fine time. Our school began Sept. 1. I got two prizes in my class last year. Josie Lineberry will surely get 'The Red Box Clew' for the most interesting letter" (about the ghost march at school.) "I liked 'Pete' best of all your stories I have read. I would like very much to read 'Adnah.'"

Madge Masters, Ozark, Ark.: "I hardly know how or where to begin, it has been so long since I have written. The week before I came home from school, I had the measles, and the fun I had playing flinch with the matron and another girl who had measles, too!" (Wasn't you glad she had it?) "Soon after I came home, I started to a teachers' normal. I took a third grade certificate. I intended to go to a picnic July 4, but it rained. My cousin, Will Saunders, was going to town for some ice, so we, Claire, Eunice Saunders, Vera, Virgil Norman and Nona West" (the children who got the hen out of the well, if I am not mistaken) "concluded we would go along. So Will put on the bows and wagon sheet and a lot of hay in the wagon, and away we went! Such fun as we did have! On the way home some were afraid the ice might jolt out, so they took turns sitting on it." (Must have been hard on the ice!) "I have only gone fishing once this year, but I had lots of fun then. Mrs. Quail took 16 of us in a big transfer wagon with four mules hitched to it. We had quite a time getting packed in. There were not many fish caught. I think old gold, dark blue and white would be nice Av. S. colors. Brother Martin held a meeting at Oak Hill in July; Eva Hawkins was one of the 7 additions." (Good for our Av. S. member!) "The other night I went to a camp meeting and a woman got to shouting and stepped on a dog, and you ought to have heard it howl. It almost broke up the meeting for that night." (What fun there is down in Arkansas! Our meetings never stop till the preacher does. Excuse my spelling your state 'Arkansaw.' There are so many people who don't know Arkansas is pronounced "saw," but think they must show it is kin to Kansas, that I want to make them call it right for once! They might look in the dictionary and see Arkansas is pronounced "saw," but they wouldn't do that for anything. They think they know already. That's the trouble with most people, anyway.) "Well, I will close for this time, as I hear Vera and Eunice laughing out on the porch, and I want to see what the fun is." (I wish I knew what they were laughing about!)

New Honor List: Mrs. F. A. Potts, Cartersville, Ga. (10th quarter); M. Emily Day, Sparta, Mo. (8th and 9th quarters); Mrs. Florence L. Smith, Pawnee, Okla.; Harry Cash, Hood River, Ore. (16th); Josie Lineberry, St. Catherine, Mo. (4th); Madge Masters, (19th quarter); Bernice Pickett, Denver, Col. (6th); Edna Shriver, Nebo, Ill. (1st and 2nd); Sarah Naylor, Waldron, Mo.; Nannie D. Chambers, Richwood, Ky. (18th); Ruth E. Day, Sparta, Mo. (2nd); Ada Miller, New Home, Mo.; Grace T. Hord, Grayson, Mo.; Bertha Beesley, Moselle, Mo. (19th).

Alta Tucker, Frankford, Mo.: "I am sorry not to have kept the Av. S. rules this quarter. I had the measles, and as soon as I got well, I went away on a visit. I was gone three months. I like the idea of having colors and the ones I vote for are old gold and blue. I wonder where Madge Masters is?"

HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA CURED BY THE KOLA PLANT.

A New and Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA has been found in the Kola Plant, a rare botanic product of West African origin. So great are the powers of this

THE KOLA PLANT. New Remedy that in the short time since its discovery it has come into almost universal use in the hospitals of Europe and America for the cure of every form of Hay-Fever and Asthma. Its cures are really marvelous. Men, women and children who have been given up as incurable are being restored daily to perfect health by the use of Himalaya. Thousands of letters attesting its wonderful cures have been written the importers, but limited space prevents a detailed list. Read what a few have to say, proving that Hay-Fever and Asthma can be cured:

Mr. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes Jan. 31st, Himalaya permanently cured him of Hay-Fever and Asthma. He strongly recommends it to sufferers. Dr. W. H. Vail, a prominent physician of St. Louis, Mo., writes March 8th, that he used Himalaya on six different Hay-Fever patients last Fall with satisfactory results in every case. Mr. A. L. Clark, Springfield, Mo., writes Jan. 22d, was a sufferer of Hay-Fever and Asthma for thirty years and thought I would die every Fall but Himalaya completely cured me. Mr. Geo. C. Dye, Marietta, Ohio, writes Jan. 28th, I was cured after twenty years suffering with Hay-Fever and Asthma. Mr. J. B. Ayie, Estherville, Iowa, writes Feb. 28th, that he was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after severe suffering for 28 years. Miss Eva Preston, Petersburg, Ind., writes March 8th, that she suffered untold misery for 18 years with Hay-Fever and Asthma. Is completely cured, although her physician said that a cure was impossible. Mr. E. B. Hume, 1345 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa., a widely-known traveler, writes Feb. 28d, Himalaya cured me of Asthma when everything else failed. Dr. J. R. Duncan, the oldest physician of Crawfordville, Ind., writes Jan. 27th, it is my duty to tell all I can of the great virtue of Himalaya. Rev. J. L. Coombs, Martinsburg, W. Va., writes to the New York World, July 23rd, that it cured him of Asthma of 39 years' standing.

If you suffer from Hay-Fever and Asthma in any form, do not despair, but write at once to the Kola Importing Co., No. 1106 Broadway, New York City, N.Y., who in order to prove the power of this wonderful new botanic discovery will send you one Trial Case by mail, entirely Free. Remember it costs you absolutely nothing.

(She seems to have been in the measles, where you were.) "I am glad Bertha Beesley passed her examination. I wish I could go to school to her this winter."

Ethel L. Harpole, Nebo, Ill.: Our branch of the Av. S. all voted upon cherry and white, but I think blue and old gold pretty, too. A few weeks ago the annual G. A. R. reunion was held here. It lasted three days and rained two. Every one around here goes to it, drinks weak lemonade and rides in the merry-go-round. Sometimes they drink something stronger." (We are going to have one of those reunions this very week and they are putting up the merry-go-round this morning. If anything happens at it except old soldiers, I may tell you about it later.) "I know you think I write too often." (I know I don't.).

The Chinese Story-Teller, or the Changed Story, by Wm. Remfry Hunt (Foreign Christian Missionary Society). Author of "Facts About China," with a foreword by W. P. Bentley, M. A. This is a handsome cloth bound volume with seventeen illustrations, and contains 167 pages. The price is 75 cents.

"This is an interior view of China and of Chinese life. It breathes the spirit of orientalism. It is a thrilling story of a heroic life. Evangelist Shi Kwei Piao, the Chinese story-teller, is a most interesting character, a genius in his way, an orator of native ability, and a shining illustration of the power of the gospel to redeem and purify human life. Mr. Shi was a Chinese story-teller, wandering from village to village, and a victim of the opium habit, who had experienced all the misery and wretchedness of that worst form of slavery. The gospel story touched his heart, aroused his better nature and led to a death-grapple with the opium habit in which, through prayer and struggle and conflict and defeats, he came at last to complete victory and to freedom, and is now a wise, able and consecrated preacher, laboring successfully in connection with our other missionaries in China. His picture, which is the frontispiece of the book, indicates a strong character. Incidental to the story of this remarkable life, there is much of Chinese history, customs and characteristics. The book is illustrated with pen drawings, is handsomely bound in yellow, and is one of the most valuable contributions to our foreign missionary literature. It is the latest book from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, and deserves a wide reading from the brethren in this country who wish to know how their brethren in China live and labor, and what is the outlook for their work. The author dedicates his work to 'Dr. W. T. Moore, M. A., LL. D., from whom I first learned to interpret the story of the Christ.'"

On Growing Old.

IS it not sad to grow old? Say rather that it is a very difficult art, and one which few men have ever acquired. But where is he who understands his trade? Do the young know how to be young? The rich to be rich? Graciously to bear health is perhaps as rare as it is so to bear illness. Each one dabbles in the business of others and gives them advice. To grow old is sad indeed, if what you want is to hold back the receding years, to keep your hair from growing white, your eyes from becoming dim, and the wrinkles from chiselling their way across your brow. But if from all these vicissitudes to which life subjects you, you draw a bit of wisdom, of profit, of goodness, to grow old is to become free and large. One of the most beautiful things in the world is an old person who, made better by experience, more indulgent, more charitable, loves mankind in spite of its wretchedness and adores youth without the slightest tendency to mimic it. Such a person is like an old Stradivarius whose tone has become so sweet that its value is increased a hundred-fold, and it seems almost to have a soul.

For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

The School of Journalism.

The announcement of Joseph Pulitzer's gift of $2,000,000 to establish a School of Journalism has called forth many speculations as to what sort of course of study the new school will have. The following curriculum has been suggested by President Eliot, of Harvard, who is a member of the advisory board:

Newspaper Administration.—The organization of a newspaper office; functions of the publisher; circulation department; advertising department; editorial and "reportorial" departments; the financing of a newspaper; local, out-of-town and foreign news service; editorial, literary, financial, sporting and other departments.

Newspaper Manufacture.—Printing presses; inks, paper; electrotyping and stereotyping process; type composition; typesetting and typecasting machines; processes for reproducing illustrations; folding, binding and mailing devices.

The Law of Journalism.—Copyright; libel, including civil, criminal and seditious libel; rights and duties of the press in reporting judicial proceedings; liabilities of publisher, editor, reporter and contributor.

Ethics of Journalism.—Proper sense of responsibility to the public on the part of newspaper writers; to what extent should the opinions of the editor or owner of a newspaper affect its presentation of news? relations of publisher, editor and reporters as regards freedom of opinion.

History of Journalism.—Freedom of the press, etc.

The Literary Form of Newspapers.—Approved usages in punctuation, spelling, abbreviations, typography, etc.

Re-Enforcement of Existing Departments of Instruction for the benefit of students of journalism: In English—Reporting of news, news letters, reviews, paragraph writing, editorial writing; In history—Emphasis on contemporary history, government and geography; In Political Science—Emphasis on contemporary economic problems and financial administration.

The presence of the American squadron under Admiral Cotton in the harbor of Beirut has had a most salutary effect upon the situation in that chronically turbulent town. Mr. Leishman, the American minister at Constantinople, demanded the removal of the incompetent and corrupt vali (governor) of Beirut, and the demand was complied with very promptly. The newly appointed vali is a man generally respected by both Mohammedans and Christians, and the foreign population at Beirut feels that the visit of the American squadron has been amply justified by the accomplishment of this change in the local administration. As further information is received, it becomes more and more evident that the attack on the United States consul was not the act of a drunken sailor or irresponsible reveler, but was part of a larger program of disorder. There has been considerable rioting between the Turks and the Greek Christians, beginning with the assassination of three or four Christians. Before the trouble could be gotten under control, the list of victims on both sides increased to about thirty. Some criticisms were passed upon the President's act in ordering the squadron to Beirut, on the ground that Turkey is a friendly power and should be given an opportunity to explain the attack on Consul Magelssen before a naval demonstration was made. The criticism is based on a disregard of certain well-known traits of Turkish character, namely, a peculiar fertility in explanations and promises, and a settled aversion to performance except under compulsion. The fact is that Turkey is not a civilized power in any reasonable sense of the term, and her technical status as a friendly government cannot be allowed to interfere with the necessary steps for the protection of American citizens. The diplomatic fiction that the Turkish government is responsible and civilized lies at the root of many of the anomalies in the treatment of the eastern question by the European powers. It is to be hoped that our own policy will not be vitiated by that same transparently false assumption. Facts are facts even in diplomacy, and calling a system of organized piracy a civilized government does not make it one.

The Premier of Bulgaria has informed the representatives of the European powers that unless there is such intervention as will effectually put an end to the Turkish atrocities in Macedonia, Bulgaria will feel compelled to declare war on Turkey for the protection of her Macedonian kinsmen. The reply, as informally given, was that in case of such interference by Bulgaria, the powers would not permit her to annex any Macedonian territory which might be won from Turkey. There is a strong suspicion that Bulgaria's interest is not wholly unselfish. In that case this assurance from the powers will be a strong deterrent. The worst feature of the attitude of the powers is that they appear to feel that there is some special merit in maintaining the present status in Turkey. The Turkish regime in Macedonia has a distinction of being the worst possible solution of a problem for which there exists at present no very good solution. Meanwhile the massacres go on. It is estimated that in the vilayet (province) of Monastir 50,000 men, women and children have been massacred by the Turks in the past few months, and it is said that every Bulgarian province in the vilayet has been destroyed.

Bulgaria's Threat.

An abuse, or at least a very questionable use, of federal patronage has come to light in a Delaware case which is the more noteworthy because the name of the notorious Addicks is indirectly connected with the affair. Miss Tod, postmistress at Greenwood, Del., suddenly found herself dismissed from office for no assigned reason. She went to Washington and interviewed the postmaster-general, who admitted that no fault had been found with her work and offered no explanation of the removal except that she was "personally obnoxious to Senator Allee." As Senator Allee is a very particular friend of Mr. Addicks and is commonly believed to be devoting himself rather largely to furthering Mr. Addicks' senatorial ambitions, the incident suggests quite too clearly that the federal patronage of Delaware is being used in the interest of the latter gentleman's political fortunes. This deduction may not be justified, but the best construction that can be put upon the facts leaves upon the postmaster-general the odium of permitting federal patronage to be used in the satisfaction of personal dislikes and prejudices. Here is an excellent opportunity for the President to intervene. Is incompatibility of temperament between a postmaster and a senator to be considered a sufficient ground for divorcing the former from his office? When Mr. Payne entered President Roosevelt's cabinet, he brought with him a reputation for adroitness in the subterranean maneuvers of practical politics, inasmuch that his appointment was something of a surprise to those who had high hopes of a reform administration. We had hoped that, among new associates, Mr. Payne would break off his old habits. The only defense which we have seen offered is that the case of Miss Tod has plenty of precedents. This, very likely, is too true. But in that case the precedents also need explanation.

The Washington grand jury has brought in seven more indictments for postal frauds. The investigation is now in the hands of the department of justice.

A novel plan for disposing of the Philippine Islands with both honor and profit has been suggested by H. L. Atkinson, pastor of the Christian Church at Geneva, O. In brief, the suggestion is that the archipelago be traded to Japan in exchange for the service of Japanese coolies in digging the isthmian canal by either the Panama or the Nicaragua route. The argument is that the United States does not need the islands except for coaling stations, which could be reserved in case of the transfer; that Japan, with her population of 45,000,000 in a territory the size of California, needs room for expansion; that the climate of the Philippines is better suited to Japanese than to Anglo-Saxon inhabitants; that the islands would be sure of good government under Japan; that the Japanese laborers could endure the deadly climate of the isthmus and dig the canal with less loss of life than any other race; and that to be honorably relieved of responsibility for the Philippines would strengthen the prestige of the United States among the nations. This suggestion has been forwarded to the President. There are some points about it which are decidedly good. We would rather see the Philippines in the hands of the Japanese than under the control of any other Asiatic or European power. By virtue of her location, Japan is forced to stand in the forefront of opposition to Russian aggression in the far east, and the peaceful acquisition of the Philippines would greatly strengthen her prestige.

We are pleased to note an increasing volume of sentiment among the Labor Unions. labor unions disapproving of the action and attitude of the New York House-smiths' and Bridgebuilders' union, who have determined to stick by Parks, guilty or not guilty. "Our delegate, right or wrong," is a poor motto for any union, and we are sure it will not be generally adopted. It is worth noting that the local union which stood for Parks has had its charter annulled by the international organization to which it belongs, not for this particular act, but for breaking faith with its employers and disregarding a contract.

Catholics are protesting against the oath of allegiance which is required of members of the Typographical Union. The objectionable part of the oath is as follows:

"I hereby solemnly and sincerely swear that my fidelity to the Typographical Union, and my duty to the members thereof, shall in no sense be interfered with by any allegiance that I may now or hereafter owe to any other organization, social, political, or religious."

The objection is well founded. No organization of this sort has a right to exalt its interests and its laws above all religious, social and patriotic obligations. It cannot make good such claims. Probably it never expects to try to, so there is no serious danger. But if the clause does not contain a menace, it is a piece of gratuitous and offensive arrogance. Bishop Scannel has declared that no good Catholic can take this oath and has refused absolution to all who will not renounce it. A meeting of Catholic printers at Omaha was called to protest against the Bishop's action. A prominent Catholic member of the union, whose attitude is believed to be representative, said: "I venture to say that not one Catholic printer in Omaha and few in America will give up the union for absolution."

The death of Thomas M. Clark, Protestant Episcopal bishop of Rhode Island, on Sept. 7, removes the senior and presiding bishop of this church. Bishop Clark graduated from Yale College seventy-two years ago, studied theology and became a Presbyterian minister, but a little later went over to the Episcopal faith, in which he lived to the good old age of ninety-one. According to the constitution of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the chairmanship of the house of bishops is vested in the senior member of that body—not necessarily the oldest, but the one who has been longest a bishop. By this rule, Bishop Tuttle, of St. Louis, now becomes presiding bishop. The change raises again the old question, which has been up many times in recent years, whether this body needs an executive head. The presiding bishop is merely a chairman, and during the interval between triennial assemblies has no more authority or influence than any other bishop. Some of the leading Episcopal papers, notably the Churchman, are arguing strongly in favor of creating an office which will virtually make that church in this country a constitutional monarchy. At present each diocese is practically independent, and it is against the evils of "diocesanism" that they wish to provide by crowning their ecclesiastical structure with a "chief executive of the church."

A clear-cut and forcible statement of one proposed solution of the negro problem was given at the University of Chicago convocation, Sept. 3, by Mr. John Temple Graves, of Atlanta, Ga. After reviewing the situation as it is, with the conflicts, inequalities and dangers, which all admit and deplore, he suggested what he called "the only remedy," namely, the separation of the races and the colonization of the negroes in some territory at present virtually unoccupied. The suggestion is not altogether a novel one, but we do not know that it has ever before found such ardent advocacy. Mr. Graves believes that the negro would be willing to go, that the white man both north and south would be willing to have him go, and that the expense, great as it would be, would not be out of proportion to the benefits derived. The negro, he says, is no longer an economic necessity in the south as he was in the past. Mr. Graves compares this plan with the scheme of the Zionists for taking the Jews back to Palestine. Even if these two cases were entirely parallel, the comparison would not altogether prove the practicability of the former. They are not parallel, however, for the negroes would lack entirely the historic and religious motive which actuates the Zionists in their desire to return to the land of their fathers. We cannot here discuss the practicability of the project. If it is practicable, it may be desirable. But what we do doubt most seriously is its necessity. To say that this is "the only remedy" is to say that the negro problem is susceptible of no solution at all, and that the only thing you can do with it is to give it up. The problem is, how shall two races as unlike as the negro and white races live together in the same country? Mr. Graves' answer is, they can't. By the Chinese exclusion act our government has recorded its inability to solve a similar problem as related to the Chinese. If, as Mr. Graves says, the negro and white races are essentially "opposite, unequal and antagonistic," it is surely unreasonable to expect any solution of the problem. But if, granting their inequality, it should transpire that the antagonism is not essential, but is only an incidental consequence of mistakes that have been made on both sides, then it is not clear that we should be ready to give up the problem and set ourselves to devising methods for eliminating one of its factors.

Brevities.

The steamer Deutschland has lowered the record for the west bound trans-Atlantic voyage to five days, eleven hours and fifty-four minutes.

Archbishop Ireland says: "Capital is stored labor, the fruit and result of labor." True. But the man who does the labor is not always the one to whose credit it is stored up in the form of capital. Too often it is like putting money in a bank of which some one else holds the key.

Charles J. Bonaparte has been selected as special commissioner to investigate the alleged misconduct of federal officials in connection with Indian affairs. Mr. Bonaparte is a public-spirited citizen of Baltimore, who has devoted much time to reform work and has taken a prominent part in the work of the Indian Rights Association. His appointment to conduct this investigation is a guarantee that it will be honestly and efficiently done.

The rule against smoking at West Point has recently been revoked by order of the principal and with the consent of the Secretary of War. But cigarettes are still under the ban. In this connection it may be interesting to know that the new pope is the first incumbent of that office who smokes, though his two immediate predecessors used snuff. The Italian clergy, who look upon wine as a necessity of life but generally regard tobacco as a secular and sinful indulgence, are said to be considerably scandalized at the pope's habit, especially as he smokes a brand of cigars bearing the name of an Italian statesman who was largely instrumental in depriving the papacy of its temporal power.

There is a rumor that New York is being seriously considered as the place for holding the Republican convention next year. This would be somewhat remarkable, as Mr. Roosevelt, who will doubtless be the presidential candidate, is a New York man, and it is the custom to hold the convention in a city somewhat remote from the home of the probable candidate. If New York is being seriously considered in this connection, it means that Mr. Roosevelt is looked upon as in reality a western candidate, and that his cause needs strengthening in New York more than elsewhere. His exceptional hold upon the affections and admiration of the west gives good ground for at least the first of these suppositions.

An Ideal Church.

Perhaps we can sum up the remaining things we desire to say on the general subject of church organization and life in a single article under the above title. The ideal church has not been and will not be, probably, for a long time to come. But it is well to have the standard before us toward which to struggle. No great success in any department of life can be achieved without high ideals.

The ideal church is, of course, a church made up wholly of converted persons who have been brought into newness of life through the regenerative power of the gospel. Its members understand that to be Christians is to have the mind of Christ and to follow him. Their chief aim, therefore, is to advance the kingdom of God. The members do not "look each upon his own things alone, but also upon the things of others." They have a mutual care for each other. Love is the animating principle of their conduct in relation to each other. This enables them to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." They have their faults and weaknesses, as the best of people do while in the flesh. But they bear each other's burdens, and each judges himself severely and others charitably.

It goes without saying that the ideal church is a working church. It does not exist for its own sake. Its object is not to raise enough funds to meet its current expenses and feel satisfied with itself. It recognizes itself as a factor in all the great movements of the brotherhood, and joyfully bears its part of the burden in all educational, benevolent and missionary enterprises. It does this, no matter whether it be a poor church or a rich church. It recognizes that if it be poor, it is under the same obligation to give what it can as if it were rich. Besides participation in these general interests, the church does a local work in the community. For this purpose it is well organized. Its pastor is a bishop as well as a shepherd. At least the office of overseer is supplied in some part of the eldership. This means a distribution of workers according to their natural gifts, tastes and training to the different kinds of work to be done. No class of members is neglected, but all are made to feel that they have an important function to fulfill in the church.

The ideal church holds its preacher in highest and tenderest regard. They guard sacredly his reputation, and lay no unnecessary burdens on his time and strength. They recognize his hours of study and govern themselves accordingly. They do not expect him to be eloquent, nor demand that he shall always preach a big sermon. They only require that he be sincere, earnest, diligent in the study of God's word, and faithful in proclaiming the gospel of the grace of God. They do not lay the whole responsibility for the success or failure of the church upon their preacher, but feel that quite as much depends upon the manner in which they discharge their duties. As one means of helping the preacher, they are conscientious in their attendance, as far as possible, upon all the regular meetings of the church. They worship in private as well as in public, and strive to live during the week so as to enforce the preacher's sermon on the Lord's day.

The officers of such a church have regular monthly meetings with reports from all departments of the work, and confer together as to how they may push the work more vigorously. All the members of the ideal church contribute something for the support of the church, and hence there is always money in its treasury and all bills are promptly met. There are no drones nor dead heads in the model church. The officers feel a fatherly care for all the members, and see to it that no root of bitterness springs up among them.

They do not put on the airs of authority or make their office a ground of haughty pride, but are the true servants of the church in counsel and performance.

Finally, the preacher or pastor of such a church gives himself, as did the apostles, to "prayer and to the ministry of the Word." He is a man of faith, of uncompromising fidelity to Christ, as his Lord and Master, a constant student of the Holy Scriptures, and a man who spends much time in prayer. He loves his church, and his constant thought is how he may increase its power and usefulness. He loves the individual members, rich or poor, learned or unlearned, and rejoices in nothing so much as in witnessing their growth in the spiritual life. Like Paul, he seeks not theirs, but them. He is among them as one that serveth, and his supreme desire and prayer is that he may be able to present them faultless before the throne of God. He does not think of himself, nor does his congregation think of him, as a preacher who has been hired for a year, but as a spiritual shepherd and leader who has come among them to live and labor with them, to build up the kingdom of God, and they expect this relation to continue as long as God gives it his divine sanction.

There is no more beautiful and tender relation in this world, outside of the home, nor one more sacred, than that which exists between pastor and flock in an ideal congregation. But there are mutual duties and obligations which must be observed and performed in order to the realization of the full benefits of this relation. May the great Head of the Church, the chief Shepherd and Bishop of our souls, fill all his under-shepherds with his own spirit and lofty ideals, until all their flocks may be brought under his direct care, in the green pastures and beside the still flowing waters of the life eternal!

A Suggestion to the Pulpit.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: "What, in your judgment, are some of the truths which the pulpit of to-day should emphasize?"—Timothy.

We should mention the following:

1. The fundamental conception of religion, as having to do with the relations of man to God and to his fellowmen. This involves a profounder study of the being and character of God, and of the nature, needs and obligations of man. There is need of going back to first principles and to original and basic ideas of religion. This will require a more earnest, systematic and independent study of the Bible in the light of all that science, history and philosophy can contribute to a better understanding of it.

2. The doctrine of the divine immanence, or the truth that God is present in his world to-day as really and truly, and probably to a greater degree, than in any former age of the world. There is no truth that has more vitality in it, more power to renew the spiritual life of man, than that of a present God, working to-day as of old in human history, through all the forces of nature, and in the human heart, revealing Himself and seeking to fill the world with his life and light. All reformations, whether individual or collective, have their origin in the recognition, with more or less distinctness, of this great fact. No "absentee God" can meet the demands of men in this strenuous age.

3. The need of a deeper and profounder spiritual life growing out of, and based upon, the recognition of these fundamental truths, freed from artificiality, pretense and meaningless formality; and manifesting itself, not in a monastic separation from the world, but in loving service for the world. The feeling of obligation to minister to the world's needs is the great need of the Church to-day. As Professor Coe has said, "What the Christian world needs is a new sense of guilt, a realization on the part of each of us that I am taking part in the sin of the world, that I am responsible for its misery to the extent to which I might prevent the one and relieve the other. Is there evil in my family? I cannot help bearing the burden of it. We must come to a similar sense of solidarity with respect to all the larger groups to which we belong. Is the government of my city corrupt? I must carry the burden of this corruption on my own soul."

4. The unity of the Church. The fact that Jesus Christ has established on this earth but one Church, and that that Church exists to-day in a divided condition, which is an abnormal and unnatural condition, needs continued emphasis. It is only the recognition of this fact that can give to the various religious movements, known as denominations, a true conception of their relation to each other and to their common Lord and Master. Among ourselves there is special need of a better conception, on the part of many, of our relation to the religious bodies about us. This is the real problem underlying the question of Church Federation, to settle which is to settle the question of federation. If our rightful relation to the other Christian forces of the world is that of enemies, and our proper attitude toward them one of hostility, then of course federation with them is out of the question. But if these religious neighbors be our brethren, differing from us on some questions of doctrine, as we do from them, and yet holding the common faith in the common Lord, and our relation is that of friendly allies, with differences which seem to make necessary for a time, our separate existences, but making war meanwhile against the common enemy, then federation is the natural and common sense policy as well as the Christian course for us to adopt, both for the purpose of overcoming our common foes and in hastening our complete unity.

The True Classification.

Some one has kindly sent us a neatly printed tractlet containing an able article by Prof. Willis J. Beecher, of Auburn Seminary, entitled "The Old Tradition and the New," the substance of which appeared in a recent issue of The Congregationalist. Prof. Beecher quotes two paragraphs from a recent author, whose name he does not give, defining the two methods known as higher criticism, or the modern view, and its opposite. Following are the statements defining the two methods:

"And what are these two methods? That of the higher criticism is—that the Bible shall be interpreted by a devout study of its various parts, with all the light that can be thrown upon it from all sources. Its concrete purpose is to ascertain its full and exact history. It has no theory of inspiration; it simply investigates and reports what it finds.

"The method of the other side is based on an unquestioning assent to the Bible as a miraculously inspired book, every word literally true, every event historical, without myth or legend—infallible—the whole being the product of the direct inspiration of God, and therefore equally authoritative in all its parts. Such and so unlike are the two methods."

Now no one need be told on reading these definitions that the man who framed them is himself either a higher critic or accepts the view of at least the evangelical wing of higher critics. His statement of what higher criticism is, rightly conceived, may be unobjectionable, but when he comes to state the opposite view he puts it in a form that hundreds of Christian scholars can not accept, even among those who reject, in the main, what is known as higher criticism. There are possibly a few extremists who would affirm all that is stated in this definition of "the other side;" but, as Prof. Beecher points out, there are very many higher critics whose views and methods do not agree with the definition of the Modern View, and there are many opposed to the Modern View who do not accept the author's definition of the method of "the other side."

The truth is, you can not divide the Bible students of to-day into two classes, except on the broadest lines, for there are many views and many schools of thought which have their advocates, and these shade off from the most ultra conservative to the most ultra radical. If we should attempt to divide the Bible critics of to-day into two classes, we would say that one class enters upon the investigation of the Bible with the presupposition that there is no supernatural or miraculous element in the Bible, or in Bible history, and that all that we find there must be accounted for on naturalistic principles, and the rest rejected. The other class enters the investigation without any such presupposition, with minds open to accept the evidence of supernatural forces and agencies when the events narrated or the history recorded can not be accounted for on any other hypothesis. Each of these two general classes may be subdivided, but here is the main line of cleavage.

Prof. Beecher, who classes himself with the conservatives and against the modern view, calls on those who favor the modern view and who yet hold to evangelical views, to make it known that their views are different from those rationalistic critics with whom they are aligned. This they certainly ought to do, but it must be remembered that there were rationalists and infidels and enemies of the Bible before there was any higher criticism, in the modern sense of the term, and that it ought not to be laid to the charge of believing critics that some rationalists and skeptics are using some of the principles of higher criticism to further their destructive ends. It must be remembered, also, that many of the worst enemies of the Bible to-day are those who hold to the ancient traditions, and to the most ultra-conservative view, believing that by doing so they can make the Bible appear more incredible. Biblical investigation, according to certain well-recognized, legitimate rules, such as the historical and inductive methods, is something entirely apart from agnosticism or rationalism. In strict accuracy, no rationalist, whose philosophy compels him to reject supernatural events, or the presence of a supernatural agency, is a legitimate Bible critic, and such an one ought not to be classed with them. Any presupposition that closes the mind against the inductive method of reasoning, bars entrance to legitimate Biblical criticism. The man, for instance, who has fully made up his mind that God must have revealed Himself in a particular way, and according to a particular plan, and who is unwilling to accept evidence showing a different method, rules himself out of the real and genuine class of Bible critics who are searching for the truth as for hidden treasures, and whose minds are open to all the evidence which they find. We believe the time is coming when the line will be drawn more distinctly between legitimate and illegitimate criticism, and when it will become more manifest to the popular mind that they are not guides to be followed, whether they be named radical or conservative, who are not willing to make room for all the facts, in their theories, and to be governed by the tested and generally-accepted rules of scientific investigation.

Or

Macatawa Musings.

Whoever studies the lake region of the north and understands how, in the glacial epoch, these great lakes and the innumerable small ones had their basins scooped out by the agency of glaciers and icebergs, will be impressed anew with that wise prevision that marks all the creative acts of God. These great inland seas and bays perform a most beneficent function in modifying climate, and hence in determining the productions of the soil and hygienic conditions. An interesting feature of this lake system are the numerous bays, which are but arms of these lakes, but more sheltered by their land-locked situation. One of the most remarkable of these bays is Grand Traverse Bay, extending from Traverse City on the south to the Light House on the extreme northern point of the peninsula, a distance of about 40 miles. The peninsula thus formed between Lake Michigan and the bay is Leelanau County, whose capital is Leland, located at the point where Leelanau Lake—once called Carp Lake—a long slender sheet of water, lying between Lake Michigan and Traverse Bay—joins the great lake.

About twenty-five miles above Traverse City, a point of heavy-timbered land projects out from the west side for a mile into the bay, saying to the waves that sweep down from the north out of the great lake, "thus far and no farther." In the sheltered nook of this point of land, in a beautiful cove, is located the picturesque little town of Omena. Here is a deep harbor where the largest lake vessels may land. Here are two churches teaching the Indians and whites the way of life—the one a Presbyterian, the other a Congregationalist, and they are in a stone's throw of each other and neither able, alone, to properly support a pastor—a good place for Christian union to be put into effect. But thereby hangs a tale, which we will not tell. One mile south of Omena village, on a beautiful slope running down to the bay, and under the sheltering wings of Omena Point, is "The Clovers." And what is "The Clovers?" It is a quiet, orderly, well-kept little hotel, that is beginning to take on the character of a resort because the people will go there. They love its spirit of restfulness, its great orchard, its clover-scented hill-sides, its crystal bay, its genuine hospitality. For these reasons, the editor and his wife returned thither for a few days during the past week, having made a brief visit there in July.

"The Clovers" is owned and conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Algeron Keyes, and they are the kind of keys that unlock people's hearts and make them feel at home. The hotel has already overrun its original capacity, and two large and handsome cottages have been erected for the accommodation of its guests. Sitting on the vine-covered veranda of the hotel, or of either of the cottages, one looks east across as beautiful a sheet of water as ever delighted the heart of man, to Old Mission Point, and beyond to Elk Rapids, while to the north is New Mission Point, and far to the south lies Traverse City. Immediately in front of the hotel and cottages and all around, are bending fruit trees, laden with apples, pears, hyslop crabs, plums. Such luscious plums! A trip around Leelanau Lake to Leland, and back by way of Provemont and Fountain House, and another down Traverse Bay to Traverse City in a little steamer, will be cherished in memory forever. The Traverse City branch of the Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad, has recently been extended along the west coast of the bay as far as Northport, five miles beyond "The Clovers," where the Chicago steamers land. This road has done much for the development of this region, and has opened up some of the finest resort property in the state. If ever conditions require our removal from dear Macatawa, we should like, with the bees, to share the sweets of "The Clovers."

Returning from our northern trip we spent a few hours very pleasantly at Traverse City, where by the kindness of Brother Ullom, pastor of the thriving Christian Church in that city, we had a drive through the city, and an opportunity of seeing evidences of its thrift and growth. It is a city of 12,000 population and is growing rapidly. The church, under Brother Ullom's labors, has made an equally remarkable growth, now numbering about 300 members, with a new and handsome $10,000 church approaching completion. One of the members from the country, Brother Dobbins, told us what a great work Brother Ullom was doing.

But now we are back at Macatawa Park, and this is our last night in "Edgewood-on-the-lake" for this season. A cricket is chirping his only note, as we write, and aside from that the low swish of the waves on the beach is all the sound we hear. This morning we gathered some fern roots and hepaticas to ship to the home at Rose Hill, St. Louis. This afternoon we caught a few perch for breakfast, after which the blinds will go up till the "dear old summer time" comes again. Till then, and if forever, still forever, dear old Macatawa, fare thee well!

Notes and Comments.

"Baptists not only want to make Christians, but Baptists as well," says the Word and Way (Baptist). That is just the difference between them and us. If we can make Christians only, we are quite satisfied. And this is our justification for claiming that we do not occupy a denominational position.

A commercial report in a recent paper says, "Whiskies are quiet." Glad to hear it. In this region they are still uproariously and riotously active. A really quiet, peaceable and law-abiding whisky would meet a long-felt want—but then, nobody would use it.

The laments of the liquor-dealers over the increase of temperance are edifying and encouraging. The Boston Liquor Dealer makes moan as follows over the decreasing profits of the business:

The younger generation is not drinking as the old did in the past. No matter how good socially men were, they thought nothing of setting in for drinking bouts at tables or at the bar. Now the average man, if he drinks at all, either has it at his house, bought in bulk, so that the retailer is out, or else he drops in for a drink in a hurry and gets out again.

A liquor-dealers' trade-paper called "Beverages," pays this genuine, though unintended, compliment to the Anti-Saloon League in its issue of July 4:

"Here is a band (Anti-Saloon League) of mere apologies for men—fanatics, cranks, bigots, if you please—with not a cent of vested interests, but possessed of conviction that only by thoroughly concerted, united action can they hope to accomplish anything at all, and for this reason they have an organization, built upon lines of constant activity, which means worrying and harassing the liquor dealer.

"Why not every liquor dealer be as loyal to his trade organization as are these fanatics and cranks? That is the burning question, not of the hour, but all the time."

This "burning question" shows that, when it comes to a moral fight, vested interests are no match for convictions, if they are real convictions, and the vested interests know it. Let the burning question continue to burn.

The Herald and Presbyter of Cincinnati is greatly bothered about how to designate the people whom other religious journals belonging to the civilized class find no trouble in designating by the name Disciples, or Disciples of Christ. It says: "Being a large and influential body of Christians, it is sometimes necessary to refer to their special work and doctrines, and in order to do this intelligently some name must be used which distinguishes them. The name 'Cambellist,' or something like it, is not a discourtesy, but a necessity." Our contemporary can hardly be candid in this statement. The name Disciples of Christ referring to a religious body, as clearly distinguishes the people whom it would call "Campbellists" as the name "Presbyterian" distinguishes the body with which the Herald and Presbyter is connected, and more so, because one does not feel certain which branch of the Presbyterian Church, out of a dozen or more, is meant by the simple term "Presbyterian." No such ambiguity attaches to the name Disciples of Christ, and other religious journals which have outgrown the narrow, sectarian stage of journalism, have no difficulty in designating us without resorting to names which we do not accept.

How grievous a thing it is when the means overshadow and obscure the end, instead of ministering to it. Especially sad is it when the means and the end are so ill-assorted as are the real purpose of the church and the catchpenny devices which are too often depended upon to keep the church going. The following poem by Caroline A. Walker, in Life, has not only the exaggeration, but also the truth that goes with satire:

O Lord, I come to thee in prayer once more;
But pardon that I do not kneel before
Thy gracious presence—for my knees are sore
With too much walking. In my chair instead
I'll sit at ease, and humbly bow my head.
I've labored in thy vineyard. Thou dost know
I've sold ten tickets to the minstrel show.
I've called on fifteen strangers in our town;
Their contributions to our church put down.
I've baked a pot of beans for Wednesday's spree—
An "Old Time Supper" it is going to be—
And made a cake which we will raffle there.
Now, with thy boundless wisdom so sublime
Thou knowest that these duties all take time.
I have no time to fight my spirit's foes;
I have no time to mend my husband's clothes.
My children roam the streets from morn till night,
But thou, O Lord, considering my cares,
Will count them righteousness, and heed my prayers.
Bless the bean supper and the minstrel show,
And put it in the hearts of all to go.
Induce all visitors to patronize
The men who in our program advertise,
Because I've chased those merchants till they hid
Whenever they saw me coming—yes, they did.
Increase the contributions to our fair,
Bless thou the grab bag and the gypsy tent,
The flower table and the cake that's sent.
May our whist club be to thy service blest;
The dancing party, gayer than the rest.
And when thou hast bestowed these blessings—then
We pray that thou wilt bless our souls, Amen!

A Prince of Science and Man of Faith

By W. Durban

There is in this country of England, and also, I understand, in America, an almost universal impression that genius is divorced from Christianity. Nothing is further from actual fact. We have amongst us in Britain an illustrious proof of the power of the Christian religion to capture the allegiance of the greatest of intellects. Whenever I have had opportunity during recent years to ask scientific students whom they consider to be the foremost scientist in the world, the reply has invariably been, "Lord Kelvin, undoubtedly." The importance of this verdict is supreme, because this wonderful master is neither materialist nor agnostic. His faith in God has remained constant during a long life, and in the spiritual as in the material world he sees, and rejoices in finding, a revelation of the divine glory.

The World's Greatest Investigator and Inventor.

Lord Kelvin, more than any other man, has investigated the mysteries of matter. And he has returned from the search to put his immense stores of knowledge to practical and beneficent use. It is to his genius that we owe the connection of the old world with the new by the submarine cable. And his discovery of the oscillations caused in the other by the spark of a Leyden jar led to the demonstration by Clerk Maxwell that electro-magnetic waves in ether are the same as light, and thus prepared the way for wireless telegraphy. He has also been a brilliant inventor. But the crowning distinction of Lord Kelvin is this, that he has shown to an age which has been too ready to assume that between religion and science there is a fundamental antagonism, that the profoundest knowledge of the physical universe is not incompatible with the Christian faith. In his case no reconciliation has been necessary, for there has been no divorce or feud.

A Wonderful Student.

Lord Kelvin comes of a Scotch-Irish family, and is now in his 80th year, having been born at Belfast in 1824, where his father, Dr. James Thomson, was the first professor of mathematics in the newly established college. William Thomson entered Cambridge University as a student. Here he won fame through a series of brilliant and original papers contributed to the Cambridge and Dublin Mathematical Journal, of which he was shortly afterwards appointed editor, though only 18 years of age. Great things were expected of him in the tripos of 1845, but to the general surprise he came out as second wrangler, being beaten by Mr. Parkinson. Pace is a great element in Cambridge examinations, and Parkinson's "pace" has passed into a proverb. It is said that for six months before the tripos examination he practiced writing against time merely to secure speed, and proved prodigiously rapid in solving problems. But Thomson was a most versatile genius, and was immensely popular. He was president of the Musical Society; rowed in the Peterhouse boat, and had won the Colquhoun sculls, competing for them in a light craft of his own design. At the examination for the Smith's prize, always regarded as a severer test than the tripos, he beat the senior wrangler by three to one. On leaving Cambridge Mr. Thomson entered the laboratory of M. Regnault, at Paris, and after spending a year there, and when only 22, was appointed professor of natural philosophy at Glasgow University, a position which he filled with the greatest distinction for the long period of 53 years.

At the outset of his work in Glasgow, William Thomson began to make researches in electricity. He was obliged at first to use an old wine cellar as a physical laboratory for his students. There was in those days no idea of providing for experimental investigation, and still less of giving the students opportunity for any practical work. Such apparatus as existed consisted of worm eaten mahogany, and suitable merely for lecture illustration, much of it being fifty and even a hundred years old. Lord Kelvin soon brought about a happier state of things. He revolutionized the whole conditions of university study in the physical sciences. It is interesting to know that three-fourths of the students under his instruction were looking forward to entering the ministry of the different denominations. Doubtless these theological students found their scientific training under such a master a splendid training for their life work.

The Man Who Joined England and America.

America has a peculiar interest in Lord Kelvin. It was in connection with the laying of the Atlantic cable that the name of Professor Thomson first came prominently before the public on both sides of the Atlantic. The late Mr. Cyrus Field had conceived the idea of uniting Europe and America by means of a submarine cable, but when in 1856 his dream seemed on the point of realization, a difficulty arose which threatened to disappoint all his hopes. It was found that the electric signals dragged when they were passed through a long electric cable, and it was questioned whether they would pass between the continents fast enough to prove a financial success. By his discovery of the law of retardation, Prof. Thomson was able to show the engineers how to construct a cable which would give the necessary speed. The directors secured him to accompany the various British and American expeditions which left England to carry out the great enterprise. The romantic history of these expeditions is well-known. Two disastrous failures discouraged many observers, but the third attempt to lay the cable was a perfect success. But once more failure happened, for the cable leaked and there was silence between the two continents. It lasted seven years, and most people regarded the scheme as impossible. Not so the directors and Prof. Thomson. The Great Eastern was purchased and started in July, 1865, with Prof. Thomson on board. But the wire snapped when a thousand miles had been laid, and final success only came after another attempt the following year. Then the great scientist was promoted to the peerage as Baron Kelvin. His was the superb skill which had triumphantly carried out the idea.

A Great Genius and a Simple Christian

In a presidential address at Edinburgh, Lord Kelvin said, "I feel profoundly convinced that the argument of design has been too greatly lost sight of in recent zoological speculation. But overwhelmingly strong proofs of intelligent and benevolent design lie all around us, and if ever perplexities, whether metaphysical or scientific, turn us away from them for a time, they come back on us with irresistible force, showing to us through nature the influence of a free will, and teaching us that all living things depend on one ever-acting Creator and Ruler." The faith which Lord Kelvin professed in 1871 he adheres to still. Only last May he declared he could not admit that science occupies neutral ground by neither affirming nor denying creative power. This wonderful man is a simple and devout Christian. He regards religion as prior to science, just as God is prior to religion. He maintains that science, so far as it goes, is a help to religion; not the ultimate basis, but a support.

Resurgam.

By J. H. Rockwell.

Withhold Thy wrath, Almighty God—
Stay Thine uplifted hand,
And spare for yet a little while
This richly favored land.

Pour out upon Thine own elect
A pentecostal shower,
And make the church, as ne'er before,
The vessels of Thy power.

Smite hard the agencies of sin—
Thy halls of judgment set—
Let fierce Thy indignation burn.
Oh, Lord, lest we forget!

Make ours once more a godly land—
A land of flowing wells,
Where greed of gain gives place to love,
And peace with plenty dwells.

Mrs. Wiggs' Philosophy By Cephas Shelburne

Alice Caldwell Hegan, an unsophisticated but cultured southern girl, has written, from her own life experience, a modest little volume, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Almost at once the little story began to be read and talked about. The first edition of a thousand copies was quickly sold. New editions were soon exhausted—five, ten, fifteen, twenty, forty, sixty, a hundred thousand copies! And within a year's time this Kentucky girl found herself one of the most popular writers of the day. What is the secret of its success? Its perfectly natural and delightfully optimistic spirit. It is full of human sympathy, kindness, love. There is not a despondent note in the whole book. The home of Miss Hegan is one of those fine, old, generous, hospitable southern mansions, which are becoming too rare since the passing of the old ante-bellum and colonial days. Over the dining room fireplace of this southern Kentucky home is painted this motto:

"He who a cheerful nature owns
A palace rears from hovel stones."

This sentiment, woven into the life of the author and into the story of the Cabbage Patch, gives the secret of its success. This is the philosophy of Mrs. Wiggs, the leading spirit of the Cabbage Patch. The philosophy of helpfulness, good cheer, looking on the bright side of things; of don't worry, that

"Grasps the skirts of happy chance,
And beats the brow of circumstance."

An old philosopher has expressed it by saying: "There is a soul of good in things evil;" and one of the poets in words: "There is a silver lining to every cloud."

You and I have seen a few of these happy, cheerful, hopeful souls, if not many of them—people who carry smiles and benedictions, and make this old world of ours a better place to live in. They are in my church and yours, and it would be a calamity to lose them.

While at the World's Fair, walking leisurely through the French section of the great Art Gallery, surveying the marvelous paintings and sculpture of this people who excel in art, my attention was called to a more beautiful and realistic picture. It was that of an old lady, pushed along by her manly son in an invalid's chair. Her hair was white, her face pale and wrinkled, showing that it would not be long until the silver cord should be loosed. But she wore a delightful smile; her countenance beamed with heaven's light. She stopped in front of a marble statue, threw up her withered hand and exclaimed: "Beautiful, my son, beautiful! How can the French make such lovely things out of marble and paint?"

This is Mrs. Wiggs' philosophy, the spirit, life and redemption of the Cabbage Patch—everywhere God's true, beautiful and good, if we but have the eye and spirit for it.

"In the mud and scum of things Something always, always sings."

Mrs. Wiggs was one of those rare souls of the Good Samaritan kind, who made it easier for others to live and do right, and harder for them to go wrong. "For many years Sunday afternoon was a trying time in the neighborhood, so Mrs. Wiggs had organized a Sunday-school class, over which she presided." The little, dirty-faced urchins, the bad and unruly boys and girls, were assembled at her home, and after trying her patience—plying her with rude questions and silly answers, paper wads, fussing, pinching and sticking each other with pins—Mrs. Wiggs, ever patient and kind, lifted her hands for silence and closed with this benediction: "Oh Lord, help these children to be good and kind to each other and to their mas and pas. Make 'em thankful for whatever they've got, even if it ain't but a little. Show us how to live like you want us to live, and praise God from whom all blessings flow. Amen!"

When the severe winter came on, the thermometer of the Cabbage Patch below zero, and the meal sack empty and the last potato gone, and the coal hod low, Jim, her boy and only dependence, lay dangerously ill of a fever. Twelve o'clock in the night the boy grew feverish and then cold. "Could you find a little something more to put over me, ma?" Three little girls lay huddled under one quilt, their faces pale and sunken. Billy slept on a pallet under one cover. She put her hands over her face, and for a moment dry sobs convulsed her. When she went back to the bed she had a smile ready for the sick boy: "Here's the very thing," she said; "it is my dress skirt. I don't need it a mite. See how nice it tucks in all round!" Mrs. Wiggs' hands were rough and knotted, but love taught them to be gentle and kind, as she tucked in the covers and smoothed the hot head of Jim, her boy, and soothed him into gentle sleep.

This is the blessed gospel, the hand and kindly touch that the world needs. This is what the great, suffering, sinning, heart-broken mass of mankind needs—the sympathetic touch, the kindly deed, the smile, the two mites, the cup of cold water. Give us a positive religion, the religion that helps. Instead of so much theology, dogma, orthodoxy from the pulpit, and so much of emulation, envy, rivalry from the pew, let us have a little more of charity and manifest love. We have tears and shadows and struggles and rivalries and doubts enough; we need a little more sympathy, love and the milk of human kindness.

We may live and live; we may preach and preach; we may bow at altars and take communion and sing song upon song; but if one be Christian, touched and filled with the Spirit of the blessed Master, there comes ringing through all his life and deeds a diviner, sweeter spirit which says: "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness," and all the rest.

You may often learn a very deep, sensible and of-the-gospel-type of philosophy from the humbler walks of life. The best that is in man and in the soul does not flourish in the gardens of affluence, ease and wealth. This southern girl, brought up in affluence and every indulgence, learned her best and truest lessons from the Cabbage Patch. "The friendships of these simple people opened her eyes to the great problems of humanity, and as she worked among them and knew life as it was, the hard little bud of her girlhood blossomed into the great, soft rose of womanhood."

"It is easy enough to be pleasant
When life flows along like a song,
But the man worth while is the one who will smile
When everything goes dead wrong."

No man has a right to lie in his silken abode or to be absorbed in his own piety, or selfish schemes. He must consider himself from the standpoint of the welfare of those about him. George Eliot says, "My own experience deepens every day my conviction that our moral progress may be measured by the degree in which we sympathize with individual suffering and joy." And Emerson says: "There is no beautifier of complexion or form of behavior like the wish to scatter joy and not pain around us."

"Oh give me the joy of living,
And some glorious work to do!
A spirit of thanksgiving,
With loyal heart and true;
Some pathway to make brighter,
Where tired feet now stray;
Some burden to make lighter
While 'tis day."

This was Mrs. Wiggs' philosophy. "It was an unwritten law that no guest should depart from her humble home without a gift of some kind." And when the neighbors came bringing a nice treat on her fiftieth birthday, she said: "Somehow, I never feel like good things belonged to me till I pass 'em on to somebody else. And for this reason looks like nice things are always coming my way." It is the bread cast upon the waters, the reflex of a good deed—the cup of cold water in the name of the Master never goes unblest. It was the Christ spirit truly lived. When Mrs. White had treated Mrs. Wiggs badly she said: "When I don't like folks, I try to do something nice for 'em. Seems like that's the only way I can weed out my own meanness."

The Great Physician.

S. S. Lappin.

A certain man was afflicted with a severe illness. In his extremity he finally secured the services of a great specialist from a distant city. A very difficult surgical operation was performed, and when the patient had rallied the case was left to the care of local nurses and physicians. By strict adherence to the instructions of the specialist the man was at last restored to health. The local treatment in the case was most delicate, so as to be impossible to the ordinary practitioner, but the constitutional treatment which followed could be safely administered by any one willing to follow the instructions of another.

Jesus Christ is the great physician, the specialist from afar, who proposes to heal the ills of a suffering race. We hear him say as he walks among men, "Thy sins are forgiven thee;" "Take up thy bed and walk." We see him touch the blind eyes and they see, the deaf ears and they hear. These are the deeds of a specialist—the local treatment of acute cases by which useful members of the race are saved from death or suffering. The great physician could not be forever present; in physical presence he is gone, but he is here in the directions he has given, and the healing processes still go on under his instruction. The work of the specialist was needful because of the extremity of the case, but it has been done. The constitutional treatment committed to his disciples is of more importance to the world now, for by it the race is to be lifted to a higher state, where the disease will be entirely eliminated to return no more. He who remitted sins by a word does the same thing still, but by a different process and by use of common means ever at hand and within the reach of all. He who said to the leper, "Be thou clean," has started humanity in a course of life by which leprosy shall sometime disappear. He who bade the hopeless paralytic take up his bed and walk has assailed the whole catalogue of nervous disorders in his call, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest; take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest to your souls." As men learn his plan of life more perfectly, afflictions common to-day, and consequent upon our mad manner of living, will become less frequent and finally cease to fret and torture mankind.

Though the comforting presence of the great Healer is ours no longer, and the calm voice of authority does not speak away the pains of suffering men, yet he is healing more sick to-day than ever before. The triumphs of science are due, in large measure, to the coming of the "Light that lighteth every man," so that the Master's touch is given to-day by a Mitchell or a Senn or a Lorenz. But above and beyond and superior to these opportunities for the immediate relief of the distressed, is the fact that Jesus with his divine insight has attacked disease from another and surer ground; a healthy soul and mind life, while not immediate and marvelous in its operation, is, nevertheless, certain to lead the race to final and complete emancipation from disease. Is it too much to believe that he who employed special means in dealing with the sinner and afterward established a general and universal law of pardon, had it in his great heart, when he healed the sick, to prescribe a course of life which would lead to heights where perfection of physical life may be enjoyed?

We have seized eagerly on a few of the principles of his kingdom and taken much else for granted or deemed it of little importance. We have builded our poor systems too much by ourselves. We have been content to lay bricks burned in the heat of controversy with a series of proof texts to hold the superstructure together. Jesus cannot be studied and comprehended in that way. The gospel is not a patchwork to be admired piece by piece. The Christian system is a unity so large and so complete in itself that no point of human life and human need can be found where it does not touch, and that to heal. We have learned much, it is true, from each other, but too little at first hand from the Great Teacher.

"So many churches and so many creeds,
So many paths that wind and wind;
And the thing the old world really needs,
Is just the art of being kind."

So many doctors of so many schools,
So many drugs that cure or kill;
And the thing that's needed among us fools
Is just the art of being still.

So many systems made by men
To rid themselves of guilt and sin;
And all that the Master asks of them
Is just to arise and follow him.

America Won for Christ!

By R. P. Shepherd.

What more inspiring and inspiring slogan than this for that body of Christians who are proving themselves the most effective evangelists in America to-day?

We have reason to glory in what the gospel has done for us. Who is there more blessed in precious opportunities than are we? And once the idea becomes inwrought in the fibre and grain of our proclamation and practice of the gospel that the gospel will do for us precisely in proportion as we do for others less blessed than ourselves, we shall make yet more astonishing advances.

Word comes to us that with a continued gain for the next thirty days in gifts for home missions, the Detroit convention shall have reason to wax enthusiastic, and to disperse only for greater accomplishments. Why not make vigorous use of the period too often devoted to ennui and lassitude? Why not lay the burden to heart and make a heart to heart canvass for home missions during August, and close the year in a grand finale of accomplishment?

If our message of undiluted gospel works no magnificence of transformation in us until we lead the host of christendom in gifts of money and men for Christian service, the reproach will be upon us more than on others. The proof of our ministry is identical with that of our Christ, "Believe me for the work's sake." When our works shall testify of us, when by our good works we commend ourselves to the good conscience of every man, we shall have little need to fear misrepresentation from without. God speed ye Brother Smith! Keep our pure minds stirred up by way of remembrance, and may larger harvests gladden your spirit and ours.

The Play.

From dusk to dawn the stage is strangely still;

The actors, pale, unmasked, await the day.
Then the first fiddles in the hedge sing shrill,

Night's curtain lifts, and lo, we view the play!

FORCED TO RESIGN.

Lost a Good Position Through Bad Food.

"I felt immediately better after my first meal on Grape-Nuts, which I began to use after my health had broken down and I was a nervous wreck.

"My stomach was in such a condition that I could eat nothing and trying to eat was a burden to me.

"My pulse ran up to 115 and my weight fell 21 pounds. I got so I couldn't work and was forced to resign a good position. I took milk punches between meals and quit meat altogether, but nothing improved my appetite and the condition of my stomach. I finally went on one meal a day and had to force myself to eat that and was rapidly starving, until one day a friend suggested Grape-Nuts.

"Although my palate and stomach had rebelled against all other foods, Grape-Nuts agreed immediately and I really relished this food, while the changes in my condition have been wonderful. My weight increased from the start and I have now regained 12 pounds, while my pulse is normal and I am a new person all over. Life seems worth living and I enjoy all my meals.

"To make sure that this change was due to Grape-Nuts I made the experiment of leaving off the food for five days, but I began to go backwards so rapidly that I concluded I had satisfied my curiosity in this respect and I went back to Grape-Nuts again in a hurry and began to pick up again. Grape-Nuts certainly touched the spot and did the work." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Basis for "The New Evangelism"

By Stephen J. Corey

One would almost think from the hue and cry that is raised concerning "New Thought," and "New Theology," "New Conditions" and "New Evangelism," that the time had come for a new revelation, and that the "Truth once delivered unto the saints," was very much out of date. While the statement of truth may constantly change, and the methods of evangelism adjust themselves to present conditions, yet truth is as unchanging as Deity, and the basis and spirit of evangelism must ever be the same. Whenever the evangelistic spirit has waned in the history of the church, it has been due to the abandonment of some vital truth. If there is to be a real evangelism which shall stir America to its depths, it must be based upon old truth, no matter what the methods are.

It has been said many times that the Jews did not want and were not looking for a Savior. It is a great mistake. The Jews, of all people who inhabited the globe at the coming of Christ, were longing for and expecting a Savior. But they were not longing for and expecting a Savior from sin. They were longing for a political adventurer with divine power, who would overturn their enemies and make Israel the prince among nations. Because Jesus offered to cleanse their hearts instead of dynamiting their enemies, they rejected him. This was not alone the error of Israel, but ever has been, and is now the fundamental error of the world. There is not a nation nor an individual on the face of the earth that has not the longing for a Savior, but the scandal of the ages lies in the fact that there is not a burning desire for a Savior from sin. Until preaching can arouse that desire there can be no evangelism either "new" or old.

Every citizen of our commonwealth longs for a Savior of some sort. The capitalist longs for one who will conserve the interests of wealth; he may embody his conception in a J. Pierpont Morgan. The "organized" laboring man longs for a man who will redeem toil, and his heart throbs at the name of Mitchell. The socialist would redeem society through the leadership of a Debbs. The suffragist would elevate woman to her proper sphere through a Susan B. Anthony. The sick would carry the banner of some great savior from disease. The poor would bow the knee to him who abolished poverty. But society is on the wrong track. It is the preacher's business to convince the world that its supreme need is a Savior from sin. Jesus Christ is that Savior from sin, and no substituted panacea for the world's disease has a moment's right in the preacher's message.

The one universal, overwhelming, astounding fact of the world is sin. A fact which needs no more argument than human experience, and no more proof than man's consciousness, and yet a fact which ten thousand whittlers are always trying to reduce to the "fine point of nothingness."

The evangelism of to-day needs enlivening by an overwhelming consciousness of the awfulness of sin. The fact of the curse of sin runs through the books of God's word like a crimson thread. It is never absent from a single page. The very necessity of the Father's revelation of himself to the world is based on the fact of sin. Without the fact of sin the story of these sacred pages is absolutely inexplicable, and the crucifixion of Jesus Christ is a grotesque travesty. Sin is here. Sin is rampant. Sin is the curse of the earth. How shall we be freed from the thralldom of sin? is the strategic question of the

Any system of thought which would minimize the awful fact and consequence of sin, is not only an enemy of Christianity, but a menace to the race. The spirit of universalism (and it is by no means confined to the Universalist church) cuts the nerve of spiritual life and world-wide evangelism, not simply because of the abandonment of the doctrine of future punishment, but because the great fact of sin is lost sight of. The danger of falsely so-called Christian Science, lies not in the hobby of mental healing, which is rather harmless, but in their fundamental teaching that sin is a delusion. If sin is not a tremendous fact, then the need of a Savior is not apparent.

Sin brought the son of God to this earth. Sin caused this birth in a cold stable in Bethlehem nineteen hundred years ago. Sin compelled the son of God to wield the saw and plane at the carpenter's bench in Nazareth. Sin wrote the pathetic story of a homeless and unappreciated Christ. Sin bled that sacred brow in dark Gethsemane. Sin betrayed him, crowned him with thorns, spat upon him and nailed him to a rough wooden cross on criminal hill, outside the respectable limits of Jerusalem to die, to suffer and die like a murderer, to writhe and agonize under the most exquisite torture, with the fierce heat of a Syrian sun above, and the devilish gibes and sneers and blasphemies of a fanatical, demonized horde beneath.

It is the legitimate business of sin to crucify Jesus Christ, and sin is doing it to-day. Sin is an awful thing! Every tear, every sob, every pain, every headache of this old world to-day is caused by sin. The man who does not realize the everlasting ruin that sin is working in the hearts of men, may have a legitimate place on the lecture platform, but not in the Christian pulpit. The only evangelism which can transform the hearts of men is the evangelism which has for its basis the lost condition of man in sin and the redeeming power of Jesus Christ, man's only Savior.

ART OF REST.

May Be Acquired and Used With Great Benefit.

Complete and restful poise of the body and mind is an art not easily gained.

Perhaps nothing brings one as much content, comfort, happiness and pleasure as those conditions of easy, restful, resourceful and well-balanced mind and body, that make of work a pleasure and the daily life happy and peaceful.

The nervous housewife, busy with a hundred duties and harassed by children; the business man, worried with the press of daily affairs, debts, etc., cannot enjoy the peace and restful repose and healthful nervous balance unless they know how.

There is a way. First and foremost, the stomach must be consulted. That means leaving off coffee absolutely, for the temporary stimulant and the resulting depression is a sure ruin to the nervous system, and the whole condition of health and happiness rests upon stomach, nerves and mind.

Start with the stomach, that is the keystone to the whole arch. Stop using things that break down its power, upset its nervous energy and prevent the proper digestion of the food and the consequent manufacture of healthful blood and nerves, brain and tissues.

When you quit coffee, take on Postum Food Coffee. That is like stopping the payment of interest and starting on a career where you are loaning money and receiving interest. The good results are double. You stop poisoning the system with coffee and start building up the broken down nerve cells by powerful elements contained in Postum. These are pure food elements ably selected by experts for the purpose of supplying just the thing required by Nature to perform this rebuilding.

These are solid, substantial facts, and can be proven clearly to the satisfaction of anyone, by personal experience. Try the change yourself and note how the old condition of shattered nerves and worried mind changes to that feeling of restful poise of a well-balanced nervous system.

The managing physician of a hygienic sanitarium in Indiana says that for five years in his practice he has always insisted upon the patients leaving off coffee and taking Postum Food Coffee, with the most positive, well defined results, and with satisfaction to the most confirmed coffee toper.

The Doctor's name will be furnished by the Postum Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

One of the Mother Churches

By F. D. Power

Beaver Creek, Maryland, is a modest little country village, straggling along the bank of the beautiful stream of clear spring water, a few miles from Hagerstown, in Washington county. A magnificent wooded mountain rises a few miles to the east, in the midst of which is Black Rock, and the rich valley far and wide blossoms like the rose with fertile farms and gardens and fruitful orchards. It is only a few miles away from Antietam, where just forty-one years ago Sept. 17, was fought the bloodiest battle of the civil war. Who does not know of the old Dunkard church and Bloody Lane and Burnside's blunder and Franklin's Crossing and the Stone Bridge and McClellan and Lee, and the most terrific and bloodiest battle of the whole struggle, leaving in a few hours 20,000 brave men wounded and dead? Gettysburg was greater; twice the number bit the dust; but there the Titans wrestled for three days. Now the Antietam flows peacefully on through smiling fields, as if never stained by the blood of brothers, and all is quiet along the Potomac into which it empties.

Beaver Creek is so called because once the resort of these oval-tailed, webbed-footed, toiling rodents of the olden time. It flows from a splendid spring near the village, in whose head waters now is a cress farm, from which hundreds of barrels of this delightful plant are shipped all over the United States. Here is a charming country—one of the richest parts of the Cumberland valley. No depression of the earth's surface of equal area, productiveness of soil and beauty of scenery exists in our eastern states. Standing in front of the Beaver Creek church one of the fairest visions on God's footstool is before you, with the sweep of South Mountain, forest crowned, and the blooming valley, and picturesque homes and winding stream. One about to go blind might well pray that his calamity might befall him as he watched the sun rise above the wooded heights, or the moon lifting her silvery disk over the wall of green, or as he views from Black Rock the noble panorama of fields and gardens and villages and streams and distant mountains.

The congregation of Disciples here started in Feb., 1833. It met in an old schoolhouse till 1845. Alexander Campbell preached for them in a tent and in a large barn. The first evangelists were Webb and Jacobs, and Webb's preaching caused such interest that S. K. Hoshour prepared to answer him, and in his investigations was led to accept the position of the Disciples of Christ. In 1847 they organized with Daniel Alabaugh as evangelist, John Funk, John Flaughner and Benjamin Witmer as elders, and Michael Newcomer, Daniel Young and David Witmer, deacons. "Having been immersed on public confession of our faith in the Lord Jesus Christ at various times and places, and in the dispensation of the providence of God finding ourselves thrown together on Beaver Creek and vicinity in the county of Washington and state of Maryland, and desiring to walk together in observance of all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord, did meet together to set in order as a church of the true and living God; and being assembled, we chose," etc. Then follows the list of officers and of the members, with such names in addition as Wolfinger, Landis, Gantz, Rohrer, Wagner, Tailor, Krotzer, McComas, Middlekauf, and others whose descendants are still here. Backary McComas, grandfather of the present United States senator from Maryland of that name, was one of them. Serving as pastors were John D. Ferguson, Enos Adamson, Jesse H. Berry, John P. Mitchell, Samuel Matthews, S. F. Fowler and W. S. Hoyer, who has just closed his twentieth year. Of these, Mitchell and Matthews served until they died, and are buried here. Benjamin Franklin, Isaac Errett, D. S. Burnet and John O'Kane were among the many that held meetings for them.

The most familiar name on Beaver Creek is "Newcomer." If one can not remember a name, in nine cases out of ten he will strike it by using this one. Wolfgang Newcomer, a Swiss emigrant, came to this region, and his descendants are scattered far and wide, and as far as known to me, he did not have one too many. As far back as 1730 German, English, Scotch and French people settled here, and fought the Catawbas and Delawares, sat upon three-legged stools, ate out of wooden trenchers, used bears' grease for lard, and cut their food with the same knife with which they dressed their deer killed by their rifles. To-day there is not a more interesting community in the east, and "Beaver Creek" in Disciplesdom is almost as well known as "Dutch Fork" or "Cane Ridge." Many churches have grown out of this one: Hagerstown, Downsville, Boonsboro, Waynesboro, Ringgold, Martinsburg; and colleges and missions and benevolent enterprises of every kind have felt the influence of this dear old mother church. Its gifts to all causes for twenty years past have averaged eight thousand dollars a year. B. F. Newcomer, William Newcomer, Alexander Newcomer and Ellie Newcomer have been the great givers, the last two of whom have been blind from babyhood. Alexander Newcomer, "Uncle Aleck," as the children knew him, fell asleep on Thursday, Sept. 3, at noon, and we buried his body on Saturday, the day before the dedication of the new sanctuary. It was the first service in the new house, and forever more sanctified and hallowed it. Sunday, Sept. 6, was a perfect day, and the people came from everywhere to the feast. Three services were held. Herbert Yeuell preached the dedicatory sermon, and H. C. Kendrick, J. A. Hopkins and W. S. Hoyer assisted. Not less than a thousand people gathered at each service. The new edifice cost $14,123.24, of which amount the Newcomers gave $10,000; $1,456 was to be raised, and William and Ellie Newcomer gave two-thirds of that sum, and the church was dedicated free of debt. It is of Gothic design, and seats 500, has a large Sunday-school room which can be thrown into the main auditorium, is well lighted with gas and heated by steam, and is one of the most beautiful and best arranged I have seen. The old house, built in 1845, was torn down. William Newcomer has been treasurer 42 years, Henry Hill, sexton 30 years and W. S. Hoyer, pastor 20 years. The pastor is a Virginian, a graduate of Bethany College, a man of high character and good ability as a preacher, a faithful and devoted pastor, a wideawake missionary man, a thorough Christian. The church has a present membership of 200. Herbert Yeuell is engaged in a protracted meeting, with Hez. Trail leading the music. This blessed mother church has yet a great work to do.

Mrs. Wiggs' Philosophy.

Mrs. Hegan said to Mrs. Wiggs: "You have taught me lots of things. You are one of the best and happiest women I ever knew." She replied: "Well, I guess I ain't the best by a long sight, but I may be the happiest. An' I got cause to be; four of the smartest children that ever lived, a nice house, fair to middlin' health, when I ain't got rheumatiz, and folks always goin' clean out of their way to be good to me. I just do the best I can where the good Lord put me at, and it looks like I've got a happy feelin' in me most all the time."

So this simple story ends with music and laughter, good cheer and happiness—the philosopher of this humble folk teaching the lessons of the sublime, simple gospel, closing with this beautiful picture: "She stood smiling out across the moonlit Cabbage Patch. Her face still held the reflected happiness of the departed lovers, as the sky holds the rose tints after the sun has gone, and summing up her blessings she whispered softly to herself: 'Looks like everything in the world comes right, if we just wait long enough!'"

Little Lessons in Living.

By S. John Duncan-Clark.

1. What is life?

"Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life. . . . I am come that they might have life. . . . I am the way, the truth and the life."—Jesus.

"For me to live is Christ."—Paul.

The problem of being has baffled the wise men of all ages. With keen interest and eager mind, the bold investigator has pursued the mystery only to find the solution vanish as it seemed almost within his grasp. In technical terms that serve well to clothe his actual ignorance, the biologist can furnish you a definition of life, or the physiologist may write on the cryptic symbols of organic chemistry a hypothetical formula, which, however, in actual experiment always fails to live. The great error which invalidates all their calculations is the omission of the essential factor—God. One modern philosopher of giant intellect has given us a definition of life that we shall find at least suggestive. Herbert Spencer, in his "First Principles," declares that life is "the continuous adjustment of internal relations to external relations." A little thought will serve to show how truly comprehensive is this definition—even more so, possibly, than the great philosopher himself realized. Upon its evident significance when applied to our physical life, we do not stay to comment; it is rather our desire to emphasize its bearing upon the question of man's spiritual being and destiny. The universal appeal and inquiry of the human soul for some greater power and intelligence external to itself, is, according to this definition, testimony to the existence of such a power and intelligence. The fact that in all periods of human history, and in all races of our kind, the individual has ever sought some adjustment of himself to the invisible and the unknown, is, if the philosopher's definition of life be accepted, proof that the invisible and unknown hold something to which adjustment is required.

We may not now pursue this argument further. To this groping instinct of the human heart, the only satisfying answer is—God. Paul declared in Athens the existence of this impulse was divinely implanted in the soul of man, "that they should seek God, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he be not far from every one of us; for in him we live and move and have our being." And to this impulse it is the message of the gospel that God has responded. It was necessary that he should. The requirements of the case demanded from God a response; for man could not possess life in its fullness unless able to rightly adjust himself to what may be shown is the chiefest of all his external relations. So it is recorded, "God hath spoken by his Son," and in Jesus Christ we have God revealed in his relation to human life. The fact of Christ, then, is that external fact to which man must make internal adjustment in order to possess life in its full and final significance and possibility. This is the meaning of those sentences quoted from Jesus, and the marvelous statement of Paul, which head this little lesson. Adapting the language of science to the fuller knowledge of revelation, we may then say in answer to the query with which we began, "Life is the continuous adjustment of internal relations to the being and will of God as revealed in the person and work of Christ."

MY TWO WORLDS.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

Give me the lonely mountain-path

'Mid forest deep,

Where I may breathe, with open soul,

The taintless air;

Where roars the lofty cataract

Down mountain's steep.

Give me the lonely mountain-path,

For Thou art there.

Give me the busy thoroughfare,

With turmoil rife,

Where toil the busy multitudes

In anxious strife;

Where learn the souls of men

Their life to share.

Give me the busy thoroughfare,

For Thou art there.

Suffering in the Island of Jamaica.

By C. C. Smith.

We have now heard from all our districts in the island of Jamaica, and know the extent of the loss to our buildings caused by the tornado of the night of the 10th of August. An estimate from C. E. Randall, superintendent of our missions there, places this loss at about $6,000. Six of our chapels are entirely destroyed; namely, Bloxburg, Providence, Chesterfield, Highgate, Airy Mount and Lucky Hill. Also part of the roofs are torn from the chapels at Mannings Hill and Oberlin. At some of the above places the mission houses and the buildings connected with the missions are also totally destroyed.

The personal effects of our missionaries and members of the churches are also, in many instances, either lost or ruined. Buggies, harness, clothing, and all household effects, were either carried away by the wind or covered by the landslides which swept down the mountains. Hundreds of our brethren are homeless, and C. E. Randall, speaking of his desolate ride to Mannings Hill, says: "It made me simply heartsick to see the miles of havoc and desolation. It appeared as if almost every thing of value in growing trees and cultivation was swept away. Here and there people were getting out some of the posts of their ruined houses from the mud and debris, to try to nail them together to give them a little shelter for the night. In many places the people took refuge in the chapels and mission houses that were left standing."

One of our missionaries writes to C. E. Randall: "Advise me what course to adopt to get help for the people here. I have been out among them all day, and the misery and wretchedness one sees is appalling. My brain is in a whirl. Help us all you can." In another letter: "We are building a booth in which to worship until our chapel can be rebuilt."

John Randall, under date of August 22nd, writes: "Truly our island has fallen under a terrible calamity, and our hearts are bleeding and sore for thousands of sufferers. The damage is estimated at about $10,000,000. We are doing all we can ourselves, and appeals have gone out to America and England for help. The whole situation is truly heartrending."

W. A. Meredith writes, August 7th: "We are now starting to erect a temporary place inside the mission yard at Providence, out of the ruined chapel. At Chesterfield yesterday we met among the ruins under a temporary shelter a sad and desolate band of people, ninety in all, and held the Lord's supper. I wanted all the time to sit down and weep. It was heartrending. Some 150 families around the Providence district had their homes destroyed. Some of our members were killed. Now we will not be able to ask our suffering people for a penny for many months. The people are looking to us and we have no money to help them. A large family of little children are living with us, their home having been destroyed, and all eyes are turned to us for advice and aid."

The above truly appeals to our whole church, and we will meet it as befits the followers of Christ. At least $10,000 will be required soon to meet the demands.

In view of the above we earnestly request the following: That every pastor read this account to his church and emphasize the call. That he make public announcement of the name of some person in his church authorized to make a canvass of the church for this relief fund.

That the officers of the auxiliary in each church see to it—where the matter may have been overlooked by the pastor—that one of their officers or members is selected to bring this before the mind of the pastor, asking that this account be read to the whole church and the members urged to contribute and a canvass made.

That in all prayer-meetings the people of Jamaica be made a special subject of prayer.

What is done should be done quickly and the need is great.

Send all funds to Helen E. Moses, Secretary, 152 East Market St., Indianapolis, Indiana.

News From Many Fields

Denver.

W. Bayard Craig resumed the pastorate of the Central Church, Lord's day, Sept. 6. The prospect is encouraging. The church has a superior house of worship free from debt and in a good part of the city—Sixteenth and Lincoln. It is the Central Church, it is also the mother of our churches in Denver.

The Highlands church, J. E. Pickett, pastor, now occupies its new house as far as it is completed. There is the beginning of a good church edifice.

The South Broadway Church, B. B. Tyler, pastor, elected officers the first Lord's day in September, listened to financial reports for the year ending August 31, and received four new members, and one on a confession of the Lord Jesus. The last year, financially, has been the best in the history of the congregation. The panic of '93, left the church in a financial hole $22,000 deep. In a few days the debt will be down to $6,000. The interest has also been reduced to five per cent per annum.

The Berkeley church under the pastorate of Mrs. F. D. Pettit, is free from debt, owns a good house of worship and parsonage, and occupies a commanding position in the community. When Mrs. Pettit became pastor the congregation seemed to be hopelessly in debt.

The East Side Church, T. T. Thompson, pastor, meets in a hired hall. Lots have been purchased and paid for on which, in course of time, a house of worship will be erected. This church moves steadily forward.

J. W. Maddux preaches at Golden, where is the oldest congregation of the Christian church in the state. For some time its strength has been greatly diminished. Under the leadership of Brother Maddux, the church is coming into a better condition. There are no better workers in Colorado than J. W. Maddux and wife.

Miss Rose T. Ambruster is in Denver, September 7, enroute to Osaka, Japan, in the employ of the foreign Christian missionary society.

Dr. and Mrs. Pickett are expected in a few days on their way to the Philippines, to do the work of medical missionaries. Dr. Pickett is a brother of the pastor of the Highlands church. A missionary mass meeting will be held in the Central Church, Lord's day September 13, at three o'clock in the afternoon to welcome Dr. and Mrs. Pickett and to speed them on their way.

Miss Effie D. Kellar will, in a few days, return to her work in China. She has been in Denver during the last year.

The work in Denver has an appearance of solidity that is encouraging. W. Bayard Craig, J. E. Pickett and B. B. Tyler, own their homes. The Berkeley church owns a parsonage.

The annual meeting of the Colorado Christian Missionary Society will be held with the Broadway Church in Pueblo, Sept. 28, to Oct. 1, Leonard G. Thompson, 212 East Ellsworth street, Denver, is the corresponding secretary and state evangelist. R. E. PORTER.

Kansas.

It is now, at this writing, barely three weeks until our missionary year closes. The returns from "Kansas Day" (August 23) were disappointing. So far comparatively few churches have reported. We have received some very cheering reports and remittances, but there are at least one hundred and fifty churches that have not contributed anything this year to state work.

Brethren, it is only a matter of a few dollars to each church, but a matter of several hundred dollars to the cause of Christ in this state. Our receipts should be $1,500 during the month of September. This amount is absolutely necessary in order to place our work in proper shape by the time of our state convention, Oct. 5-8. We have $500 of this already provided in good pledges. It now remains for the churches, Bible-schools, C. E.

societies and C. W. B. M. auxiliaries to do their part.

The missionaries, fifteen in all, have done faithful service, and you will rejoice to see and hear them at the convention. There should be a still larger number of individuals contribute to state work. Some contributions of this kind are coming in voluntarily. They should come thick and fast. Join the "One Dollar Brigade." If you should receive one of these cards, be sure to sign your name and return the card to the office.

You have seen that we have a splendid railroad rate to the convention. One fare and fifty cents for the round trip on all the roads in the state. A large attendance is expected. The churches in the southern part of the state especially, should be well represented. Did you notice that the Nebraska brethren had 900 people in attendance at their convention on the encampment plan? If they have such an attendance when they have but 18,000 members in the state, what should Kansas do with 40,000 members?

Remember, Brother Hackleman, of Indiana, conducts the music for us this year. He will use "Sing His Praise." A trio of girls from Paola will delight us with several selections of music. Look for the program next week.

And now, brethren,

"Lest you forget

We say it yet,"

We need a dollar plus 1,000.

Topeka, Kan.

W. S. LOWE.

Kentucky.

This is the last issue of our papers before the Paris conventions. Monday, Sept. 21, the C. W. B. M. will begin the sessions of that body and adjourn Tuesday night.

Wednesday morning the Kentucky Christian Missionary Convention will begin the day's convention, closing with the Wednesday night session. Thursday will be devoted to the state Sunday-school convention. Friday it is expected that a large crowd will go to Cane Ridge, about six miles out from Paris, for the Cane Ridge centennial. The latter, by mistake of the printer, was announced for Sept. 2, whereas it is Sept. 25.

If you have not done so, send your name at once to Carey E. Morgan, Paris, Ky., and he will see that you are provided with a home. We owe this to our host, and as far as possible we ought to indicate the time of our arrival.

As previously announced, the railroads have granted a rate of one fare plus twenty-five cents for the round trip. Tickets will be on sale only on the 21st and 22nd. After that date you cannot buy a ticket at the above rate. The tickets will be good until and including Sept. 26.

The C. & O. R. R. has not as yet granted a lower rate than one and one-third fare on the card plan. I am still hoping that they will give us the same rate as that given by the L. & N., I. C., Lou. Hen. & St. Louis; Q. & C., Frankfort & Cincinnati, Lex. & Eastern, Southern Railway. You buy a round trip ticket from starting point. If any agent refuses to sell you a ticket according to the above, pay your full fare for one way, demand a receipt, and you will get your money back. I am sure, however, that all agents will be fully instructed.

This is the last word that can reach the people through the papers. We are doing very well these days as to receipts for our state missionary work. If we continue as well until the convention, we will be able to make a creditable report. Unless we do, I am sure that some of us will be ashamed of what has to be made public. A number of our big churches have not yet taken an offering, and some promise that even yet the offering will be taken, some say on the Sunday before going to Paris. We are hoping that a considerable number will do this. Unless this is the case we will have a number of churches that ought to be on our contributing list entirely delinquent.

It is within the power of brethren who preach for churches that have not given us any help to come to the rescue of our state work at this last hour. In some instances those who can thus help are preaching for churches that sent an offering just before the convention, and in others the offering was neglected by a predecessor. In some instances, the preacher was forced by local needs to put it off, and it has been put off to this late date. In any case, help us now. Let this last Sunday be used to put us on a good financial footing in our report for Sept. 23.

H. W. ELLIOTT, Agt.

Sulphur, Ky., Sept. 10.

Minnesota.

H. E. Russell, of Missoula, Montana, has just closed a meeting at Ranneby, with 26 additions. This was a great meeting for Ranneby. They are rejoicing over their victory. They need a pastor now and their joy is full.

W. W. Divine has left us for the more sunny clime of Kearney, Neb. He has been at Rochester two and one-half years. He did there a splendid work. He found the work discordant and left it harmonious. He found them all but crushed financially and left them with debt as good as paid. It is with serious regret that we see him go from our midst.

G. W. Wise leaves Plainview for Rochester. Brother Wise was doing a good work at Plainview. We have not learned how his place is being supplied there.

C. C. Davis, of Davenport, Ia., has taken the work at Central, St. Paul. This is a cause of great rejoicing to all friends of Minnesota work. Brother Davis is well-known among us, and to know him is to love him.

R. W. Abberly is doing a fine work at Portland Avenue, Minneapolis. Portland Avenue was fortunate indeed in securing his services.

The new building at the First Church, St. Paul, is nearing completion. They hope to dedicate in October.

Concord has called a pastor, B. Frank Lynn, of Waterloo, Ia. He began his work Sept. 1. We welcome him to our state.

B. V. Black closed his work at Truman and Horicon, and is now located at Garden City. Garden City was fortunate, but who will fill the vacancy at Truman and Horicon?

Brother McCarthy, of Albion, Ill., has been visiting his sister, Mrs. Treloor, at Cleveland. While there he filled the pulpit at Redwood Falls. And now Brother McCarthy thinks of moving to Redwood Falls. Everybody who comes to Minnesota falls in love with the state and wants to stay.

Lewisville and Willow Creek are still looking for a pastor.

The work at Mankota has grown in spite of vacation dilapidation. There have been additions at almost every service for the last two months. One baptism to-night at prayer-meeting. The writer has been on the field eight months and is only beginning to know it thoroughly. Here as everywhere the opportunity is great.

Bro. Frank Watts, one of our Mankota boys, took unto himself a wife (Miss Frances Thompson) Sept. 3, and then went to Des Moines to finish his course in Bible College. He expects to do some preaching while there.

F. H. Marshall has returned to his post as dean of Bible-school at Texas Christian University. He spent his vacation on his farm at Spencer Brook. Preached three times every Sunday and had 16 additions during the summer.

The program for the mid-year ministerial association of Minnesota is in preparation. It is to be a study of the mission question. A strong program is being prepared. We hope to have Prof. W. J. Lhamon with us, during the entire session.

The writer is no longer state corresponding secretary. Therefore can not speak ex cathedra. But the work of state missions seem hopeful. Wenona is still waiting to be taken up, and many other opportunities are open. God send us men and means!

We must congratulate the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on its splendid issues. It is getting better and better. Each number is better than its predecessor. And each time we feel that it has reached the climax. It brings a spirit into the home that is refining. One reads it and feels as if he wanted to go out and do something noble. This is not true of every paper that comes to our desk. Some, when read, make us feel like stamping the earth, gritting our teeth, clinching our fists, and then going out into the alley and getting mighty ashamed of ourselves. I thank our common Father for the refined, uplifting, ennobling, cultivated spirit of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. May its tribe increase.

Ohio.

He that getteth a wife getteth a good thing, and obtaineth favor of the Lord, says the Scripture. So says H. M. Garn, pastor of the church at New Antioch. He was united in marriage to Miss Woodward, of Hiram, Thursday, Sept. 3. May happiness and prosperity attend them.

T. L. Fowler, of Canada, and a brother of George Fowler, of Lisbon, has been called to the church at Minerva, recently made vacant by the removal of Guy Hoover to Chicago.

E. K. Van Winkle has bid farewell to New Vienna and accepted the work at Mungen.

W. P. Murray, who left Ohio over a year ago for Canada, has repented and come back to his first love. He began preaching last Sunday at Southington.

The fall conventions are now on. The first one was in District No. 8, at Bellefontaine. The attendance was not so large as usual, but the quality and spirit of the program was first class. The Ohio man made the closing address.

J. S. Ross will move to Hiram and assume the leadership of the Hiram Church. He will fill the pulpit one-fourth time, the rest being supplied by members of the faculty. No man could be a more helpful spirit among students than Brother Ross.

The prospect for Hiram this coming year is exceptionally bright. Every room in Bowler and Miller Halls has been engaged, and still they come. The old hill was never more beautiful, the faculty never stronger and more united, the equipment never so generous. Truly, the outlook is most hopeful. Send hither your sons and daughters.

L. L. Carpenter Sundayed at Chauncey, O., Sept. 6. He was to take a $1,100 collection and set apart a new structure to the service of the Lord. J. E. Hood, late of Garden City, Minn., will preach for the brethren at Chauncey.

Chas. Darsie gives a good report of things in and around Paulding. He recently baptized 8 and reclaimed two in a country district where he did some preaching. The Paulding county yearly meeting will be held Sept. 20. There are thirty new subscribers to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in Paulding.

Ohio has captured one of Pennsylvania's preachers. This time the man is T. E. Winter, who has agreed to preach for the people at Greenwich. We welcome Brother Winter to the Buckeye fellowship, and congratulate Greenwich.

W. G. Walters will go south from Toledo to Fostoria.

S. H. Farrer leaves Fostoria to go to Harvard University.

The fortieth annual meeting of the Eastern Ohio Ministerial Association was held at Hiram, Sept. 1-3. There were about 50 preachers in attendance. The program was well carried out and well prepared. This is the oldest association among the Disciples of Christ. F. M. Green has served it as secretary for about 30 years of its history. The leading addresses were made by Percy Wilson, M. G. Gabriel, P. H. Welsheimer, L. I. Mercer and Joseph Garvin. The fellowship meeting at the close was one long to be remembered. J. N. Scholes presided with grace and dignity. The next meeting will be presided over by

Eruptions

The only way to get rid of pimples and other eruptions is to cleanse the blood, improve the digestion, stimulate the kidneys, liver and skin. The medicine to take is Hood's Sarsaparilla Which has cured thousands.

W. L. Hayden. F. M. Green is secretary. The executive committee will name the place later.

There are places in Ohio for some good preachers who can accept from $600 to $700 as a salary. Address this scribe.

Did you take the offering for Church Extension last Sunday? If not, do so this month.

Collinwood, O.

C. A. FREER.

Virginia.

The work of the Disciples in the Old Dominion, in spite of many and varied troubles, continues to move on toward the achievement of greater and yet greater victories.

We have had a great number of resignations this year, but the vacancies are being filled one by one. We hope very soon to have every place filled with a good man.

C. O. Woodward, who has already made for himself a splendid name in Virginia, has resigned his work at Petersburg. He will begin at Manchester the second Sunday in September. We are looking for a good work at Manchester, under Brother Woodward's able leadership.

C. B. Richards, who took Brother Woodward's place in Petersburg, has already made a splendid start, and is making friends for himself and the cause.

Wm. Phillips, at Fredericksburg, is another new man. He is said to be the right man for that field. It is an important point, and we confidently expect better and better reports.

The scholarly J. K. P. Dickson has resigned at Rappahannock to accept work at East Radford and Pulaski. The brethren at these places are greatly pleased with their new man.

The home board is in sight of $100,000 this year. The books close Sept. 30. If you have not sent an offering to B. L. Smith will you not do so at once, and have a part in this grand victory? Now is the time to rally to the home board. We trust no Virginia church will fail.

Every church in the brotherhood should take an offering for Church Extension this month. This is one of our most important calls. We cannot afford to neglect it.

A new church has been recently organized near Newport, in Giles county. Their new house, which is almost finished, will be dedicated in November. This is a good mission point and will soon grow into a fine church. There are 100 children within walking distance of the church who have never gone to Sunday-school.

The district conventions of Virginia are all past but one. It was my privilege to attend nearly all these meetings. Every convention was well attended, and in every one was manifested the desire to do more and better work than formerly. This speaks well for our future. There was also considerable enthusiasm shown. We are hopeful. In every case plans for enlargement were made. We expect greater things.

The state convention will be held in Richmond, Nov. 4, 5, 6. We expect a large gathering and a splendid convention. We will try to make this our best convention.

C. O. Woodward has recently held a meeting at Chase City, one of the mission points in the state. We have not learned the result.

R. Lin Cave is, now holding meetings with Richard Bagby in Louisa county.

Virginia Christian College, at Lynchburg, Va., expects to begin its first session with 150 students. This is certainly a flattering beginning. The president, Josephus Hopwood, has long since made a reputation as a successful trainer of the mind of youth. His past success insures a large patronage.

Texas.

E. V. Spicer, of Indiana, has accepted the ministry of the church at Ladonia—a good church and an experienced pastor.

L. D. Anderson, of Ennis, has been called and has accepted the work at Palestine. Bro. A. has made a good record and will find an agreeable fellowship with the Palestine church.

A. F. Sanderson begins work with the Central at Houston with flattering prospects. Houston church, planted a few years ago by the aid of our mission funds, has now two self-sustaining churches, owning property worth $20,000—churches which, under the right kind of ministry, pay regularly and liberally to the call of missions.

D. F. Sellards is likely to locate as minister of the Second Church at Houston. These two, to be, Houston ministers are both from Iowa, as was also Brother Sanderson's immediate predecessor.

Talbert F. Weaver, who has for a few years been teaching and preaching, will enter Texas Christian University to more fully prepare himself for the active ministry of the word. He will probably preach for the mission at Mart, eighteen miles south of the university.

Joe H. Douthit, formerly of Texas, now of Seattle, Wash., has accepted the work of Texas Sunday-school evangelist. He is well known and loved in Texas, and we consider that we are fortunate in securing him and his accomplished wife once more in the Texas field.

The fifth Sunday meeting in Collin county was held this quarter with the church at Bethany, five miles out from Plano. The meeting was well attended by the ministers and other members of the churches in the county. Dinner and supper were served on the ground. The hospitality was ample, and the social feature was delightful. Bro. R. C. Horn, corresponding secretary, the veteran of this region as a plain Christian preacher, is much beloved for his work's sake and is a great power for good in all this region. Geo. L. Bush presided over the meetings, which were missionary in spirit. The reports indicated faithful and successful work.

B. B. Sanders, though past his three score of years, is still one of the most successful and popular evangelists in the state. He has just closed a three weeks' meeting at Grafado, with seventy additions. Of these, fifty were men full grown, an unusual percentage, and the heretofore weak church at this point is now well able financially to go forward. A minister was secured to continue the well begun work.

We are glad to learn that the prospect is that Texas Christian University will open this week with the largest attendance in its history. This is as it should be. This school has been, and must more and more become, a large and potent factor in the success of the plea of the Disciples of Texas. Parents will make no mistake when they commit to President Zollars and his co-workers the care of their sons and daughters.

A goodly number of Texans expect to attend the international conventions at Detroit, Oct. 16-22. The route chosen is the Cotton Belt to Memphis, L. & N. via Louisville and Cincinnati. We are to leave Dallas on Oct. 14. For particulars address the writer.

THIRD QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Golden Text: The Lord is my light and my salvation.—Psa. 27:1.

The lessons of the quarter tell of the beginning of the Hebrew monarchy and of the first, or experimental, period of the monarchy. It was a thrilling epoch in the history of a wonderful people, and the narrative is full of historic interest and still fuller of great religious truths. Never has God's watchful care for his people been more signally exhibited. Not even in the escape from Egypt and the journey through the wilderness was his providence more clearly shown than in leading this turbulent people through the labyrinth of difficulties and dangers which beset them in the process of organizing a stable government.

This story of the rise of the Hebrew monarchy occupies thirty chapters, beginning with 1 Sam. 8. The whole story, from the first demand for a king until the establishment of David as king over Israel and Judah, would not occupy more space than forty pages in an ordinary novel. Some evening, when you are sure you will not be interrupted for two hours, sit down and read the whole narrative at one sitting, from 1 Sam. 8, to 2 Sam. 5. It will be found as interesting as a novel and far more profitable.

The following outline will be found useful in reviewing the history of this period. The general theme is

THE BEGINNING OF THE MONARCHY. I. Prelude to the Monarchy.

1. Israel's Demand. The motives: to escape the rule of Samuel's sons; to be like other nations. The prophet's objection.

2. The Choice of Saul. Anointed by Samuel; chosen by lot; proves his title by battle; made king at Gilgal.

3. Samuel's Farewell. The prophet's vindication; warning; farewell.

II. The Reign of Saul.

1. War with the Philistines: A chronic condition; Saul's harshness toward Jonathan (1 Sam. 14:43, foll).

2. The Rejection of Saul: An unacceptable sacrifice and the first warning (1 Sam. 13:9-14); the case of Amalek and Samuel's rebuke; Saul's affliction, the evil spirit.

3. The Choice of Saul's Successor: David anointed.

4. The Rise of David: Saul's companions and musician; armor-bearer to the king; the slayer of Goliath; a popular hero; a warrior and commander of the army; the friend of the king's son; the king's son-in-law.

5. David's Perils: The beginning of Saul's jealousy (1 Sam. 18:8); first attempt on his life (18:10); an unsuccessful treachery; second attempt (19:10); sought by hired murderers (19:11); saved from arrest by the spirit of prophecy (19:18); Jonathan's vain intercession (chap. 20).

6. David a Fugitive: At the sanctuary at Nob; in Gath feigning madness; at the cave of Adullam with 400 men; in Moab; in the wilderness south of Judah; spares Saul twice, at Engedi and Ziph; at Carmel; among the Philistines.

7. The Fall of Saul: The attack of the Philistines; Saul's appeal to the witch of Endor; death of Saul and his sons; the conquest of Israel by the Philistines; David's lament.

III. David Becomes King.

1. King over Judah at Hebron: Abner makes Ish-bosheth king over Israel in the north; war between the northern and southern kingdoms; the revolt of Abner to David; the murder of Abner by Joab; death of Ish-bosheth.

2. David Becomes King over Israel and Judah. (2 Sam. 5:3).

Review Questions.

Why did Israel want a king? Was it a natural demand? Is there any evidence that the demand was intended as a rejection of Jehovah?

What was Samuel's objection to this demand? Was this protest justified by the subsequent history of Israel under the rule of kings? How? Compare the protest of Samuel against the establishment of a secular government with the protest of Isaiah against the proposal to strengthen Israel by an alliance with Egypt (e. g. Isaiah 30:1-5). What was there in common between the desire for a king and the later desire for this alliance?

Who chose Saul to be king—Jehovah, Samuel or the people? What kingly qualities did he show.

What great principle of life did Samuel lay down in his farewell address? How did he vindicate himself as a righteous judge?

What were Saul's chief faults which led to his rejection? What bad results followed from these faults? David, later in life, committed serious sins; how was Saul worse than David?

Who chose David for the kingship? What were his qualifications for the office? Mention the steps by which he rose to prominence. Mention some of the perils which he had to undergo. In what places did he seek refuge? Why did David's six hundred followers join him? What did his flight signify, in addition to Saul's personal jealousy?

Tell the story of David's sojourn among the Philistines and of his fight with the Amalekites. What do you think of the witch of Endor? Did she really have the power of calling up the spirits of the dead in visible form? By whom had the practice of necromancy been forbidden?

How did David receive the news of Saul's death? How did he treat the messenger? Why? At what place did David first make his capital and what was the extent of his kingdom? Who was king over the northern tribes? How long was it until David became king over all Israel?

Truths Illustrated.

Find, in the period of history covered by this quarter's lesson, illustrations of the following religious truths: that the highest loyalty is due to God, and that even patriotism cannot conflict with that; that any organization or arrangement which obscures man's personal responsibility to God, is an evil; that a just judge has nothing to conceal and that a righteous man need never be afraid of his record; that obedience is better than sacrifice; that great powers and talents abused make the greatest and saddest of all wrecks; that a forgiving spirit is a kingly quality; that jealousy does more harm to the subject than to the object of the passion; that faithfulness in small things fits one for the mastery of great things; that greatness of soul avails more than greatness of body; that true prosperity comes only through loyal obedience to God.

Your Physical Salvation.

Never neglect constipation. It means too much misery and piling up of disease for all parts of the body. Death often starts with constipation. The clogging of the bowels forces poison through the intestines into the blood. All sorts of diseases commence that way. Most common complaints are dyspepsia, indigestion, catarrh of the stomach, liver complaint, kidney trouble, headaches, etc. The bowels must be relieved, but not with cathartics or purgatives. They weaken and aggravate the disease. Your physical salvation lies in using Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine instead. It is a tonic laxative of the highest order. It builds up and adds new strength and vigor. It assists the bowels to move themselves naturally and healthfully without medicine. One small dose a day will cure any case, and remove the cause of the trouble. It is not a patent nostrum nor a liquor. The list of ingredients goes with every package with explanation of their action. It is not simply a temporary relief, it is a permanent cure. Try it. A free sample bottle for the asking. Send for the sample to-day. Address, Vernal Remedy Co., 19 Seneca Building, Buffalo, N. Y.

AN EVENING WITH JAPANESE MISSIONS.

Matt. 4:2, 3.

Japan is one of the most promising and interesting, though perhaps also one of the most difficult, of all foreign mission fields. It is interesting because of the charm of this wonderful people with their highly developed civilization, their keen sense of beauty and their open mindedness to new ideas. It is promising because the nation is undergoing a rapid transformation from medievalism to the conditions of modern life, and is eager to imbibe the influences and ideas of the western world. Nowhere else has Christianity an opportunity to be so quickly and thoroughly woven into the fabric of a people's civilization. But it is a difficult field because, with the enlightenment of the people and the casting off of old superstitions, there has come in a spirit of skepticism toward all religions. The evil influences that have been imported from so-called Christian lands are also a stumblingblock, and the wonderful material advances of the past half century have busied the minds of the people to the exclusion of the things that are unseen and eternal.

Japan is sometimes called the Great Britain of the Orient. Its insular position, just off the mainland of the continent, its area, its population, 45,000,000, and its development of naval power giving promise of an influence out of proportion to its size, all support this comparison. On account of the aggressiveness, the quickness to learn and to apply new ideas, which the Japanese have shown in the past fifty years, they are also called the Yankees of the Orient. Both comparisons show their strength and importance.

Christianity was first introduced into Japan in 1549 by Francis Xavier, the great Jesuit missionary, who spent two and a half years there. The work grew amazingly, and sixty years later there were, it is estimated, two million Catholic Christians in Japan. Then persecution arose, terrible and fierce. Thousands were killed and other thousands fled into exile. By 1637, Christianity had entirely disappeared, and for more than two centuries there was not a Christian in Japan. It was a hermit nation, absolutely cut off from intercourse with the western world.

In 1854 the awakening of Japan began. In that year Commodore Perry made the famous treaty by which certain ports were opened. Soon the whole country was thrown open to foreigners, and Japan found herself in the full current of modern civilization. The first Protestant missionaries in Japan were Episcopalians and Presbyterians. The first Protestant church was organized in 1872 and was called "the Church of Christ in Japan." Denominational names and the sectarian spirit have never flourished in Japan.

Japan has been one of the most important mission fields of the Disciples of Christ. We have nearly twenty missionaries there, besides native evangelists and helpers.

There are now about 133,000 Christians in Japan out of a population of 45,000,000. There are 900 Christian churches, against 56,000 Shinto shrines, which are largely devoted to ancestor-worship and emperor-worship, and 70,000 Buddhist temples. Yet the results of Christianity in Japan are much greater than mere statistics would show. There has been an uplift in the moral tone of society through its influence. Moral obligations are recognized even among those who do not observe them strictly. Many of the leaders in official life have been trained under the influence of Christian missionaries. The whole empire is being leavened with Christian influence.

TEN STUDIES IN THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT. 2. NEW RULES OF CONDUCT.

Matt 5:21-26; 38-48.

New rules—of course; why not? Should we not progress? Are we content to remain forever in the kindergarten or in the primary department? And as sure as we go on, we shall encounter new rules; that is really just what we are looking for.

It is well enough to begin low with children; and when the race was in its infancy, God began at a very low point. Do not kill; do not commit adultery; do not lie; these direct commands were uttered to hold back the surging passions of men. Now higher ground has been gained. The heart must be probed. The religion of Jesus Christ is not a law over us, but a principle of life within us. We will give this new Teacher a royal welcome, and we will give heed to his wise words.

Reconciliation is better than ritualism. You who have been harboring hateful thoughts, you who have gone through the midst of men, dropping burning words like firebrands, go back, and quench the fire. Even if you are at the altar offering your gift, quit the altar; first reconciliation, then oblation. Forgiveness on the part of men paves the way for God's forgiveness. We can never enter with great joy into the sanctuary unless we are living in peace with our fellowmen. We cannot offer an acceptable offering, if we harbor hatred.

And then this Teacher tells us that when we are smitten, we must turn the other cheek; when we are imposed upon, we must submit. Is not this an echo of that beatitude—"Blessed are the meek?" The words here are not to be taken literally. Jesus is quenching the fires of revenge. Suppose when a man strikes you, you strike back; then both are disturbers of the peace. We are advised not to take the law into our own hands; that may be the only law possible in a semi-savage state, but the world is ripe and ready for a better law. And be assured, as fast as we are ready for it, the new rule comes.

Be accommodating. Go two miles with a man to show him the way if he asks for one. Outdo yourself in kindness. Serve with a surplus of energy and devotion that will convince the gainsayers. You know how sometimes we do good in a miserly, porcupinish fashion; that must be changed by the new rule of philanthropy. As a sample of bald literalism defeating itself, take the rule, "Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow, turn not thou away." Suppose we were to do just that; why, the foundations of society would be removed.

Test the saying in the larger way. Have we not asked God for many a gift which he has denied? Why the denial? Is it not always because he sees that we ask amiss; that to grant the petition would be to hurt the petitioner? And do you think God wants us to do with one another what he will not do with us? The gift outright is often blessed, and yet it is the most difficult of all charitable acts. Many a gift injures the recipient. To give to an able-bodied person is always measurably to pauperize him. If you are tender-hearted, devoted, kind; if you are charitable, and find yourself growing in these directions, rejoice, for you are obeying the new Teacher.

And the purpose of it all—"Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect." Not in the same degree, but in the same manner. This is a high and glorious standard.

PRAYER.

We give thee thanks, O God, for the lessons taught; for the perplexities that have yielded to our anxious inquiry; for the golden grain of wisdom garnered. Incline our hearts to heed these precepts; enable us, above all, to enter into the very spirit of Christ, in all our behavior, for his name's sake. Amen.

A Great Railroad.

It may be truthfully said that railroads, more than any other medium, make a great city. St. Louis is truly great in her railroads, having some twenty-one important lines terminating within her borders.

One of the most important of these roads to St. Louis is the WABASH LINE, from the fact that it draws the commerce of nearly all sections of the country to this metropolis, as a magnet draws kindred metals to itself.

The great arms of this growing system reach to Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Albia and Ottumwa, Ia.; Chicago, Toledo, Detroit and Buffalo, and attract business from beyond these important gateways even from the remote Pacific Coast, the extreme Northwest, the Great Lakes and the Atlantic borders.

It is commercially aggressive, and in its never ceasing activity is to-day reaching its great steel tentacles toward Pittsburg, Pa., and Baltimore, Md. In a little more than a year these two beehives of industry and all their tributary territory will be bound to St. Louis by the continuous rails of the WABASH.

Its through-car system is perfect, running solid, fully equipped trains for night and day service to Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Toledo, Niagara Falls and Buffalo, and through sleeping cars to New York, Boston, Montreal, Denver, Portland, Ore., Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Its train equipment is modern in every particular, there having recently been placed in service many new passenger cars consisting of Observation-Cafe and Library Cars, Reclining Chair Cars, Dining Cars, Day Coaches and Combination smoking and Baggage Cars, which are models of beauty and neatness, representing the highest state of development in car building.

This road will be called upon to transport hundreds of thousands of visitors to the World's Fair in 1904, and its facilities will be found ample for so gigantic an undertaking.

THE WABASH is essentially a St. Louis line, having its General Officers, from the President down, located here, and has an army of employees, necessary to carry on this vast system, who are citizens of St. Louis.

It spends its money largely in St. Louis and it has the interest of St. Louis always in mind.

Truly this is "A GREAT RAILROAD," and above all things, it is a St. Louis railroad.

Our Budget

—The church at Knoxville, Ia., A. R. Adams, pastor, raised its apportionment for church extension.

—Business college for sale to member of Christian Church. Address S. A. Nesbit, Napa, Calif.

—It is reported that B. S. Ferrell, of Watseka, Ill., has received a call from the Jefferson St. Church, Buffalo, N. Y.

—J. W. Paine, of Valley Falls, Kans., would like to correspond with churches needing pastors. Eight years' experience.

—J. L. Haddock, of Baton Rouge, La., is returning home after a six weeks' vacation of hard work in Texas and Oklahoma.

—A. R. Hunt, of Savannah, began a short meeting with the Union Chapel Christian Church in De Kalb county, Sept. 2.

—Last week the Foreign Christian Missionary Society received two gifts on the annuity plan, one of $500 and the other of $2,000.

—B. B. Sanders has closed a meeting at Athens, Tex., with 52 additions, 33 by baptism, 6 from other religious bodies, 13 by statement.

—Robert J. Burdette was ordained to the ministry on Aug. 13, and has been installed as pastor of the Temple Baptist Church, Los Angeles, Cal.

—The church at Russellville, Mo., will dedicate its new house Oct. 11. Pepsin, Mo., will dedicate Oct. 18. These are both state mission churches.

—W. S. Johnson, who has done successful work both as pastor and as evangelist, has been employed as a Bible-school evangelist for Iowa, to begin about Oct. 1.

—Roy Handley, who has been studying at Butler College, has accepted a call to the Second Church, South Bend, Ind., and will continue his work in the University of Chicago.

—E. C. Harris has been called to the pastorate of the church at Shreve, O., where he will succeed L. W. Spayd, who is to devote himself to independent missionary work in South Africa.

—Work has been begun on the new building of the Central Christian Church, Wichita, Kan. It will be of pressed brick and terra cotta, with an auditorium seating 1,200, and will cost $25,000.

—I. N. McCash recently celebrated the tenth anniversary of the beginning of his pastorate at University Place, Des Moines. The church gave a reception to Brother and Sister McCash on the occasion.

—Wm. Ward, formerly pastor at Harvel, Ill., but who has accepted a unanimous call from the church at Fairbury, Ill., favored this office with a brief visit last week. He will begin work in his new field Sept. 20.

—A special issue of the Christian Courier of Brooklyn, N. Y., is a memorial to the late C. C. Martin, who was a leading member of the Sterling Place Christian Church, Brooklyn, and was one of the foremost civil engineers in the country.

—H. G. Hill, of Omaha, has traveled as far east as Pennsylvania, this summer, with "The Wandering Jew" and "One Sided People." On the last trip east Bro. Hill gave seven addresses, and is to give "One Sided People" in South Omaha, immediately on his return to Nebraska.

—Reports of Church Extension day are coming in. Rudolph, Ohio, John Munro pastor, exceeded its apportionment. Earlington, Ky., W. R. Jinnet, pastor, raised its apportionment of $50. In fact, all real live churches have taken or are about to take an offering for Church Extension.

—W. E. M. Hackleman, who has been devoting his time to the interests of his growing music-publishing business and also serving jointly with T. J. Legg as corresponding secretary for Indiana, will spend the fall and winter largely in his old vocation as singing evangelist, beginning about Nov. 1.

—A. F. Sanderson will be missed in Keokuk, Ia., after his successful pastorate there. He has accepted a call to Houston, Tex., and has already taken charge of that work.

—Churches within a hundred miles of St. Louis desiring preaching once or twice a month may be put in correspondence with a minister by addressing G. E. W., care of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—The books of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society close Sept. 30. Let friends make a note of this and see that their offerings are in the hands of F. M. Rains, corresponding secretary, before that date. It will require all the delinquent offerings to assure the $200,000.

—F. M. Green, of Kent, O., has celebrated his semi-centennial. He writes: "Fifty years ago last Sunday I was baptized by Dr. W. A. Belding. B. F. Perkey preached the sermon and J. H. Jones took the confessions. I am enjoying myself this summer among the churches for which I preached many years ago."

—The New York Convention will be held at Wellsville, Sept. 22-25. This promises to be one of the best yet. A large number of delegates have already reported as intending to go. Be sure and get certificates with ticket which will entitle you to fare and one-third rate, providing one hundred purchase tickets. Let every church, C. E. and Sunday-school get their offering for state work in at the convention, at the latest." S. J. COREY.

—We call special attention to the article by C. C. Smith on page 365 regarding the calamity in Jamaica. Six of our churches were destroyed by the hurricane and thousands of people are homeless and starving. They need help at once. Read the article and enclose a contribution to the address there given. The act of Christian people in relieving suffering may open a door for the entrance of the gospel when everything else fails.

—Bro. Ernest H. Boyd, gospel singer of Creston, Ia., whose mail miscarried during the flood season, has changed his plans and is open for a meeting at once. He is a singer of considerable repute, and has spared neither himself, time or means in his musical education. He is well recommended by his teacher, Dean Howard, also by Dean Haggard and Dr. McCash. Brother Boyd will assist either a regular pastor or an evangelist.

R. H. INGRAM.

—The South Broadway Christian Church, Denver, Col., according to the reports presented at its annual meeting a few days ago, has had the most prosperous year in its history. The amount raised for current expenses was $4,097, and in addition to this amount the debt on the church has been reduced by $6,000 since the rally day, nine months ago. B. B. Tyler is pastor of this church, and if you should say "dead-line" to any member of this congregation he wouldn't know what you were talking about.

—A blind broom-maker has started a church in Fort Wayne, Ind. George Somers handed a twenty-dollar gold piece to Bro. E. W. Allen, who is holding a tent-meeting in the east end of that city, and said he wanted it to be a nest-egg for a fund to build a church in that district. When the story was told, others pledged freely, and the building is assured. Brother Allen, who is pastor of the West Jefferson St. Church, will organize a mission church, which will start with fifty members. A Sunday-school with 100 members has already been organized.

—Sumner T. Martin, who has been doing a remarkably successful work at Bellaire, O., writes: "With genuine regret and sorrow on both sides, we have been obliged to take steps to get my oldest boy into a higher and drier climate on account of weak lungs. On this account alone I have resigned here after one of the most fruitful and delightful years in my whole ministry. God has showered His blessings on our labors and the people have been so kind. Over 300 have been added during the year. There are few better churches than this and I love it dearly." Bro. Martin's many friends will join us in regret for the cause of this enforced removal. He goes to the Central Church, Pueblo, Col.

—The Christian church at Gas City, Kan., dedicated its new building, Sept. 13. The services were conducted by J. J. Lockhart, assisted by Hon. G. H. Lamb. Their motto is, "To the stars through difficulty," and, with their fine new house, they feel that they have made the journey and are now inhabiting celestial places.

—We are to have a Christian College in Australia for the training of ministers and evangelists. At the recent Jubilee Conference at Victoria a committee was appointed to consider the advisability of this step, and the committee recommends that a college be established at Melbourne to train young men and women for church work and that the course of study be laid out with this end strictly in view, leaving the Australian universities to provide the necessary courses in liberal arts.

—Daniel Trundle has accepted a unanimous call to the pastorate of the church at Springdale, Ark., where he was pastor three years ago. This, he says, is the third instance in which he has returned to a church for a second pastorate. The frequency of such returns in this case and in many others seems to indicate that churches and pastors often sever their relations on too slight provocation and are sorry for it afterward. One preacher who was asked for the secret of his twenty years pastorate said: "Whenever I wanted to go, the church wouldn't let me; and when the church wanted me to leave, I wouldn't go."

—"The opening of Texas Christian University, Sept. 9, realized the expectations of her hopeful friends. The attendance is about 100 in excess of the opening of last year, a gain of at least 75 per cent. The very ample provision made for boarding students has proved inadequate, and new quarters are being prepared to relieve the crowded condition. It became necessary also to employ additional teaching force. The new professors are giving excellent satisfaction, and the institution doubtless has before it the most prosperous year of its history. The patrons are enthusiastic and President Zollars is happy."

—The Christian Observer (Presbyterian) of Louisville, Ky., celebrated its ninetieth birthday on Sept. 4, and now claims to be the oldest religious newspaper in the world. So far as we know, this claim cannot be disputed. The Christian Observer, like the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, is the product of many converging streams of journalistic enterprise. It was founded in Philadelphia in 1813, under the name "The Religious Remembrancer." It has been published under its present name for sixty years. We congratulate our monogenerian contemporary upon its length of days, and wish for it a prosperous future and an ever-increasing knowledge of the truth.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed. Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous services.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

—Missouri readers will not fail to observe carefully the program of the state convention which is published elsewhere in this paper. It is a splendid program and the convention will round out a splendid year's work. The corresponding secretary informs us that the report which will be presented is the best in years. There is an increase of 500 in number of additions and other items are in like proportion. A small matter of $300 is yet needed to enable the board to close the year out of debt. Surely it will come and the convention at Columbia can be made a great and joyful celebration of a great year's work, without the chilling shadow of a single unpaid obligation. Missourians, remember Columbia, Sept. 21-24.

—The Church Extension receipts for the first nine days of September, 1903, are $1,050.02, which is a gain of $200 over last year in contributions from the churches. Nearly every church thus far reporting has either reached its apportionment or gone beyond it, and many have doubled their apportionment. The church at Beckley, W. Va., raised five times its apportionment. Virdon, S. D. doubled its apportionment. Every report is encouraging. Beckley, W. Va., and Virdon, S. D., are mentioned because they are in mission territory. Quite a number of churches are still ordering supplies. If churches continue to do so well, we are sure of the $30,000 in September. Remit promptly to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—"W. A. Meloan, one of our best known and ablest ministers, has just become the general representative of our National Benevolent Association for Illinois. Pastors desiring his services in presenting this important phase of gospel ministry to their congregations may write him, until further notice, at 903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis. That men like Brother Meloan are devoting their energies to the up-building of the cause of Christian philanthropy among us, is a sure prophecy of the early restoration of the practice of apostolic benevolence by the Church of Christ. We bespeak for Brother Meloan a cordial greeting by our Illinois churches, and wish for him the largest success in this holy ministry."—G. L. SNIVELY.

Brother Meloan was for some time pastor of the church in East St. Louis, and is widely and favorably known.

—"The Christian Churches of Tippecanoe county, Ind., held their first annual mass meeting in the First Christian church at La Fayette, Aug. 30. Representatives from each of the six congregations of the county assembled at 9:30 for Bible-school, one of the congregations sending its entire Bible-school membership fifteen miles. A. L. Orcutt, pastor of the Sixth Christian Church of Indianapolis, and a man of deep convictions and plain, strong arguments, delivered three excellent discourses during the day. Basket dinner was served in the church parlors at noon. Following the communion service in the afternoon reports were submitted showing every congregation in the county, with the possible exception of one, to be in a decidedly progressive condition. The mass meeting was a perfect success, and C. H. Trout, the president of the co-operation, has every reason to feel proud of the showing made. The experiment has proved its value and will hereafter be a strong factor in the county for Christ."—BYRON BURDITT, Sec'y.

—Visitors to Salt Lake City know how skillfully and shrewdly the representatives of Mormonism endeavor to create favorable impression on tourists and convince them of the harmlessness of their religious system. Perhaps they do not know that the Mornton Church makes this a distinct department of its propaganda and spends thousands of dollars in insidious missionary work under the guise of courteously furnishing interesting information to Gentile tourists. The object is not so much to make converts as to create a public sentiment indulgent and complacent toward Mormonism. Such a device can be met only by a similar counter-influence. The Woman's Missionary Union of Salt Lake City is therefore preparing to publish and distribute literature giving more accurate information than that dealt out to the trusting tourist by the courteous Mormon elders. Contributions to this "Gentile Bureau of Information" and application for its literature may be sent to Richard Wake, cor. sec'y., Box 772, Salt Lake City.

—The following telegram is received just as we go to press and will be read with deep regret by many in Indiana and elsewhere: E. F. Mahan, pastor Shelbyville, died to-day of typhoid. We all loved him and feel the loss greatly.—W. E. M. HACKLEMAN, secretary.

—On his return trip from the lake side the Editor spent a Lord's day with Bro. J. H. Smart at Waukegan, Ill., where he has been pastor since last May. We had the privilege of hearing Brother Smart in the morning and of occupying his pulpit in the evening. It had been several years since we heard our former co-laborer, and we were glad to see that he has not crossed the "dead line," and seems to know nothing of it. We were pleased with his order of service, and mention two features which we have not noticed elsewhere: the use of the Lord's prayer by the whole church in the opening service, and a junior choir, balancing the senior choir on the opposite side of the pulpit. The church numbers about two hundred members. Brother Smart and his wife, and his niece, who lives with them, are all active workers in the church. Waukegan is a city of 15,000 population, an hour's ride north of Chicago, on the lake shore.

—By previous engagement the Editor addressed the Chicago Ministerial Association on Monday on "The Message for the Ministry of To-day." By some misunderstanding as to time and place of meeting, some of the preachers were not present, but there was a good representation, and, it was felt, a profitable meeting, followed by a luncheon and informal discussion. We visited the Christian Century office, and found Brother Young and his assistants hard at work. In the evening we dined at Prof. Ames', where we spent a delightful evening until train time with his family, and Bro. Oliver W. Stewart and wife, and Bro. C. A. Young and wife. The Chicago ministers feel encouraged at the outlook for their work in that city.

—The Hyde Park Church, of which E. S. Ames is pastor, contained in its last Lord's day printed notices the following item:

"We have reason to be proud of our gifts to missions since last October. We give $45.00 this month for church extension, and have given $60.00 to the city, home and foreign societies. The Sunday-school gave $25.00 for heathen missions, and $30.00 is given each year for the education of a native girl in India. These gifts aggregate $280.00, and the contributions through the C. W. B. M., and otherwise, would make the total at least $300.00, or an average of two dollars for each member of the church."

As this church is a child of our American Christian Missionary Society, and it was felt by some that it was hardly a legitimate use of home mission funds to aid in establishing a congregation under the shadow of the University of Chicago, the foregoing item is of special interest.

—"Milligan College opened Wednesday, Sept. 9. The first day's enrollment surpassed that of any previous year in the history of the school, being even 100. This indicates that the enrollment for the year will be considerably over 200. Milligan College has done an excellent work in the past, and with the great interest now being manifested, the future gives promise of still better things. A movement is being made to endow the college, and it is hoped that the friends of Christian education will come to the assistance of the institution liberally and promptly. Its past record, its present success, and its future purpose give it the very strongest claims to a place among our permanent institutions."—G. H. EASLEY, Milligan, Tenn.

—Dr. Susie C. Rijnhart and Dr. A. L. Shelton and wife sail for Tibet Sept. 29, from San Francisco on the steamship "China." This is the first company of missionaries ever sent out by any church to that strange and distant land. Dr. Rijnhart's tragic experience a few years ago in Tibet is well known through her book, "With the Tibetans in Tent and Temple." She has been anxious to return to that land, and the Foreign Society has been fortunate in securing Dr. and Mrs. Shelton to accompany her. They will go out from Kansas. Dr. Shelton was graduated from the medical college at Louisville, Ky., and has practiced medicine at his home, Mound City, Kan. F. M. Rains says: "He is a splendid type of man, strong and vigorous physically and intellectually, thoroughly consecrated to the work. He is one of the best men we could have found to pioneer the way into the strange and exclusive land of Tibet. His wife is a woman of education and culture. She has been teaching a number of years. They are both good students with a wide range of information, with a clear and definite purpose in life, genial, warm-hearted and enthusiastic for the conversion of the whole wide world. The mission in Tibet will prove one of the most popular in the hearts of our people."

Dedication at Elvins, Mo.

The dedication of the First Christian Church at Elvins, Mo., occurred last Lord's day. It was a day of great rejoicing on account of the great success achieved. Our pastor, J. G. M. Luttenberger, of St. Louis, has been busily engaged in lifting the church debt. The new church is a handsome and commodious structure, and one of the finest houses of worship in the lead belt.

Over two years ago the work was started by Bro. G. B. Gale, a clever and successful business man, and with the assistance of the writer and a few other Disciples, ways and means were provided to have the gospel preached. This being done by faithful ministers and active workers, we soon created an influence for good in the community. Now we see that our labor has not been in vain in the Lord.

Brother Luttenberger preached in the morning. There were six additions. At 2:15 p. m. he preached the dedication sermon and raised the necessary $600 to free the church from indebtedness. There was an immense audience at the dedication and at all the services. Bro. R. M. Talbert, Hon. G. O. Nations, I. B. Dodson, J. Robertson and Rev. C. Velvic, the pastor of the M. E. Church, spoke words of cheer and encouragement after the dedication. Bro. Talbert delivered the dedicatory prayer. We had people from different parts of the state. In the evening we had two more additions. One excellent young man who made the good confession, wished to be baptized the same hour of the night, was buried with the Lord in baptism by Brother Luttenberger in the Flat river, in the presence of a large assembly, while the beautiful moon shed its rays on the baptismal waters. Another bright young man was also baptized this morning. This makes eight additions yesterday. All the departments of the church are in good working order. We are thankful to all who assisted us, and wish them the blessings which God alone can bestow.

Mississippi State Convention.

One of the most delightful, but one of the poorest attended, state conventions of the Christian Church ever held in Mississippi has just concluded its sessions here.

There were but few ministers and proportionately fewer delegates attending this convention than usual, and but for the fact of visiting preachers from other fields than Mississippi, this convention would doubtless have been a miserable failure.

It is claimed in explanation that Mississippi during the past few months has been so absorbed in state politics that religious questions and spiritual matters have been side-tracked, and this explanation is indeed a reasonable one, but there are other reasons quite as potent, if not more so, than the above, which may be surmised by reading between the lines.

Mississippi, during the past few years, has had four different state evangelists, each of whom, after brief trials, gave up the work and quietly moved away to other fields, and this state of affairs has rather created the impression abroad that this is an unfruitful missionary field, not worth the cultivation; and, on the other hand, the constant changing of evangelists has seriously dampened the religious ardor of many of our most faithful brethren.

The first service was a splendid sermon from the talented young pastor from the West Point Church, Bro. J. L. Greenwell; subject, "The Church of the Twentieth Century," which he handled in an able and scholarly manner.

On Thursday morning Bro. J. D. Adcock, our worthy president, called the convention to order, after which Bro. R. W. Wallace, pastor of the Meridian church, extended the hospitalities of our brethren and friends to the convention in a few well-timed remarks, which were appropriately responded to by State Evangelist W. A. McLean.

The program as printed thus far was literally carried out, but there being so many absent ones whose places had to be supplied, much of the remainder was, therefore, informal.

There were many fine speeches made and sermons preached, and the writer would very much like to dwell more at length in noticing particularly these splendid addresses, but time and space forbid; suffice it to say that on Thursday evening Bro. O. P. Spigel, pastor of the New Orleans Church, in behalf of our General Home Missionary Board, gave us a most excellent address on the subject of Missions. On Friday evening Bro. George L. Snively, of St. Louis, Corresponding Secretary of our National Benevolent Association, entertained the convention in a masterly manner, his subject being, "The Gospel of the Helping Hand." This was decidedly one of the most appropriate speeches of the convention, and is a subject worthy of our highest consideration, and the pity is that more of this gospel of the helping hand isn't taught and practiced.

Brother Snively is the right man in the right place, and we very much hope he will make us other visits from time to time.

The convention finished its labors on Saturday and formally adjourned to meet next year the first week in August at Utica, Miss., having elected a new board for the ensuing year and a new state evangelist, viz., Bro. W. W. Phares, recently from the evangelistic field of Tennessee, but who was formerly the pastor of the church at Fayette, Miss.

Brother Phares is a splendid young minister, strong, vigorous and magnetic, both mentally, physically and spiritually, and his selection to guide, direct and foster our evangelistic forces during the next year, gives promise and hope of splendid results.

The writer is tempted just here to draw the curtain and conclude this prolix account of our recent convention, but there was one visitor and minister attending this convention whom our Mississippi brethren at least will deeply regret miss seeing, viz., Bro. John A. Stevens, our former state evangelist, who was looking as young and vigorous and was as full of religious enthusiasm as ever, and we were all delighted beyond measure to meet and greet him again. He is a full convention himself, and can put as much spiritual life and enthusiasm into an audience in as short a time as any speaker the writer ever knew. He spoke to us and preached for us several times while here, and on Sunday evening his sermon and audience deserve special mention. His subject, "The Spirit of Our Plea," he handled in his inimitable style, holding his audience spellbound from start to finish. The audience, notwithstanding the extreme warm weather, packed the house, being the largest we have had for years.

The writer would like to give a more detailed account of this splendid sermon, but has already trespassed too long upon the patience of the reader, and so will forbear. In conclusion, however, he indulges the hope that some day in the near future the churches of Mississippi will earnestly seek and secure the services of this worthy servant of God to lead them as of yore. We are constrained to think, judging from the hearty and cordial greetings exchanged between him and the good people of our city, and of those that attended the convention, that this would not only be a "consummation devoutly to be wished" by our people, but likewise a possibility on the part of Brother Stevens.

B. H. GINNES, V. P. State Board.
Meridian, Miss.

Missouri Convention Notes.

What about those "three things," to which we called your attention? 1. Railroad rates. All lines have given the one fare round trip rate plus 50 cents. You can huy Sunday, Sept. 20, Monday and Tuesday, but you cannot huy Wednesday. Come Monday; get there in time for the first song at 2:30 and stay till the last word is spoken.

2. Did you send your name to Brother Winders? If not, do it now.

3. If your church has not lifted that offering, now is your last chance. Bring it to the convention with you. Your board is going to need every dollar it can get in order to pay all indebtedness. Our receipts show an increase of $1,000 more than last year, but we need an increase of $1,500 to make all clear. We have depended on you all the year and you must not fail us. Remember this is no more our work than it is yours. The State Board is but your committee to carry out your instructions, to obey your commands.

The report to be made at the state convention will be the best ever. Nearly 2,000 souls have been garnered by the work of the men directly in the employ of your board. We show better returns for money invested than any other mission enterprise known to us. This is not boasting, but the statement of a matter of fact.

The convention at Columbia should be full of thanksgiving. Its very note should be one of joy, its every determination for larger and better things. Never had we cause for greater thankfulness, never more reason for pressing forward in the good work. The work that we have done this year has been so graciously blessed of God that we would be churlish if we were not inspired thereby to larger and more efficient service.

It is a sad thing that some of our churches are not in full fellowship with us in this work. If they knew what use is made of this failure they would fall in line with an alacrity and unanimity that would be delightful. Our "loyal" brethren are out for numbers; they must have them; they need them in their business. The poor dupes who are being gulled by the leaders would forsake them with a rush if they knew how few they really are. But these leaders mark every church that does not contribute through the "societies" and claim it as on their side. This is not a joke, but an actual fact. Every church that gives not to the work of missions through the organized forces is counted as on their side. Now, brethren, if that does not move

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly every body knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but, simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I got more and better charcoal in Stuart's absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

you to action, immediate, earnest, unanimous, we despair of ever moving you at all.

Matters of the most vital interest to the church at large will come up at Columbia. Every interested follower of the Lord Jesus should be there and help by presence and prayers to make the meeting a great success.

Our last word before the convention is come.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing, can put up a bushel in 10 minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) 2-cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. FRANCIS CASEY, St. Louis, Mo.

To the C. W. B. M. Auxiliaries.

Our national convention at Detroit is not very far away. We should all be planning for its success. The motto chosen for the gathering is "A representative from every church," and may we not add "A delegate from every auxiliary and organization of young people." We need such a representation. There is hard work before us next year. Plans should be made for its prosecution. There will also be interesting things to tell of what has been done this year. These, with the plans for future work, should be repeated by some living voice, as well as by our printed reports, to every one of our auxiliaries. If this could be done what an inspiration would come to all our workers, what an impulse to the work itself! That this convention may be great in itself and great in what it shall accomplish, your auxiliary should have a representative there. Will you not try for this?

An Electric Belt Free

Send Your Application At Once To
The Physicians' Institute.

They Will Send You Absolutely Free One of Their 100 Gauge Supreme Electric Belts, the Belt Which Has Made So Many Wonderful Cures—You Needn't Send Even a Postage Stamp, Just Your Name and Address.

Seven years ago the State of Illinois granted to the Physicians' Institute of Chicago a charter.

There was need of something above the ordinary method of treatment for chronic diseases, something more than any one specialist or any number of specialists acting independently could do, so the State itself, under the powers granted it by its general laws, gave the power to the Physicians' Institute to furnish to the sick such help as would make them well and strong.

Ever since its establishment this Institute has endeavored in every possible way to carry out the original purposes of its establishment under the beneficent laws of the State.

Three years ago, the Physicians' Institute, realizing the value of electricity in the treatment of certain phases of disease, created under the superintendence of its staff of specialists an electric belt, and this belt has been proved to be of great value as a curative agent. From time to time it has been improved until it reached that stage of perfection which warranted its present name of "Supreme."

This belt is the most effective of all agents in the cure of rheumatism, lumbago, lame back, nervous exhaustion, weakened or lost vital functions, varicose, kidney disorders and many other complaints.

This "Supreme Electric Belt" is made in one grade only—100 gauge—there is no better electric belt made and no better belt can be made. Whenever in the opinion of our staff of specialists the wonderful curative and revitalizing forces of electricity will cure you we send you, free of all cost, one of these Supreme Electric Belts. It is not sent on trial, it is yours to keep forever without the payment of one cent. This generous offer may be withdrawn at any time, so you should write to-day for this free "Supreme Electric Belt" to the Physicians' Institute, at 1974 Unity Building, Chicago, Ill.

the next national convention at Detroit in October is not in the usual vacation time, but a visit to these beautiful lakes will be rewarded abundantly by the delightful autumn scenery. Put off your vacation till this convention time, and have a double enjoyment, the convention furnishing the greater share. There is great power in numbers; besides your presence increases safety, for Solomon says, "In a multitude of counsel is safety." A great convention is a foretaste of the great gathering of the saints on the last day. Be sure to take it in.

Harrison, O., Sept. 10, 1903.

Special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

AT WAYNE, IND., Sept. 13.—Forty members received into West Jefferson Street Church to-day.—E. W. ALLEN.

COLORADO.—Paonia, Sept. 5.—Evangelist Clarence A. Hill and wife are spending the month of September at Paonia. This place is located in one of the valleys of the western part of the state, and among the finest fruit regions of the United States, notwithstanding we are in sight of snow every day. The trip across the Rockies was most delightful. Seven additions at first service with more to follow.—CLARENCE A. HILL.

ILLINOIS.—Mt. Sterling, Sept. 7.—Four more additions to the church here.—N. E. CORY.

Mackinaw, Sept. 7.—The church at this place reached its apportionment, $50, for Church Extension yesterday. This is nearly double the highest amount ever given to this fund before. It was raised easily. H. H. Peters, of Eureka, is our pastor, and gives the church royal service. One young man of promise recently made the good confession. Our Christian Endeavor will give the town a lecture course this winter.—EMILE L. PATTERSON.

Dorchester, Sept. 10.—Brother Groner, of Litchfield, held his annual basket meeting with the Ridgley Church last Sunday. Large crowd present. After the morning sermon by the pastor, a collection of $44.13 was raised which will be equally divided between four departments of our work. Brother Groner has been preaching for this church for 24 successive years, and has trained them to give regularly to our different departments of work. The day was an ideal one for a basket meeting. Brother Groner will visit for a month with his daughter at Kansas City and other places.—J. E. MASTERS.

Waverly, Sept. 10.—Our first meeting of the fall is with our home congregation. Thomas J. Shuey, of Rock Island, is our evangelist and every one is delighted with his work. Charlie Hill is our pastor, and is highly appreciated by the people. We are helping in the meeting and have charge of the music.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON AND WIFE, Song Evangelists.

Chicago.—Bro. J. V. Updike, one of our leading evangelists, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Garfield Boulevard Church of Christ, Chicago. The church has moved to more capacious quarters at 5852 South Halsted Street (corner of 59th street). Brother Updike preached his first two sermons on Sunday last. There were three additions to the church during the day, and the outlook for a strong and prosperous church is certainly very encouraging. The members of the church are making a grand effort to assist Brother Updike, and the results of their efforts are plainly manifest in the increased congregation. Brother Updike has with him, to assist with the music, Bro. H. A. Easton, who was his traveling companion and assistant in his evangelical work for some six years. Brother Easton is a vocalist and chorister of rare ability. We are now expecting grand results from the Garfield Boulevard church.—W. R. LOVE, S. P. KENNEDY, Elders.

INDIANA.—Franklin, Sept. 3.—During a short meeting at Braytown, including the fifth Lord's day in August, eleven were added. Eight confessions and three by statement. One young man is prayerfully considering the ministry.—WILLIS M. CUNNINGHAM.

North Vernon, Sept. 10.—Closed a meeting at Salem church, Cross Plains, Ind., Sunday night, with 19 additions; 1 reclaimed, 2 by statement, 7 from Baptists, 9 confessions. Besides this, a good Christian Endeavor Society was organized. A better feeling prevails since the meeting and the brethren are happy over the results. I have resigned at North Vernon and will devote some time to evangelistic work.—J. J. TAYLOR.

Angola, Sept. 10.—I have just closed a short meeting with J. H. Mavity at Pine Village, Ind., with 29 additions. Orville Harrold, of Muncie, Ind., led the singing. We begin a meeting at Oxford, Ind., Sept. 20th. We have one open date yet before the holidays. Oct. 25—Nov. 22. Should be glad to hear from churches wanting a meeting about that time.—W. F. SHEARER.

IOWA.—Moulton, Sept. 7.—One more baptism at West Grove, Ia., to night, making five added in all. Ladies' aid organized.—S. B. ROSS.

Nora Springs, Sept. 6.—Three additions here yesterday, four since last report; all excellent. Begin our third year here Sept. 15.—G. A. HESS.

Avey, Sept. 8.—I filled my regular appointment at Hedrick, Keokuk Co., Ia. Large crowds at each service. Results, six by confession, five young ladies and one young man. All departments of church work doing fine.—A. PIERSON.

Sac City, Sept. 7.—The work here is starting off nicely with increasing attendance at all services. We have divided the work, and a country mission which has been served in the afternoon by former pastors, has now, through the influence of the writer, employed a student from Des Moines for half time. Recently a joint reception was given at our church to the new Baptist pastor and myself, and our wives. By invitation, the president of the Baptist College presided, and the pastor of the M. E. Church gave the address of welcome. Although it was a stormy night there were about four hundred present. The outlook for the work here is very good.—E. N. TUCKER, pastor.

KANSAS.—Wichita, Sept. 7.—Two confessions at the South Lawrence Avenue church yesterday.—W. T. McLAIN.

Council Grove, Sept. 7.—One by baptism last Lord's day.—D. S. DOMER.

McPherson, Sept. 8.—I have resigned my work here and will close it next Sunday and take our departure next week for Waitsburg, Wash., having accepted a call from the church there. We have been in this field for nearly two years, and during that time there have been 110 additions to the church, and we find it no easy matter to leave our many friends here, but we trust another more capable will take up the work where we are laying it down in our weakness, and carry it on to greater victories. The church is in good condition for my successor, and he will not find the members so wedded to their former pastor that they cannot work with him, but our friends here are many and true. Five of the best years of my life have been spent in Kansas, and I am glad to have had some small part in advancing the cause we love in this favored state. But in my new home I will need the dear old CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST more than ever, so send the best paper on earth to me at Waitsburg, Wash., instead of McPherson, Kan.—W. T. ADAMS.

KENTUCKY.—Walton, Sept. 7.—Bro. D. T. Buck, of New Liberty, Ky., closed a few days ago a fine meeting at Republican church, Kentucky. The preaching was strong, convincing and helpful, especially were the morning services helpful; and invigorating. The results were 31 additions; 26 baptisms, five from the Methodists, who had previous been baptized. All church work prosperous.—J. W. ROGERS.

Elizabethtown, Sept. 6.—The regular minister, C. R. Vawter, assisted by J. M. Vawter, of Jeffersonville, Ind., has just closed a two weeks' meeting at Elizabethtown, Ky., with nine additions. The meeting was a success in every way.—O. P. VAWTER.

MISSOURI.—Stanberry, Sept. 7.—We had ten additions here yesterday. This is the second time we have had ten additions in one day at regular services since Feb. 1. We have had in all 39 additions since I came here in February, about 20 of which have not been reported. We begin a meeting here with home forces, Sept. 12.—J. E. DAVIS.

Tipton, Sept. 7.—Am assisting H. C. Patterson in his fourth meeting here. Great interest; many turned away for want of room. The churches of the town are working with us. We have a large chorus, also a children's chorus. I am arranging for fall work. Churches and Evangelists may address me here.—C. M. HUGHES, Singing Evangelist.

Oseola, Sept. 5.—The Seymour, Mo., meeting closed with 51 additions. Bro. R. O. Rogers, of Paragould, Ark., is a faithful minister of the Word. He was engaged to hold another tent meeting at Seymour in August, 1904. The church at that place is improving their place of worship at an expense of $600.—D. B. WARREN.

Elvins, Sept. 12.—Eight additions last Sun-

NO ALCOHOL.

A United States District Marshall in Kansas recently raised a storm of both applause and abuse about his head by confiscating a number of dozen bottles of well-known proprietary medicines from the shelves of the leading drug store of the town on the plea that they were simply alcohol under other names and that the druggist, according to law, had authority to sell whiskey only upon a prescription from a regular practicing physician.

There is no question but what the Marshall was correct regarding the whiskey being sold as medicine, as it is a fact now well-known to the reading public that over 90 per cent of the advertised remedies contain alcohol as one of their constituent parts and in a number of notable cases as THE PRINCIPAL INGREDIENT, and that many a poor sufferer has gained his first taste of, first desire for whiskey, cocaine, opium, morphine, etc., from just such a source.

The Theo. Noel Company, whose announcements regarding Vitæ-Ore appear in these columns from time to time, desires to offer as a strong argument in favor of the use of this natural remedy the plainly established fact that it CONTAINS NO ALCOHOL.

Vitæ-Ore, as prepared for market, is in the dry form, the original ore, the purchaser mixes it with water, makes his own elixir from the Ore, and knows when he is drinking it that it is absolutely free from alcohol as well as the narcotic drugs which are used so extensively in the manufacture of many "patent medicines," and knows that he can safely give it to his young sons or daughters without running the risk of giving them a pernicious appetite which might bow his gray hairs in sorrow for the deed.

Read the Vitæ-Ore offer in this issue.

dry, six of them men, two by baptism. The congregation is now in its new church and is in a prosperous and active condition.—J. G. M. LUTTENBERGER, pastor.

Dexter Christian College.—Three additions to church Sunday, Sept. 6.—ALBERT BUXTON.

Kirkville, Sept. 8.—We had 10 additions to the church here last Sunday.—H. A. NORTH-CUTT.

Platte City, Sept. 7.—Two added at regular services last night, one by letter. $50 for church extension; all apportionments raised. O. E. Hamilton and singer will hold us a meeting in October. We will have a good delegation at Columbia.—LOUIS S. CUPP.

Schell City.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting at Rinehart, Vernon County, with 29 additions, 23 conversions.—H. R. PRICE.

Dearborn, Sept. 9.—I baptized 3 young men and received 1 lady by letter at Pleasant Grove, Sunday, Sept. 6.—R. E. CALLITHAN.

Olean, Sept. 12.—Three weeks' meeting closed last night. 31 additions, of whom 14 were men and 3 were boys. 26 were adults. 15 by letter and statement, 2 reclaimed, 1 from Baptists, 1 from M. E., 14 by primary obedience. I begin meeting at Lawson, Missouri, with my father on Sunday, the 13th.—HAROLD E. MONSER.

Bowling Green, Sept. 10.—I closed my labors for Mount Zion Church, Marion County, last Lord's day. Had fine audience; one confessed Christ and I baptized her that afternoon. Now one-half of my time is open to hold meetings or take work elsewhere. I am pleased with THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.—E. J. LAMPTON.

Norborne, Sept. 9.—County Evangelist, J. B.

Lockhart, held a two weeks' meeting for me at Pleasant Hill, beginning fourth Lord's day in August: 14 additions, 1 from Baptists, 5 by statement, 8 by confession. Good crowds, splendid interest and the true gospel preached with zeal and earnestness.—C. C. TAYLOR, pastor.

Pickering, Sept. 11.—The writer visited the church at Sheridan, Wyoming, the fifth Lord's day in August and preached to appreciative audiences in the Y. M. C. A. hall. There were five additions to the church: 1 by letter, 1 by statement, 2 reclaimed from the Methodists, and 1 from the Presbyterians, who was dissatisfied with her baptism and desired to yield to a fuller obedience, by being buried with her Lord in baptism. The church at Sheridan is less than one year old, but now has a membership of 114; they have a new church building almost completed, and there seems to be bright prospects for the future of the congregation. The first Lord's day in September I tendered my resignation to the church at this place to accept a call from the church at Sheridan. I will begin work there about the middle of October, if the Lord wills. The church here is looking for a good man to take up the work about that time, and I trust they will succeed, as this is a splendid church, in perfect harmony, and they know just how to treat a preacher. I never worked for a church in which there was more of a brotherly spirit prevailing than has been manifest in this, and I trust that my successor will receive the same hearty support, as he goes in and out among this people.—F. E. BLANCHARD.

Hinton, Sept. 5.—I closed a 16 days' meeting last Tuesday night at Old Pertle Church, eight miles west of Sturgeon, in Boone County, with 61 additions; 46 confessions, 2 from Baptists and 13 by statement. Pertle is one of the pioneer churches of Missouri. Our meeting broke all former records. There were 13 adult confessions at one service, seven of whom were heads of families. Of the 61, the youngest was 15 years and the oldest 63. Among the number was the commissioner of public education of Boone County. I have been laboring with this congregation for four years and was unassisted in this meeting. Pastor and people are happy. "Thanks be to God for His unspeakable gift."—B. F. GOSLIN.

Butler, Sept. 12.—Eight added since last report. Five were added during a revival meeting at Elizabeth Chapel. One conversion at Butler from the Catholics.—E. H. WILLIAMSON, pastor.

Carrollton, Sept. 8.—At our last regular appointment with Oakland one united by letter. At Marceline one by relation. At Rothville one by relation and one by baptism. At Cyclone, near Lee's Summit, in a ten days' meeting 16 by baptism. We are now in a meeting with Salem, near Moberly. We expect a successful meeting; will report at the conclusion.—J. J. LIMERICK.

Weaubleau, Sept. 6.—We closed our meeting here last night with a splendid interest. There were 4 added the last night, 2 by confession and 2 by statement. Had to close to help Bro. R. B. Havener at Prairie Valley. There were 18 accessions in all, 13 confessions and 1 from the New Lights and 4 by statement. It was a glorious meeting for us here. The membership has nearly been doubled since I came here.—S. E. HENDRICKSON.

NEBRASKA.—Edgar, Sept. 7.—Two more additions here. The church has called me for all the time instead of half time for another year. The work moves along nicely.—E. W. YOCUM.

Chester, Sept. 11.—Our revival meeting closed at Blue Springs with three baptisms and a general good feeling with the members. We had sectarianism of the worst sort, rain, storms and a gambling fair to battle against Bro. W. R. Smith led the song services and his solos delighted all.—D. G. WAGNER.

Verdon, Sept. 9.—We are at home in the beautiful new parsonage at Verdon. We divide our time with Salem and Verdon. One confession Sept. 6, at Salem. The writer delivered an address at old settlers' picnic, at Dawson, Aug. 26. Also addressed the picnic of the fraternal societies, Fall City, Neb., Sept. 3.—W. A. MORRISON.

OHIO.—Caldwell, Sept. 9.—State Evangelist Ragan just closed a three weeks' meeting in Caldwell, the county seat of Noble Co., resulting in the resurrection and reorganization of the church and the settling of a pastor. There were seven additions, one of whom is a preacher. The church will probably build a meeting house during the coming year.

OKLAHOMA.—Geary, Sept. 5.—During August Mrs. Smedley and myself planted a church in Taloya, the county seat of Dewy

Co., O. T., and organized an aid society. Planted a church near Rhea, Dewy Co., and organized an aid society. At both points arranged to build. Preached 31 times, Mrs. Smedley leading music with Bilhorn organ. Forty-six additions, six immersions.—R. S. SMEDLEY, Western Evangelist.

OREGON.—La Grande, Sept. 8.—Our Bible school has kept up better than during any previous summer of my work in La Grande. Audiences for preaching have been very small. A brother and sister united by letter Aug. 30, and two young men were baptized during the latter part of the month.—O. H. KING.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Claysville, Sept. 7.—Four confessions during last week's special meeting. Meeting will be continued. The Executive Committee of the C. W. B. M. has endorsed my illustrated lecture, "The Work and Workers of the C. W. B. M.," and empowered me to collect money in the interest of the Woman's Board. Recently gave six lectures in Indiana, including Bethany and Maxinkukee assemblies and South Bend Christian Church.—C. C. REDGRAVE.

TEXAS.—Graford, Sept. 12.—I have just closed a meeting of eleven days continuance at Graford, in Palo Pinto county, resulting in 70 additions, 50 of which were by baptism, 14 by relation and reclamation and 6 from other sources. Of the number of additions fully 50 of them were men, heads of families, and owners of the farms and ranches in the surrounding country. The cause at Graford is now a fixture, and a church, Sunday-school and Endeavor Society have been organized. A church house will be built soon. Arrangements have already been made to have regular preaching, and thus keep alive the interest kindled. Texas has many more such places, only awaiting the evangelist to come and do the sowing and the reaping.—B. B. SANDERS.

Cisco, Sept. 8.—Six additions since last report.—R. E. MCKNIGHT.

Daphne, Sept. 3.—We have had a glorious meeting in Winfield, Texas. Bro. Robert D. Smith did the preaching; had 67 additions—37 baptisms, 13 from the Baptists, 8 from Methodists and 3 from Presbyterians.—J. D. HENSELEY.

Cameron, Sept. 4.—I am home again after 18 days in the field, during which time I held one meeting of 10 days, and one from one Sunday to the other; total additions in the two meetings, 72—48 baptisms; some from Methodists and some from Baptists, and a few by letter and restoration. The first meeting was at Hicks, where we left a church of some 200 members, a live, aggressive force in the community. Many came for fifteen and twenty miles around, and came through the meeting. My next meeting was at Yarellton, in this county; here we only had a church building that needed repairs and a few discouraged Disciples, it having been over two years since a Christian preacher had preached there, and he had left things in a bad shape. I found the Baptists were about the only ones who amounted to anything. The Holiness brethren had started just before I came, and when I reached there there was war in the camp between those two bodies. So they both came and helped us. We had large crowds and deep interest; the additions were some of the most substantial men of the community. I revived the church, raised money for a pastor and secured one. Now feel there is a bright outlook for the Yarellton church.—JAS. A. CHALLENGER.

THE JEW: His Past, Present and Future.

Shall He Be Shot or Exiled?

By M. E.
HARLAN

The Kishineff horror has added another page, foully stained, to the annals of history. Men were tortured beyond recognition; mothers, wives and daughters were subjected to unnamable crimes against their persons. And all this for the grave crime of being Jews, whose eventful journey has been a trail of blood across the map of history. Their endless martyrdom tells the story of the most undaunted and persistent faith known to man. In the low plains of human suffering and persecution they have the highest pyramids, and they stretch back to the time when history was but a youth. The phoenix of art will yet place upon the canvas his richest contribution, and his brightest colors will tell of the colossal idealism of the Jew. There are those who hear in the recent wail from Russia the mocking echo of that taunting invocation of the Jews to Pilate nearly 2,000 years ago, when they said on the crucifixion morn, "His blood be upon us and our children." To them that old cry has been the nemesis of history that lurks at every banquet table to haunt them with memory and tears, and blanches their cheeks at every strange tumult in the street, for fear it may be a frenzied mob that can only be satisfied when it has wiped the dew of death from the brow of this outlawed race. "Though I make a full end of all nations, yet will I not make a full end of thee," is God's armor of prophecy with which he defies the sword of extermination. Their persistent continuance is the miracle of miracles.

And who are the Jews whom Russia in particular and the world in general would execute or export? What marvel of marvels! There are people now living who can snatch from their own stream of uninterrupted speech the commerce of thought between God and man since the days of the patriarchs. What an opportunity for God to embalm his thoughts! But whence, indeed, is this "aqua vitae" that flows on forever? Above the roar of the relentless storms of punishment and persecution his voice is heard: "I am Israel—God with us. Since Abraham was, I am." For the time being his authority as a nation ended at the destruction of Jerusalem under Titus; but not his history. While every man's hand is against him, yet at no time in his eventful history were they as numerous as at the present. In their palmiest days in ancient times, they did not exceed 4,000,000, while to-day they number 12,000,000. In the past forty years they have increased in the United States about 900,000, and according to some authorities, now number 1,043,000. In them prophecy and history meet as familiar friends. Like their rejected Lord, they can say, since "Abraham was, I am." Other nations may grow weary toiling up the highway of time and leave naught but mounds and marble slabs to tell of those that were, but are no more. All except the Jew are mortal. All others pass, but the Jew abides. He is his own living, breathing, moving monument, and since his birth in the dim distant past, his own hands have kept alive his endless procession of camp fires in his persistent march of mystery in the purpose of God.

As a factor, then, in financial, industrial, commercial, economic and religious problems, the Jew must be reckoned with, for he is here to stay. They are well-known in all schools of our modern life except the schools of pauperism and crime. In all our almshouses there are said to be but 17 Jews. Our criminal records rarely have upon them the name of a Jew. General Ben Butler said he had been familiar with the criminal courts of Massachusetts and other states for forty years, and in all that time he had never had a Hebrew client as a criminal, nor had he ever seen one in the prisoner's box as a criminal. But they do have a good record in our schools. In Hungary, while the Jews are but 5 per cent of the population, they furnish 25 per cent of the high school pupils and 27 per cent of her university men. So says the Jewish Gazette. East Side New York is crowded with them, and in Manhattan alone there are 360,000, mostly Russian and Polish Jews. It is reported that through the Baron Hirsch fund they have 600 farms in New England and several settlements in New Jersey. And still they come. On May 19, 1903, there were 1,500 in one day landed in the port of New York, and it was said that 15,000 more were on their way. Dr. Singer, one of the leaders interested in exporting Russian Jews, says that much of the $14,000,000 they desire to secure will be used in exporting them to the United States via New Orleans, and settle them in the agricultural west. The papers report that he hopes to bring 100,000 a year. Something of this kind seems much more likely than the Zionist movement to settle them in Palestine. It is quite generally believed that Turkey will not be willing to sell her title to Palestine, though responsible men at the head of the Zionist movement hint that they have advance inside information that Turkey needs money and that Palestine is in the market when the money is in sight, and that $20,000,000 is the price. The Jewish Colonist Trust at Brook House in London has 130,000 share holders and $10,000,000 capital in hand. They tell us that there is now a threatened general shifting of nations on the chess board of history, and when readjustment comes, Turkey will be out of Palestine and the Jews will be in. So great was the interest that the Zionist movement was organized in 1897 at Basl. This was the first national meeting of the Jews for nearly 2,000 years.

But taking all this into account, it hardly seems that this is the likely solution. It would seem to be a physical impossibility. The hope of some is that Christ will yet come and sit on the throne of David in literal Jerusalem, forgetting that that throne is not in existence and that Christ as the descendant of David is now sitting on the throne, ruling spiritual Israel. To take all the Jews to Palestine, would make it a veritable "hole of Calcutta." Modern Palestine has about 5,600 square miles of territory, or is about the size of Wales, or about one-tenth the area of New York. To place all the Jews in Palestine would be like placing 120,000,000 in New York. Col. Claude R. Condor, R. E., LL. D., the best authority on Palestine, says under a high state of cultivation the country would support not more than 6,000,000. Providing that none but Jews were present, including rivers and lakes and mountains, each person would have but one-fourth of an acre on which to subsist. To care for them, God would again need to shower on them manna from heaven. If this is to be God's solution, I will be content; but it hardly seems the way. The real Zionism is not to be an emergence into a country, but a submergence into the stream of Christianity, and best of all, there will be no Jeremiah to wail over such a destiny. He must be a poor reader of prophecy and events who does not know that this is to be the end, not of Zionism alone, but of Zion.

In history, as well as in prophecy, the Jew has been a unique figure. He has suffered all kinds of injustice and persecution, and is still the "hiss and a by-word" among all peoples, as the prophets said he would be. These prophets, however, stated not a wish, but a fact. Bancroft and others speak of Maryland as the first of our colonies to grant religious freedom. But this so-called religious freedom did not include the Jews, for it was decreed that whoever did not believe in the trinity should suffer death. A Jew could not hold public office in Maryland till 1818. Exile or execution was the so-called law of liberty.

In Weinstock's book, "Jesus, the Jew," he quotes as follows from Martin Luther: "We should set fire to their synagogues and schools, and what cannot be burned should be covered with earth. We are to do this for the glory of God and Christianity. Burn all their houses and lodge them in stables like gypsies, in order that they may know that they are not lords in the land, but in captivity and misery. Burn all their prayer books and Talmuds and forbid their rabbis to teach under penalty of death. Deny Jews the right of protection on the highways, for they have no business with the land. Being neither lords nor farmers nor anything of the kind, they are to remain at home."

Do we need to wonder that the Jews did not take to such a religion, and that Heine said: "Judaism is not a religion—it is a misfortune!" Under favorable conditions the Jew is naturally a hopeful listener. He already believed in the Old Testament and was ready to come as far as the cross. In the spirit of Christ we are to meet him here and lead him on. Results show this to be a hopeful task. There are said to be not more than 250 missionaries among the whole Jewish world, and yet Dr. Delitzsch says there are 100,000 converts to Christianity. Some put the number higher. From 1698 to 1903 there were 2,158 Jewish converts to Christianity in Hungary alone. From 1800 to 1899 the Missionary Review says there were 224,000 Jewish baptisms. Yet the New Testament was not put into the Hebrew tongue till 1817, nor in the Yiddish till 1821. Seeing how much professed Christians have mistreated the Jews, the great wonder is that so many have accepted the Christian religion, especially when his followers represent him so poorly.

During the middle ages, Jews were burned for violating a tradition of the Roman Catholic church. The Catholics teach that the sacramental wafer is the very body of Jesus. There was no trouble to find men who hated the Jews sufficiently to swear that they saw them puncture this wafer with their knives, and the charge was made, therefore, that the Jews had "crucified afresh" the Lord, for had they not pierced his very body? This persecution was but little worse, however, than that seen in the recent uprising in Russia, where an immoral and illiterate and bigoted priesthood stirred into maniacal madness their superstitious and cruel followers by telling them that the Jews used the blood of Christians to celebrate their Passover at Easter. They are charged with using this blood ritualistically in preparing their unleavened bread. If a Christian boy or girl disappears in Russia at the time of the Jewish Passover, the police begin their malicious search for damaging testimony against the Jews, and if that body is found in lake or stream or forest, the people begin their clamor for the blood of the schachter or Jewish butcher. Cases have been known where murderers dragged the bodies of their victims through the alleys of the Jewish quarters, so easy was it to escape punishment by diverting attention to the hated Hebrews. Heine, in his "Rabbi of Bacharach," represents strangers introducing the bloody corpse of a murdered child into the house of a rabbi to incite the rabble against him and his people, to give excuse for despoiling them. It was this same fiendish desire for Hebrew blood, and this same pretext that led to the recent outrages at Kishineff. "Who, if not the Jews, could have needed the death of this girl?" asked a witness at the trial at Kontais in 1880. By just such testimony and limping logic has many an Israelite been slain by so-called Christians. Do we need to wonder why the Jews have been slow in accepting such a religion?

He is a dolt or drone who is not interested in the processes of history in the world's evolutionary progress. Most of the unjust persecution against the Jews can be traced to the untruthful charge that he alone was responsible for the death of Christ, forgetting that Jews also were Christ's first converts and warmest friends, and that they, too, were the first commissioned men to preach the gospel. As a whole, the Jews were no more responsible for the death of Christ than were the people of Delaware for the recent roasting alive of the negro ravisher. It was the worthless rabble of Delaware, as well as the rabble of Jerusalem, led on by a few ruffian bigots, upon whom the guilt rests. It was not a Jewish, but a Gentile cross upon which Jesus was crucified, and Gentiles sanctioned the verdict of the mad mob. At any rate, the Jews now are not responsible for the misdeeds of their unknown ancestors so long ago. For centuries the only view the Jews had of Christ's religion was through the sin-darkened perspective of Gentile converts from Italy and Spain, who, in the name of Christ, burned and tortured them for a crime committed by their fathers, for whom they were no more responsible than are we. When it once dawns upon us how in his name they have been persecuted and punished, haunted and hunted, scattered and slain, we will have more patience and pity for this despised people who have been waiting for centuries for the "time of the Gentiles to be fulfilled."

As the cloud defying lightning is the resultant of a succession of hidden processes, including world warrings from afar, and flaming fires and surging tides, so we may trace some of the processes of environment that entered into the lives of Jesus and the apostles. Christ was a Jew, and this alone held him by the ties of nature to a peerless though despised people. The whole nation was imbued with a patriotic spirit that no slavery could subjugate nor time destroy. In their veins flowed the blood of proud shepherd kings who had held converse with Jehovah and who acknowledged no sovereign but God. Such a people may be physically coerced, but not enslaved. Till they acknowledge the superiority of their captors they are not slaves. Temporarily the Egyptians could force the Jews to "make bricks without straw," but they could not subdue their spirit nor compel them to acknowledge their inferiority.

They were unique in their religion. Though all about them had their many gods, the Jews had one God and he was Jehovah. Their throne might be razed to the ground, but from the very ashes of their national despoilment, their altars and temples would rise sphinx-like, and about these they would gather with their sacrificial fires and sing their unending song of victory. In the dome of the Congressional Library at Washington, the master artist has placed in glowing colors the emblem of each nation's characteristic contribution to the progress of the world. Egypt is represented by "written records," Greece by "philosophy," Rome by "administration," Germany by "printing," but Judea by "religion;" and the striking emblem is the scroll and the censor in the hands of her consecrated priesthood. Through long years of yearning for the coming Christ, in the absence of the temple, they gathered about the ark and through the sacred souvenirs kept therein, they found their way to memory and devotion. It was the duty of the priests to guard these holy records that mutely told of God's long and tender dealings with their fathers.

As long as they were thus led, they never lost. The poetry of Greece and Rome and India and all other peoples told in a strange, sad way of a "golden age" forever vanished. Not so the Jew. Wherever rose a man whose heart flamed with a holy passion, and upon whose lips had been lain a coal from the altar of God, he sang of the "golden age" yet to be and chorused his unending song. Under what lasting obligation he has placed the world for this song of hope to keep alive the heart! Shall we show our appreciation now by either executing or exiling his descendants? Who will dare say how much these processes of lofty thought, persistent purpose and undying hope contributed to the character of the founder of our glorious religion? The thrilling notes of the Bethlehem angels' song were but the fitting climax of a grand oratorio that Israel had been composing for 4,000 years before the angels sang it.

"What if Christ should come to Russia" today? In view of what has recently transpired under the dominion of the state church of Russia, is not that a fitting question? The Russian consul in the port of New York ascertains the nationality or religious belief of each applicant for a passport to his country. If a man is of the Jewish persuasion, even though he is an honorable citizen of the United States and holds a certificate of citizenship from our government, he is rejected. This is not only an insult to the Jew, but disrespect to our government. Tammanyites and thugs and libertines and negroes and Chinamen and grafters can go, but O. S. Straus and Disraeli and Mendelssohn and the apostles and Christ would be refused admission by the state church of Russia because they are Jews. As these Christians (?) approached each martyr Jew, the martyr could say, "Your Christ is the same as my devil, for he permits you to do what my devil commends in me." This may explain these fiendish atrocities, for Christ has been driven out because of prejudice against his nation. Madam Novikeff said to a rabbi that the only way to settle the Jewish question in Russia was to have the Jews become Christians. "It seems to me there is another way," said he. "Let the Russians become Christians." In 1290, King Edward ordered all Jews out of England by the first of November. The penalty for refusing to go was hanging. All debts owing to Jews were to be canceled. The decree was absolute. None were exempt. Of the 15,000 expelled, many perished.

Why is it so hard for us to learn that at bottom, both Judaism and Christianity rest on the same fundamental idea—God? If the Jews were really loyal to their book (the Old Testament), and Christians were loyal to their book (the New Testament), race hatred and persecution would cease. Even as it is, the real godly Jew and the real Christly Gentile, looking deep into each other's eyes, recognize the likeness of their common Father-God, and long and hope for a universal brotherhood befitting their parentage, when from religions many there shall come religion. This religion will know neither Jew nor Greek, circumcision nor uncircumcision; for he shall "be head over all things to his Church." Christianity is but Judaism at her best, plus Christ. Better be a godly than a persecuting Gentile. Better be a Jew in the catacombs than a murderous pope on the throne. Not with the inquisition or the guillotine are we to convince the Jew that our religion is superior to his. To live the Christly life will convince both Jew and Gentile that all that was of real worth to character and religion found in Judaism has been the better supplied in Christ's new order of things. Judaism was Christianity in preparation. Paul says the Old Testament was our schoolmaster to lead us to Christ; but that "since faith has come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster," but under Christ. Many Christians have not yet learned this, and with much inconsistency appeal to the Jewish Testament as a book of authority for Christians. The Old Testament was a book of authority for Jews, not for Christians. If you desire to know how to become a Jew and keep the Jewish law, then read the Old Testament; but if you desire to know how to become a Christian, read the

New Testament, for it is an all-sufficient guide. The New Testament is not, as some suppose, a mere contradiction of the Old Testament, but a fulfillment of it. All laws and regulations of primal worth to character found in the Old Testament, are embodied in the New Testament. We can well afford to hope that both Jew and Gentile will soon recognize this truth. Till then justice has not been done to the Jew nor Gentile, for we have not done justice to Christ as the inspiration of the Christian Scriptures.

Many of the most beautiful stones in the temple of both church and state have been taken from far off Sinai, and to the Jew we are indebted for them. Shall we shoot him for this contribution? The idea of industrial and social justice is a Jewish idea. It is also found deep in the foundation of the New Testament church, and our social and industrial troubles will never be settled till settled by the principle of the Golden Rule. The English Magna Charta and our own declaration of liberties, of which we boast, as they are found imbedded in our temple of civilization, are stones quarried from Israel's Horeb, hoary with age. The mutterings of Sinai were the early prophecies of our constitutional rights and the immortal Declaration of Independence. Lincoln did not originate the emancipation declaration. He copied it from the law of Israel. He signed but one chapter of it that through an evolutionary process had been waiting for ages for some brain large enough to grasp it, and a hand true and fearless enough to sign it. Our own United States decalogue of liberty was taken from stone tablets deciphered at Sinai; and for all these we are indebted to the Jew. What if he did crucify Christ? This, of course, was his sin of sins. But was he not assisted and abetted by Gentiles who were as anxious to get rid of the "Reformer" as were the Jews? And are there not Gentiles now who, to use Paul's language, would "crucify the Son of God afresh" by denying his sovereign rights? What if the Jew has not and does not live up to his book? Are Gentiles free from the same charge? In the name of our Christ and his religion of justice, let us not forget justice to Christ's own nationality. If we "have not the spirit of Christ," we are none of his. To crucify his spirit likens both Jew and Gentile to the mob at Jerusalem.

We say the Jews are exclusive. Yes; but are they altogether to blame for this condition? Gentile exclusiveness has joined hands with rabbinical exclusiveness to keep the great mass of Jews to themselves. If they would break away from Talmudic imprisonment, the world does not lack Gentiles who would lead them back by compelling them to live within the imprisoning walls of the "ghetto." For long centuries after Christ came, both Moslem and Christian, in both eastern and western civilization, framed their laws as though they had in mind the determined purpose of excluding Israel. If so good a man as Martin Luther urged their isolation and exile, what kind of treatment might they expect from the rabble in those times? Since so-called Christian nations would make exceptions of them and prohibit them from owning property and becoming citizens, and force them into cruel exile, is it any wonder that they make their temples their only fatherland, and the decisions of the Kahal their code? What isolation their own ceremonial laws could not enforce upon them was forced upon them by state and national legislation. Between these upper and nether millstones there was little hope. The isolated Jew to-day is largely the product of fierce prejudice already too long endured, and which modern civilization should not tolerate. The Italian ghetto, the German judengasse and the American Jewish quarters have long contributed to their enforced isolation, and the chains are so fast forged that nothing but the real spirit of Christ can now break them. The isolation is so complete and of such long standing that with him it has become a tradition over which he dreams, and wonders if the end will ever come. In the howl of the madened mob, it is the nightmare that haunts him from the cradle to the grave and sends him a hopeless exile, knocking for admission at the doors of nations much younger than his own. His has become the unending tragedy that has left its trail of blood down the highway of history. It ill becomes Christianity to longer tolerate this carnival of blood. Before we too harshly criticize, let us see to it that we eliminate from the problem of isolation the element of our prejudices.

There are those to-day who look upon the Jews as worthy of toleration solely because they remain as a reminder of the awful fate of those who reject Christ. Others look upon them as a story continued on purpose that some day it will and trumpet tongue to prophecy. But generally they are regarded as bacterial pests menacing the commercial and moral health of the body politic. As such they have practically been quarantined in the ghetto to limit their circulation, and thus prohibit as much as possible the spread of the infection. There are hotels and watering places where a Jew, known as such, is shown no quarter, simply because he is a Jew. This spirit of exclusion has even entered our public schools. Last winter a principal of one of our high schools was heard to express his hate by saying he hoped a certain contestant for honors would not win the prize. Why? For the grave crime (?) of being a Jew, and for no other reason whatever. But the star of simple justice is rising, and under its benign influence the Jew—not because he is a Jew any more than the German because he is a German, but because he is a man—is to have an equal chance in the race of life. To-day our sons and daughters go to the marriage altar led by the strains of the world's favorite wedding march, or sit entranced by the musical art of a Rubinstein, or listen long to the words of wisdom as they fall from the lips of Beaconsfield, trained in statesmanship, and never falter because these inspirations come from Jewish authors. There never has been such commerce of thought in music and art between Jews and Gentiles as at the present time. Christ's followers enrich their services by quoting or chanting the psalms of David, and Jewish hearts echo with "Nearer, My God, to Thee," which is but the prelude to "Just as I Am, Without One Plea," and lose racial hatred in the melody of godly singers. Chant on, devout Christian! Strike the harp, devout Jew! till the psalms of David, the Jew, and the hymn of Charlotte Elliott, the Christian, will swell into a mighty anthem to quiver forever through the halls of inter-racial life and lift to our common Father both Jew and Gentile in one sweet and enduring fellowship. Then wherever man is found, there will be the holy land. Then will the waiting world know that not in ancient Zion alone is God to be worshiped, but in every land they that worship him will worship him in spirit and in truth, for the Father seeketh such under all skies to worship him. But in all this, gratitude is the highest note, and we will not be able to chorus it till we acknowledge our obligation to Israel and hear Christ say, "Salvation is of the Jews." In turn, the Jew must acknowledge the sovereignty of Jesus who has broken down the "middle wall of partition" that he might make into one fellowship "all nations of men that dwell upon the face of the earth." The mountain tops of future victory are fairly aglow with the touch of prophecy when "Israel shall turn to the Lord." What matters this long waiting then? What matters it in the world's march if Hamilcar, the Jew, is driven from Sicily? Hannibal, his son, will yet shake the empire of Rome, and the Jewish Cilician tent-maker, whose "bodily presence was weak," will lay the civilized world under tribute to the Jew, who, by declaring that the gospel of Christ was the "power of God to salvation," lifted the Roman empire off its hinges, and with the fiery eloquence of faith smote to dust Rome's temples and her shrines. Either Saxon or Roman that will not acknowledge his debt to the Jew should be compelled to make an unrewarded search for the Roman gods till, blinded by the dust of their defeat, he will clamor for the Light of lights, that he might know that Christ has come to stay. He should be led to decipher the lines so truthfully written in Latin across the base of Nero's statue in front of St. Peter's at Rome: "Conquered by the Lion of the tribe of Judah." The Galilean fisherman challenged the Latin

THE ROOT OF THE MATTER.

He Cured Himself of Serious Stomach Trouble, by Getting Down to First Principles.

A man of large affairs in one of our prominent eastern cities by too close attention to business, too little exercise and too many club dinners, finally began to pay nature's tax, levied in the form of chronic stomach trouble; the failure of his digestion brought about a nervous irritability making it impossible to apply himself to his daily business and finally deranging the kidneys and heart.

In his own words he says: "I consulted one physician after another and each one seemed to understand my case, but all the same they each failed to bring about the return of my former digestion, appetite and vigor. For two years I went from pillar to post, from one sanitarium to another, I gave up smoking, I quit coffee and even renounced my daily glass or two of beer, but without any marked improvement.

"Friends had often advised me to try a well-known proprietary medicine, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and I had often perused the newspaper advertisements of the remedy, but never took any stock in advertised medicines nor could believe a fifty-cent patent medicine would touch my case.

"To make a long story short I finally bought a couple of packages at the nearest drug store and took two or three tablets after each meal and occasionally a tablet between meals, when I felt any feeling of nausea or discomfort.

"I was surprised at the end of the first week to note a marked improvement in my appetite and general health and before the two packages were gone I was certain that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets was going to cure completely and they did not disappoint me. I can eat and sleep and enjoy my coffee and cigar and no one would suppose I had ever known the horrors of dyspepsia.

"Out of friendly curiosity I wrote to the proprietors of the remedy asking for information as to what the tablets contained and they replied that the principal ingredients were asceptic pepsin (government test), malt diastase and other natural digestives, which digest food regardless of the condition of the stomach."

The root of the matter is this, the digestive elements contained in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest the food, give the over-worked stomach a chance to recuperate and the nerves and whole system receive the nourishment which can only come from food; stimulants and nerve tonics never give real strength, they give a fictitious strength, invariably followed by reaction. Every drop of blood, every nerve and tissue is manufactured from our daily food, and if you can insure its prompt action and complete digestion by the regular use of so good and wholesome a remedy as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, you will have no need of nerve tonics and sanitariums.

Although Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have been in the market only a few years yet probably every druggist in the United States, Canada, and Great Britain now sells them and considers them the most popular and successful of any preparation for stomach trouble.

empire and robbed Rome of her power and prestige, and for the statues of her warriors and great men has had substituted the shrines of the living God and the statues of Christ and Paul and Peter, the Jews. The old heathen gods, Odin and Wodin and Thor, and other gods, have fled forever; but Jesus remains. Roman gods were for a single nation only; Jesus is for all. When once the Jew can be made to see the imperious perpetuity of the kingdom of Christ, his own rejected countryman, he will acknowledge his sovereignty, enter the kingdom and "go no more out forever." This is what the prophet meant when he said that "a nation should be born in a day." Till then let us for both Jew and Gentile who reject Christ, pray, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

If We Had But a Day.

We should fill the hours with the sweetest things,

If we had but a day!

We should drink alone at the purest springs

In our upward way;

We should love with a lifetime's love in an hour,

If the hours were few;

We should rest, not for dreams, but for fresher power

To be and to do!

We should guide our wayward or wearied wills

By the clearest light;

We should keep our eyes on the heavenly hills,

If they lay in sight;

We should trample the pride and discontent

Beneath our feet;

We should take whatever the good God sent

With a trust complete!

We should waste no moments in weak regret,

If the day were but one;

If what we remember and what we forget

Went out with the sun;

We should be from our clamorous selves set free,

To work or to pray,

And be what the Father would have us be,

If we had but a day!

Davy's Weather Wishes.

"Horrid weather!" grumbled Jacky Junior. "Perfectly dismal!" mourned Beatrix, disconsolately. For, of course, the much-looked-forward-to day at Lowell Lake was out of the question, as the rain was coming down in torrents, and the draining ditches each side of the road were overflowing, till from bank to bank, along the wood road, there was a rushing, roaring stream of mud and water.

And to-morrow was the day of the picnic! Three carriage loads of young folks, Jacky, Beatrix, and the Farnham cousins, were to drive to the beautiful little lake seven miles away, through the deep fir woods, and spend the day fishing, boating, and merry-making generally.

Cousin Jack was to have charge of them, and any one who knew Cousin Jack knew that this meant a day of delight for every youngster in the party.

Even if the rain stopped, the sun came out, and the next day were clear and shining, still the picnic would be impossible, as the roads would not dry in so short a time.

Cousin Jack, coming into the library where the children were gathered, smiled sympathetically into the dismal faces turned toward him.

"It is rather hard," he acknowledged, "but aren't you glad you're not responsible for the weather? Think how hard it would be to suit several million people; all wanting different samples of weather, perhaps!"

"I'd like to have the chance just once, anyway."

"Did you ever hear the story of one man who tried it?" asked Jack.

In a second the group of cousins had settled themselves around Cousin Jack, ready for one of his stories—for Jack knew just how to tell good ones, they all knew very well.

"He was a French-Canadian, named Davy," began Jack, "and he lived at St. Roch, so the story goes. It was a jolly old priest who told it to me, that winter I was with the lumbering party in Canada.

"Davy, they say, was plump and merry, and always singing, for the world went well with him.

"One bright, cold morning, spruced up in his Sunday best, he started off with his sacks in his sleigh to take the yearly tithes to the priest.

"It was a perfect day, and the deep Canadian woods were as beautiful with their robes of snow as in the green summer. And Davy, enjoying it all, puffed his pipe, or sang merrily as he jingled along his spowgy way.

"It was several miles to the village where the priest lived, and the road led through a deep forest. Suddenly, in the deepest part of the woods, Davy saw a stranger standing in the way, and stopped his horse at once, for this was an unusual sight. The road was a lonely, seldom traveled one, and the stranger was like no one whom Davy had ever seen before.

"He was tall and fair, with beautiful, searching blue eyes, long hair flowing over his shoulders, and a bearing grave, dignified, yet of wondrous kindness. His flowing blue robe, belted at the waist, was not meant for rough, Canadian woods, and he wore no cap or coat. He had not been traveling, Davy saw; he had appeared there suddenly and mysteriously, and Davy gazed at him with awe and wonder.

"'Peace be with you,' was the stranger's salutation, grave and sweet.

"'The same to you,' stammered Davy, wondering, but reverent.

"'Where are you going?' asked the stranger.

"'To the priest, to carry my tithe,' answered Davy.

"'You had a good harvest,' said the stranger, kindly, 'if this load represents one bushel in every twenty-six.' (That was the Canadian farmer's tithe for the priest.)

"'Oh, it's pretty good this year,' asserted Davy, 'but, if I could only have made the weather—ah, sir, you would have seen a harvest.'

"'Be it so,' said the stranger, gravely, gently. Hereafter you shall have such weather as you wish.' And he was gone. Davy looked around in wonder and awe, but saw no trace of him. And he went on his way, pondering on what his angel visitor had told him.

"A year rolled away, and again Davy went through the forest to carry his tithe to the village priest. But there were no sacks with horse and sleigh this time. Davy took his offering in a handkerchief! He sang no more, and he was no longer plump and merry.

"Suddenly, in the depth of the forest, at the same spot as before, appeared his angel of a year ago.

"Again he raised his hand in blessing, 'Peace be with you.'

"'I thank you,' Davy answered; 'I need it, for I'm at odds with all my neighbors, and even my own family have gone against me. I don't want any more weather-wishing power, sir, please, for they all say I'm a sorcerer, because every time I wish for a certain kind of weather, we're sure to have it. But I don't know how to wish right; the sun's been hot at the wrong time, and the rain's been cold at the wrong time, and we've had droughts and freshets, and the seeds have been washed out of the ground, the crops have dried, and withered, or rotted, or been blown down by the winds, and the stock won't feed as they should. So my weather wishes are bad for all.'

"The stranger smiled. 'So you know, at last, that God knows best what is for his children's good? It shall be as you wish. Your wishing power is gone. Next year your tithes will fill your sleigh again.'

"The angel was gone. So was Davy's wishing power. And at that his heart grew lighter. He was happy again.

"And now, in that part of Canada, when rain, or snow, or sunshine come, the peasants say reverently, 'God knows best.'"—Jean E. Hanson, in Christian Work.

The Six Judges.

In the folk-lore of Hindustan is a queer story of a Brahmin (a high-class Hindu), a Tiger and six unusual "judges."

Perhaps our readers may find some lessons in it worth remembering.

Once upon a time a Brahmin who was walking along the road came upon an iron cage, in which a great Tiger had been shut up by the villagers who caught him.

As the Brahmin passed by, the Tiger called out and said to him: "Brother Brahmin, Brother Brahmin, have pity on me and let me out of this cage for one minute only to drink a little water, for I am dying of thirst."

The Brahmin answered: "No, I will not; for if I let you out of the cage you will eat me."

"Oh, father of mercy!" answered the Tiger, "in truth I will not, I will never be so ungrateful; only let me out that I may drink some water and return."

Then the Brahmin took pity on him and opened the cage door, but no sooner had he done so than the Tiger, jumping out, said: "Now, I will eat you first and drink the water afterward." But the Brahmin said:

"Only do not kill me hastily. Let us ask the opinion of six, and if all of them say it is just and fair that you should put me to death, then I am willing to die."

"Very well," answered the Tiger, "it shall be as you say; we will first ask the opinion of six."

So the Brahmin and the Tiger walked on till they came to a Banyan tree, and the Brahmin said to it: "Banyan tree, Banyan tree, hear and give judgment."

"On what must I give judgment?" asked the Banyan tree.

"This Tiger," said the Brahmin, "begged me to let him out of the cage to drink a little water, and he promised not to hurt me if I did so, but now that I have let him out, he wishes to eat me. Is it just that he should do so or not?"

The Banyan tree answered: "Men often come and take shelter in the cool shade under my boughs from the scorching rays of the sun, but when they have rested, they cut and break my pretty branches, and wantonly scatter my leaves. Let the Tiger eat the man, for men are an ungrateful race!"

At these words the Tiger would have instantly killed the Brahmin, but the Brahmin said: "Tiger, Tiger, you must not kill me yet, for you promised that we should first hear the judgment of six."

"Very well," said the Tiger, and they went on their way.

After a little while they met a camel.

"Sir Camel, Sir Camel!" cried the Brahmin, "hear and give judgment." And the Brahmin related to him how the Tiger had begged him to open the cage door and promised not to eat him if he did so, and how he afterward determined to break his word, and asked if that were just or not.

The camel replied: "When I was young and strong and could do much work my master took care of me and gave me good food, but now I am old and have lost all my strength in his service, he overloads me and starves me and beats me without mercy. Let

By M. E. HARLAN, A. B., LL. D.

This book is the result of the author's sending out a series of questions to more than 2,000 young people in all parts of the United States and other parts of the world. The questions touch the social, sentimental, moral, commercial, religious and domestic interests of young people and the book is a reflection not only of what the author thinks, but of what the young people themselves think on the questions at issue. From the many answers, the author selects a few of the most pointed, together with the names of some of those interviewed, when permission was given to use names. These, together with the deductions of the author, make a helpful and inspiring book. It is particularly suitable as a present for young people. It is just such a book as a mother would like to have read by her son or daughter. Prof. Hill M. Bell, Dean of the College of Liberal Arts of Drake University, writes the introduction. The four subjects treated are: "The Ideal Young Woman from the Young Man's View Point;" "The Ideal Young Man from the Young Woman's View Point;" "The Ideal Home;" and "The Ideal Church."

the Tiger eat the man, for men are an unjust and cruel race!"

The Tiger would have killed the Brahmin, but the latter said: "Stop, Tiger, for we must hear the judgment of six."

So they both went together on their way. At a little distance they found a Bullock lying by the roadside. The Brahmin said: "Brother Bullock, Brother Bullock, hear and give judgment."

"On what must I give judgment?"

Then the Brahmin said: "I found this Tiger in a cage, and he prayed me to open the door and let him out to drink a little water, and promised not to kill me if I did so; but when I let him out he resolved to put me to death. Is it fair he should do so or not?"

The Bullock said: "When I was able to work, my master fed me well and tended to me carefully, and now that I am old, he has forgotten all that I did for him and left me by the roadside to die. Let the Tiger eat the man, for men have no pity!"

Three out of six had given judgment against the Brahmin, but still he did not lose all hope, and determined to ask the other three.

They next met an Eagle flying through the air, to whom the Brahmin cried:

"Oh, Eagle, great Eagle, hear and give judgment!"

The Brahmin stated the case to the Eagle, but the Eagle answered: "Whenever men see me, they try to shoot me; they climb the rocks and steal my little ones. Let the Tiger eat the man, for men are the persecutors of the earth!"

Then the Tiger began to roar, and said: "The judgment of all is against you, O Brahmin!" But the Brahmin answered, "Stay yet a little longer, for two others must be asked."

After this they met an Alligator, and the Brahmin related the matter to him, hoping for a favorable verdict. But the Alligator said: "Whenever I put my nose out of the water men torment me and try to kill me. Let the Tiger eat the man, for as long as men live we shall have no rest."

The Brahmin gave himself up as lost, but again he prayed the Tiger to have patience and let him ask the opinion of the sixth judge. Now, the sixth was a Jackal. The Brahmin told his story, and said to him:

"Jackal, Jackal, say what is your judgment?"

The Jackal answered: "It is impossible for me to decide who is right and who is wrong unless I see the exact position in which you were when the dispute began. Show me the place."

So the Brahmin and the Tiger hastened to the place where they had first met, and the Jackal went with them. When they got there the Jackal said: "Now, Brahmin, show me exactly the place where you stood."

"Here," said the Brahmin, standing by the iron cage.

"Exactly here, was it?"

"Exactly here," said the Brahmin.

"Where was the Tiger then?" asked the Jackal.

"In the cage," answered the Tiger.

"How do you mean?" said the Jackal; "how were you within the cage? Which way were you looking?"

"Why, I stood so," said the Tiger, jumping into the cage, "and my head was on one side."

"Very good," said the Jackal; "but I can not understand without knowing the whole matter exactly. Was the cage open or shut?"

"Shut and bolted," said the Brahmin.

"Then shut and bolt it," said the Jackal.

When the Brahmin had done this the Jackal said: "Oh, you wicked and ungrateful Tiger! When the good Brahmin opened the cage door is it to eat him the only return you would make? Stay there, then, for the rest of your days, for no one will ever let you out again. Proceed on your journey, friend Brahmin. Your road lies that way and mine this."

So saying, the Jackal ran off in one direction and the Brahmin went rejoicing on his way in the other.—Standard and Times.

A Heart-to-Heart Talk.

The bartenders of Jersey city are discussing a proposition to form a temperance society. Well, why not? Sensible, isn't it?

Many bartenders are total abstainers. Lay it down bluntly that the bartender who drinks every time his customer invites him will not hold his job very long.

Notice two facts:

1. The temperance question, so far as the business world is concerned, is in process of natural solution. Railroads, corporations, business men have put their ban on the drink habit. Even the saloon keeper demands a sober man behind the counter.

2. The bartender knows the effect of drink better than any other man. The object lessons are before him constantly. He needs no temperance lectures. He sees the outcome.

Now, Mr. Workingman:

The liquor dealer openly confesses that the wage earners are the main support of his business. And—

If his bartender cannot afford to drink, can you afford it?

The bartender is also a wage earner. He gets wages, too. But he does not patronize the bar. He patronizes the butcher and baker. He buys thick steak for his family. There's soup and celery and a course dinner. His wife wears good clothes. His boy wears white collars to school, and his daughter consults the dress maker and the milliner.

Are you one of his daily customers?

How about your family? How long since your wife had a new dress? Do your children appear as well as the bartender's? Or do you buy liver when the bartender gets steak?

You love your wife and children as well as the bartender loves his. Doesn't it hurt you in a tender place when at school and on the street your children shrink from comparison with the bartender's well-groomed children? Or your wife with his? Think over it. Put it to yourself.

"If the bartenders are going to form a temperance society, is it not about time that I should organize one?"

"Get Down and Help Him."

We have lately been doing a blessed work among the cabmen of Manchester, many of whom have signed the pledge. I heard the other night that one of them had broken his pledge, and I went to the cab rooms to look after him. I saw him there, but he tried to avoid me; he was ashamed to face me. I followed him up, and at he last presented himself before me wearing a most dejected look. I said to him:

"When you are driving your cab and your horse falls down, what do you do?"

"I jumps off the box and tries to help him up again."

"That is it, my friend," I replied. "I heard you had fallen, and so I got off the box to help you up. Will you get up? There is my hand." He caught hold of it with a grip like a vice, and said:

"I will, sir, before God, and under his own blue heavens, I promise you

I will not touch a drop of strong drink again, and you will never have to regret the trouble you have taken with me." Oh, Christian friend, there are many poor drunkards who have fallen down. Will you not get off the box, and help them up?—Charles Garrett.

Books on "Woman."

Rossiter Johnson, in the Lamp, recently listed the best books on the subject of "Woman" as follows: Margaret Fuller's "Woman in the Nineteenth Century;" Gail Hamilton's "Woman's Worth and Worthlessness;" Mrs. Johnson's "Woman and the Republic;" "The Emancipation of Women," by Adele Grepaz, written originally in German, of which an English translation has appeared in London: "The History of Woman, and Her Connection with Religion, Civilization and Domestic Matters, from the Earliest Period," by S. W. Fullom, published in London; Miss Kavanagh's "Woman in France During the Eighteenth Century," Georgiana Hill's "Woman in English Life, from Mediaeval to Modern Times."

No Catch.

One of the best fish stories is told of a young man who applied for work to a well known business man.

"So you want a situation?" said the business man.

"Yes, sir," replied the youthful applicant.

"Hum—do you ever go fishing?"

"Occasionally."

"When were you fishing last?"

"Day before yesterday."

"Catch anything?"

"Not a thing."

"You can come to work next Monday, if you like. If you keep on telling the truth like that you may be a partner in the firm one of these days."—Sel.

An interesting comparison of the salaries of the various rulers of Europe, says the Commoner, is made by a German statistician as follows: "Assuming that they work six hours a day, the emperor of Russia received $80 a minute, the emperor of Austria $35, the king of Italy $21, the emperor of Germany $17, the king of England $15, the king of Spain $15, the king of Belgium and the king of Denmark between $3 and $4, and the King of Servia between $1 and $2. President Loubet of France receives about 5 cents a minute more than the King of Servia." The president of the United States gets about 40 cents.

"PAPA, what is charity?" "Charity, my son, is giving away what you don't want." "What is scientific charity?" "Scientific charity is giving away what you don't want to some one who does not want it." "What is organized charity?" "Organized charity, my son, is giving away something that you don't want to some society which will give it away to some one who does not want it." "Then what is love, papa?" "Love? Oh, love is only giving something that you want to some one who wants it—but that will pauperize the poor."—Life.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

Bertha Beesley, Moselle, Mo.: "What a compliment to pass on your Advance Society! Belong to it four and one-half years, and 'not know much more!' Well, I have a better opinion of your Av. S. than that." (It wasn't meant as a compliment, but as a joke. But I think I got the worst of it.) "The time employed in keeping the Av. S. rules has been very beneficial to me. My 19th report is enclosed, and I make it brief. I find that I like Tennyson best of all English poets. I am glad old gold and blue are ahead; I cast my vote for them. Helen Ross, I would like to have attended your show, though I wouldn't want to have been drenched; but of course that made the play better. It is more than likely that I will meet the Advancers at the World's Fair, as I live near St. Louis. You must be sure to bring your wife along, but if you do, Elsie Venner will have to take a back seat. I wasn't going to write any more, but here I am again with a long letter!" (Not long; I hope you'll do it again, right away. Everybody wants to hear about your teaching, for of course you have a school engaged.)

Lois Percy, Thomas, Okla.: "This time instead of a report, I come with excuses. I kept the rules 11 weeks, then went to an old soldiers' reunion. I did not think I would stay but one day, but went home with a friend and stayed till Sunday" (which is a day, I observe, that old soldiers never included in their encampments.) "I will begin keeping the rules again right away. We had a fine time at the reunion. There were lots of people there." (No body need skip this account, for Lois doesn't tell whether they were northern or southern soldiers. If you are either one, just imagine it was your reunion.) "The Indians came, too, and pitched their teepees, and stayed till all was over. They danced, but they charged admission; I did not see them dance." (I wish they charged admission up here to see the dances. It might not keep Indians away, but it would no doubt keep some old church members at home, where they would best be when there is a dance in town.) "I rode a lot on the merry-go-round." (You should have tried a horse.) "Do you like to ride on the merry-go-round?" (I do not know what your merry-go-round music was, Dixie or Marching Through Georgia.) "Then I listened to the band, the singing and the speeches." (Yes, put them last, where they belong.) "There was a balloon ascension each evening, but it was not a very great sight." (By the way, here is a conundrum: Why are reunion speeches like balloons? I would give the answer if I knew whether they were Democratic or Republican speeches.) "If you want some milkshake right bad, come down to Thomas and get some. It may have sand and wind in it, but I think hardly any Indians in it." (Now, I see what I remarked about Oklahoma some weeks ago is rankling in people's breasts. I did not think Indians were in it; they use them to make red lemonade at the Oklahoma circuses, I've been told—as for me, I never go to a circus; I mean an Oklahoma circus. As for wind, they put it in their soda water.) "If it were not boasting I would tell you that I am not afraid of Indians." (But it is boasting, and of the worst kind.) "Indians won't hurt you until you hurt them." (Oh, yes, that's what people used to tell me about bees. And yet, I wasn't doing anything on earth or in the air to the bee that taught me better on that subject.) "Next time I come, I will try to bring a report." (Don't wait that long.)

Harry Cash, Hood River, Ore.: "It is a little late to talk about the 4th of July, but I will tell about it. My brothers, Ashley and Burleigh, my father, 4 friends and I went to the top of the mountains you can see from here. My brothers, Mr. Bagster and I walked, the others rode. The hardest climbing was up a very steep hill just after we crossed Hood River. We followed the Dalles road to a place where you start up the mountain and there waited for the rest of the crowd. When they got to us it began to rain so hard that we went into an old log cabin and ate our dinner. Soon after, it stopped raining, so we started to go up. We found a wrong trail and got in brush and were all wet, but we reached the top, where we could see all the valley. It was so cold we did not stay long. Coming back, we got on the right trail. We have a cat we call Frisk. I believe he is smarter than Pitpaw, Felix or Dinah." (I don't know anything about Pitpaw and Dinah, their owners can speak up for them if they please. But I know Felix is as smart as any kind of a cat that is yellow. He is not like other yellow cats, either. He is an old gold cat.) "I vote on old gold and blue for the Av. S. colors." (The voting on the colors will be announced next week. If old gold and blue win I must tie me a blue ribbon about Felix, and he will represent us very well. Perhaps I will bring him to St. Louis.)

M. Emily Day, Sparta, Mo.: "I am now on my 10th quarter. I did not send my report sooner, because I have been away visiting almost all summer. It is very hot and dusty here. My sister Ruth came home to-day; she has had a fine time."

Mrs. Florence L. Smith, Pawnee, Okla.: "My mother and I have enjoyed the Av. S. page ever since it first appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I have read it to several of our little friends who enjoy it as much as we. Two of them tried to keep the rules, but did not reach the Honor List. My mother is 66; I am some younger. We have a church in Pawnee. Bro. M. F. Ingraham is our minister. He is—" (Mrs. Smith says some very nice things about him, but I don't give her words, because I think preachers are always hearing too much praise, and that is why some of them are so—I mean it isn't good for anybody. Except once in a while. I like it once in a while, myself.) "He always has a pleasant word for the children. If the Advance Society will visit Oklahoma we will treat you to fine peaches. If 'the

"Perhaps some of the boys imagine they would find wild Indians down here, but they wouldn't, though they would see them in various kinds of dress, from blanket, beaded moccasins, bells and feathers, to nice citizen's clothing." (I have never forgotten that bee. I was only 14 years old. It was out in the garden. I wasn't doing a thing to it.) "I inclose my quarterly report."

Edna Shriver, Nebo, Ill.: "I am going to take music lessons. On my birthday, Aug. 20, papa presented me with a Pease piano. It is so pretty." A HEALING MINERAL SPRING AT YOUR DOOR

PERSONAL TO SUBSCRIBERS!

WE WILL SEND to every subscriber or reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, or worthy person recommended by a subscriber or reader, a full-sized One Dollar package of VITÆ-ORE, by mail, postpaid, sufficient for one month's treatment, to be paid for in one month's time after receipt, if the receiver can truthfully say that its use has done him or her more good than all the drugs and dopes of quacks or good doctors or patent medicines he or she has ever used. Read this over again carefully, and understand that we ask our pay only when it has done you good, and not before. We take all the risk; you have nothing to lose. If it does not benefit you, you pay us nothing. Vitæ-Ore is a natural, hard, adamantine, rock-like substance—mineral—Ore—mined from the ground like gold and silver in the neighborhood of a once powerful but now extinct, mineral spring, compared to which the springs of the present day are but pygmies, whose waters, impregnated with the healing and medicinal qualities of the Ore found at its base, no doubt spouted for centuries before the foot of man trod the Western Continent. It requires about twenty years for oxidation. It contains free iron, free sulphur and magnesium, and one package will equal in medicinal strength and curative value 800 gallons of the most powerful, efflucacious mineral water drunk fresh at the springs. It is a geological discovery, to which there is nothing added or taken from. It is the marvel of the century for curing such diseases as Rheumatism, Bright's Disease, Blood Poisoning, Heart Trouble, Dropsy, Catarrh and Throat Affections, Liver, Kidney and Bladder Ailments, Stomach Disorders, La Grippe, Malarial Fever, Nervous Prostration and General Debility, as thousands testify, and as no one, answering this, writing for a package, will deny after using. Vitæ-Ore has cured more chronic, obstinate, pronounced incurable cases, than any other known medicine, and will reach such cases with a more rapid and powerful curative action than any medicine, combination of medicines, or doctor's prescription which it is possible to procure.

Vitæ-Ore will do the same for you as it has for hundreds of readers of this paper, if you will give it a trial. Send for a $1.00 package at our risk. You have nothing to lose but the stamp to answer this announcement. We want no one's money whom Vitæ-Ore can not benefit. You are to be the judge! Can anything be more fair? What sensible person, no matter how prejudiced he or she may be, who desires a cure and is willing to pay for it, would hesitate to try Vitæ-Ore on this liberal offer? One package is usually sufficient to cure ordinary cases; two or three for chronic, obstinate cases. We mean just what we say in this announcement, and will do just as we agree. Write to-day for a package at our risk and expense, giving age and ailments, and mention this paper, so we may know that you are entitled to this liberal offer.

This offer will challenge the attention and consideration, and afterward the gratitude, of every living person who desires better health, or who suffers pains, ills and diseases which have defied the world and grown worse with age. We care not for your skepticism, but ask only your investigation, and at our expense, regardless of what ills you have, by sending to us for a package. ADDRESS

Rev. Wm. F. Dougherty Has Used It.

READ WHAT HE SAYS:

FITZGERALD, GA.—I write a few lines just to say that about one year ago I began taking Vitæ-Ore for catarrh of the head and throat. I at that time had a bad case of indigestion and Kidney Trouble. Sometimes stones would form in my kidneys, and I would be compelled to lie on hot bottles until they would pass into the bladder. My digestion was so bad I seldom dared to eat as much as eight ounces of food before preaching in the evening, lest I should be distressed while in the pulpit. I had no thought whatever of being cured of these troubles when I began taking V.-O. But I am cured sound and well of all of them, and God and Vitæ-Ore did it. For He, through one of His suffering servants, called my attention to your "ad" in our leading church paper, in which you offered to send a $1.00 package on trial to any one, and throw them upon their honor to pay for it if benefited. I have been taking (as before stated) V.-O. for about one year. My Catarrh is 75 per cent. better, and my Kidney and Stomach Trouble entirely cured. And I am in better health than I have been in eighteen years (for it has been about eighteen years since I took Catarrh). I can heartily and conscientiously recommend Vitæ-Ore to suffering humanity as the best medicine which I have ever taken.—WM. F. DOUGHERTY, Minister First Christian Church.

Humanity—Triumphant and Militant

WE may conceive afar off, like an ideal figure, a perfected humanity. All who toil for the future are lighted on their way by the radiance of this vision. In the days of storm and stress, as in these—still more exhausting—of dead calm, the beauty of this lofty conception is their strength.

And yet, in spite of the splendor of the ideal, in spite of this beneficent ray falling on our path, the march interests me more than the arrival.

Humanity militant is humanity heroic: I find her more beautiful in her wounds and her struggles than encircled with the halo of victory. Aspiration is infinitely more attractive to me than possession, as the promise of day-break has more charm to my eyes than the golden light of noon.

For the Christ of Galilee.
For the truth which makes men free.
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition.
For the truth 'gainst superstition.
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

Current Events

The strained situation in the British Cabinet reached the breaking point last week with the resignation of Joseph Chamberlain and three other members of the cabinet. The colonial secretary's persistent advocacy of the preferential tariff as a means of favoring the colonies and binding together the empire in a closer commercial unity, brought on the inevitable rupture with the prime minister, who has never been very hospitable toward Mr. Chamberlain's plan. The members of the cabinet whose resignations have been accepted are Joseph Chamberlain, secretary of state for the colonies, Lord George Hamilton, secretary of state for India, Sir Charles Ritchie, chancellor of the exchequer, and Lord Balfour of Burleigh, secretary for Scotland. The prime minister stated some time ago that it would be impossible for the government to adopt so radical a departure as that suggested by Mr. Chamberlain without securing the sanction of a popular vote, and it seems highly probable that the dissolving cabinet will be compelled to seek vindication at the polls. Mr. Chamberlain has predicted that on this appeal the party will go out of power for a short time and that after a brief liberal interregnum it will be restored with the approbation of his tariff project. Mr. Balfour is being widely criticised for publishing through the ordinary channels of the book trade, a pamphlet embodying in substance his argument against Mr. Chamberlain's preferential tariff. It is having an enormous sale and the publishers are coining money from it. Mr. Balfour's own receipts from this source will be a very considerable sum, and it is the unanimous feeling that it is scarcely proper for a prime minister to use his position to make money out of what is virtually a campaign document. The pamphlet contains no direct reference either to Mr. Chamberlain or to his tariff proposal, but suggests a substitute measure. Apparently it is his purpose to prevent Chamberlain from becoming the central figure in the impending contest. However, if Mr. Chamberlain's prediction above quoted is realized, it will be hard to prevent him from becoming premier when the party is restored to power.

The time limit of the Hay-Herran treaty between the United States and Colombia expires at midnight on Tuesday, Sept. 22. If the Colombia Congress does not reconsider its action before that time the whole canal question will have to be taken up anew. Some differences of opinion have developed in regard to the proper course for the United States to pursue toward the Panama insurgents. The most obvious and generally accepted view is that the United States cannot afford for the sake of the canal to put herself in the attitude of encouraging revolution, but there are not wanting those who hold that we would be entirely justified in giving some quiet encouragement to the insurgents. The province of Panama as an independent state would be quite willing to ratify the treaty which Colombia has just rejected. As one paper says: "There is little use in boggling over nice points of usage and of courtesy with government such as that of Colombia, which represents, in the last analysis, a system of organized rapacity." But the matter of encouraging and assisting a revolution for the sake of a concession which is expected from the new government, is surely not so small a thing as to be called a "nice point of usage and of courtesy." Such action would, in fact, be in direct opposition to the most fundamental principles of governmental honor. If the government of Colombia were so inefficient and inhuman as to justify intervention, and if there were a probability that the government of Panama would be better, the case would be entirely different. But now it is simply a question of getting a concession to build a canal, and in abstaining from interference in behalf of the Panama insurgents our government is not observing "nice points of usage and courtesy," but the simplest requirements of international honor.

President Roosevelt may yet find himself confronted with a real problem in the attitude which a certain element of organized labor has taken toward him. The head and front of his offending was that he restored one Miller, a non-union man, to his position in the government printing-office from which he had been crowded out by the typographical union. This occurred several weeks ago and the president explained the attitude of the administration toward union labor very clearly at that time. It was simply that no man in the employ of any department of the government should be discriminated against either because he belonged to the union or because he did not. This did not satisfy the union, and there have been mutterings of discontent ever since. The Council of the American Federation of Labor is now in session at Washington, and John Mitchell, mindful of the friendly attitude which the president took toward the miners at the time of the coal strike, is defending him against his critics. The president has sent word to Mr. Mitchell that he would like to meet the Council of the Federation of Labor and talk over the Miller case with them. As we stated above, it is possible that he will lose part of the labor vote by reason of this episode, but even in that case he can have the satisfaction of occupying an impregnable position. The government is not ready to turn over the administration of its business to any labor union, however excellent it may be, and so long as this is the case the only position which it can properly occupy is that which the president has defined with his customary clearness.

Last year Mr. Alfred Mosley, a British millionaire, sent a group of English manufacturers and technical experts to this country to study the industrial conditions and see whether any American ideas could be gathered which would bear transplanting to British soil. The report of the commission recognized the excellence of the results obtained by American workmen and American ideas, but indicated that the visitors were a little at a loss to account for the results, and were unable to take home any very practical suggestions. Now Mr. Mosley is about to send a second commission to study educational methods and systems in this country. The commission will be composed of prominent British educators, and they will be given every facility for studying our representative educational institutions. The coming of this commission will be an even more noteworthy fact than the preceding one, for while the commercial and industrial effectiveness of American methods has long been recognized abroad in varying degrees, it is something of a novelty to find an Englishman admitting that his country may possibly have something to learn from ours regarding the processes of education. A prominent authority on pedagogy has stated that, while the educational system of our country is unorganized, that of England is disorganized. However that may be, we shall be glad if we can give our neighbors across the sea any hints toward the perfecting of their own system. And possibly, instead of devoting too much time to self-congratulation over this evidence of our growing prominence, we might ourselves send a few commissioners abroad to learn how some things are done in foreign lands. It is a fact which not all Americans are disposed to admit, that some things are done even better in Germany and France and England than they are here.

A correspondent sends us a copy of a little paper evidently published by friends of reform, containing an article on the prospects for the World's Fair of 1904, which is described as "a great event which bids fair to be swallowed up in a maelstrom of iniquity." According to the writer of this article the entire city is to be turned into one vast den of iniquity and the Fair itself is to be the scene of such "fearful, God-defying, soul-destroying, nation-disgracing, corrupting, debasing, inhuman, brutish, devilish, polluted, unsightly, ghastly, criminal, wicked" orgies, as will make the shades of Sodom and Gomorrah burn with shame to remember their feeble amateur efforts in vice. The article closes with a fervent appeal to all good people to send their protests to President Francis of the World's Fair Company. Our correspondent asks, "Is there any call for this?" First a word as to the facts, then a word about the protest. St. Louis is a wicked city. It is an ill-governed city, and private vice always flourishes in an atmosphere of public corruption. Very likely St. Louis is no worse than some other American cities, but that is no defense. As a matter of course there will be special activity among all the purveyors of vice during the World's Fair period. There will be more people here to cater to and they will be in the holiday mood which makes them more liable to temptation. But there is no excuse for saying that the city and Fair are to be given over to iniquity and that good people ought to show their disapproval by boycotting it. No great exposition has ever given such promise of being a thoroughly clean show. The concessions are to be under far stricter surveillance than were those at Chicago, Paris or Buffalo, objectionable exhibits are to be excluded, and the whole Fair is to be closed on Sundays. This being the case, what is to be gained by an "overwhelming protest" addressed to the president of the Exposition Company?

It would be more to the point to address the excise commissioner and the police board of St. Louis. To those who feel really interested in the moral condition of St. Louis during the World's Fair, we recommend that they express their solicitude by contributing to the support of some of the numerous efforts which will be made to counteract the evil influences by definite moral and religious work. The churches, for example, will be more than ordinarily active and will conduct aggressive campaigns for righteousness. To help some of them will be better than to pour in a flood of misdirected protests or to boycott what promises to be a very excellent and uplifting exposition.

Mr. Folk's boom for Governor of Missouri is making good progress throughout the state; but he will not win the race for the Democratic nomination without meeting the strongest opposition that the machine can bring to bear against him. Mayor Wells, of St. Louis, and Harry Hawes, President of the St. Louis Police Board, are the latest candidates nominated by the newspapers. Mr. Hawes is a thorough machine politician, more dangerous than others of his class, because he is more intelligent without being more scrupulous. Under his direction the police force of St. Louis has become a political club rather than an instrument for the enforcement of law. Mayor Wells is not a machine politician in the ordinary sense and is personally above reproach. A few days ago, however, when the notorious Jefferson Club gave Mr. Hawes a reception on his return from Europe, Mr. Wells was present and eulogized Hawes and the club. If this means that he would, as governor, use the appointing power to put men of this sort in office, his election would be a calamity. The Governor of Missouri has immense responsibilities in the appointing power which is placed in his hands. In the case of St. Louis, for example, the governor appoints the police board, which makes its own estimates and takes from the city treasury as much money as it pleases without the consent of the tax-payers; the election commissioners, who operate under an election law which affords remarkable facilities for crookedness; and the excise commissioner, who controls the saloon licenses. These three departments constitute the most important part of the local government, and the dwellers in the cities of this state believe that the power of making these appointments should be in the hands of one who is completely free from entangling alliances with the boodle and machine element, and who has no disposition to grant favors to political adventurers and corruptionists. It is because they believe that Mr. Folk will use the appointing power wisely and well that many people consider him a desirable candidate for governor.

A large step was made toward the realization of "the new St. Louis" when the fourteen railroads composing the Terminal Association agreed last week to give through bills of lading to St. Louis. At present the terminals for all freight from the east are in East St. Louis, and these terminals have been so inadequate for many years that it has often taken more time and trouble to get freight across the river to its destination than to bring it half across the continent. The new arrangement means that when the railroads accept freight for shipment they will assume the responsibility for delivering it in St. Louis, not in East St. Louis. This improvement will be of immense value to the city, and will free its merchants and manufacturers from a handicap under which they have hitherto labored.

Since the last municipal election the House of Delegates has had a small majority in favor of reform and honest government, but the change was too good to last. A few days ago one or two of the waverers who had hitherto associated with the reform element became home-sick for the flesh pots of the old regime. The result was a reorganization with a saloonkeeper as speaker and the "Butler element" is again in the ascendant.

Brevities.

It is reported on good authority that the President will call an extra session of Congress to meet Nov. 9. The special business of the session will be the Cuban reciprocity question.

Mr. Bryan has endorsed John H. Clarke, Democratic candidate for United States senator from Ohio, though Mr. Clarke is not in harmony with the sixteen-to-one currency idea.

The Mexican government is preparing to spend fifty million dollars in erecting a magnificent group of buildings for the various departments of the government. Work has been commenced on the capitol building which is to cost about twenty million dollars.

The Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company has already expended $10,000,000 in preparation for the World's Fair of 1904. The warrants showing this expenditure have been examined and approved and the $5,000,000 appropriated by the United States government is now available.

The National Irrigation Congress met at Ogden, Utah, Sept. 15, with delegates from eleven trans-Mississippi states. Since the passage of the irrigation bill by the last congress a considerable amount of money will be available annually for the construction of irrigation work under federal patronage, and it is important that the practical phases of the subject should be discussed by such representative bodies as this.

Was It Worth While?

When Thomas and Alexander Campbell began the movement for "the complete repristination of the Church, in doctrine, institutions and life," according to the fine phrase of Professor Loos,* did they have before them an impossible or impracticable ideal? Their primary aim, it is true, was the union of God's people, but they felt that in order to bring about this consummation they must restore the Church of Christ in its constitutional or organic features. This included the fundamental doctrine, the ordinances and the life of the New Testament Church. Were they correct in understanding that we must go back to the catholicity, simplicity and spiritual vitality of the New Testament Church in order to find a sufficiently broad basis for Christian unity?

This is not an idle question. It is one which confronts us continually, and one which must be answered by every one among us before he can determine correctly his spiritual reckoning as it relates to this reformation. We have believed, and still hold the conviction, that the aim of our fathers was not only high and noble in itself, but that it lies along the line of God's purpose concerning His Church in the world. We believe, therefore, that this aim should be kept steadily before us—"the complete repristination of the Church, in doctrine, institutions and life." We believe, too, that there can be no permanent and perfect union among Christ's followers until we get upon that broad basis of faith and fellowship.

Some of the fundamental doctrines which must be restored before the Church can realize the desired unity are, that God has revealed Himself through "holy men of old" as they were "moved by the Holy Spirit," and ultimately in Jesus Christ His Son, and that the record of these revelations is contained in the Old and New Testament Scriptures; which are "able to make us wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus;" that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself; that in Him we have "God manifest in the flesh," or the divine life lived under human conditions; that by his life and voluntary death he has unveiled the heart of the Father and opened up the way of life and salvation for sinful men; that through faith in him, and the obedience of faith, men are brought into right relations with God, and made members of his Church; that this life of God, imparted to the soul through the remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit, is to manifest itself in purity of life, in the development of a Christ-like character, and in all unselfish service for humanity.

The two ordinances which existed in the New Testament Church, and which there is no reason to doubt existed under divine authority, were baptism and the Lord's Supper, both of which derived all their significance and their value from the relation which they bore to Christ. Baptism as it was practiced in the primitive Church was a declaration, in symbolic form, of Christ's resurrection from the dead, and of the believer's death to sin and his resurrection unto newness of life. It was the great confessional act, by which the believer expressed his faith in Christ, and his purpose to enter into his service. It was initiatory, declarative, transitional. It became the line of demarkation between the Church and the world, for only those submitted to it who, as it was understood, were willing to forsake the world for Christ.

The Lord's Supper was, at first perhaps, a daily, but afterwards a weekly participation of the simple elements of the bread and wine, in memory of Christ's suffering and death. It was instituted by Christ himself to be observed henceforth in his memory. It, too, like baptism, is a monumental institution setting forth a great fact, namely, the death of Christ for our sins. Both institutions were designed by our Lord as helps in the religious life. Baptism was a gate, not a fence. The Lord's Supper was a family reunion to remember the absent elder Brother, and not a denominational badge or barrier.

What the life was we have already indicated. It was a life of faith, of love, of unselfish service. It was a life controlled in its great purposes and choices, by the will of God, as manifested in Christ, and not by the appetites and passions. It was a life that flowed out, through ever-deepening and widening channels, for the redemption of the world, and not a life of selfish ease and of personal aggrandizement.

This doctrine, these institutions, this life, our fathers thought should be restored to the Church, in so far as they had been lost from the Church. This would be its "repristination." Were they right in this? Was it worth while to undertake to restore this divine ideal to the world? Is it worth while to-day, amid much obloquy, misconception and prejudice, to carry on the work of the fathers, in establishing churches of Jesus Christ on the earth, as nearly as we can possibly understand, "according to the pattern shown us in the mount?" We believe it is vastly worth while, and doubt not that if we are faithful to this high ideal, no matter what opposition it may provoke, seeking to do Christ's work in Christ's spirit, we may safely leave our future, as a religious movement, in the hands of God.

The desire to be known of men is destructive of all true greatness; nor is there any honor worth calling honor but what comes from an unseen source. To be great is to seem small in the eyes of men.—George Macdonald.

Man's Highest Privilege.

It is not in sharing the honors and earthly glory of kings and potentates. Neither is it in enjoying citizenship in the greatest and freest government on earth. It is not in luxuriating in wealth, exulting in power and position which we have gained or inherited, or living at ease and without care in a world of conflict, suffering and sorrow. Nor yet is it participation in any of the pure and innocent enjoyments of life, however much they may add to our cup of human happiness. It is the priceless privilege of prayer. Man has no other privilege so royal, so fraught with blessings of infinite value to himself and others, as that of immediate access to God, whom he may address as Father, and who has pledged to hear and to answer our prayers. Let us note a few of the benefits resulting from prayer.

Nothing else can so reveal the soul to himself, and its real attitude to God, as prayer. Whoever does not pray with some regularity of habit does not know his own moral condition. When we come face to face with God alone, in our closet upon our knees, then all pretenses, all vain subterfuges, all self-deceptions disappear, and the soul is made to feel its own poverty and its utter need of God. If faith be weak, if our motives in life be mixed, if our heart is not right, if we are enmeshed in the world's net, if the chill of doubt has cooled the ardor of our zeal, if some lurking sin still persists in paralyzing our moral power and our spiritual life—all this will be made manifest to us when we kneel alone in the presence of the infinite God to commune with Him. For the purpose of the deepest self-knowledge, then, we should form the habit of prayer.

Prayer brings us into the atmosphere of God which is the life of the soul. Real prayer lifts us above the earth and its manifold cares and enticements, and brings us into heavenly places in Christ Jesus, where we have contact with holy thoughts, and fellowship with the noblest, purest and best of earth, and with God Himself. Who can estimate aright the value to the soul of such communion with God, and such inspiration of the breath of heaven? It is like escaping from the low, malarial atmosphere of the swamps to the pure invigorating air of the mountains, where the blood is purified and enriched, and the whole system is attuned to a higher note of the music of life. As a spiritual tonic, then, prayer is invaluable.

How manifold are our spiritual needs when we come to see our inner selves in the mirror of God! It is then the soul cries out in its hunger and thirst after righteousness. God has pledged Himself to satisfy the heart that hungers and thirsts after Him, even as He satisfies the panting hart by the cool water-brooks. The privilege of going to our heavenly Father for every needed gift, who would exchange that for all the diadems and crowns of earth? "If you, being evil, know how to give good things to your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give good things to them that ask him?" Think of the burdens we escape by taking them to God in prayer! How many heart-aches have been cured as we have knelt in the presence-chamber of the Eternal, and opened our hearts to Him who knoweth our frame and who pitieth us, even as a father pitieth his children! What would earth's struggling, toiling, wounded, defeated ones do, if they did not have God as a refuge, and prayer as the key which opens the door into that refuge?

"O what peace we often forfeit,
O what needless pain we bear,
All because we do not carry
Everything to God in prayer."

What other exercise of the soul can do so much to put us in right relations with our fellow men? Whoever asks God for forgiveness must also forgive those who have wronged him. We dare not carry malice and enmity and an unforgiving spirit into the presence of God, while we plead with Him to be merciful to our own imperfections, and to forgive our many transgressions. The praying heart is not one that carries within it any feeling of bitterness or envy or malice or hatred toward any human being. Especially is this true if we pray not for ourselves alone, but for others as well, and even for our enemies, as our Master has taught us. If we cannot pray for our enemies, then we are not Christians. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of His."

Is not this a neglected theme in the average pulpit? Why should it be so? Is there any subject in which the people are more interested than in that of prayer? What other theme touches our daily human life at so many points, and can bring more comfort and strength to those who are carrying burdens, fighting battles, struggling against temptations, and seeking to save others as well as themselves?

We shall have more to say on this fruitful topic, but meanwhile let prayers be rising, night and day, that we may know by blessed experience that prayer is man's highest and noblest privilege.

The executive committee of the International Sunday-school association had a meeting last month at Lake Winona to talk over the question of graded lessons. The discussion developed the general sentiment on the part of the committee that, while perhaps most of the schools could not at present use graded lessons to advantage, there is a large and growing number of schools which would find such a system more profitable than the present one.

Editor's Easy Chair.

From country to city, from lake-side musings and woodland walks to the hurly-burly of a World's Fair City, is quite a change. But the latter has its attractions and its benefits. There is something to be said for the indigent woman who was sent to the country by some charitable people, but who was soon seen back in the city again, and who gave as her reason for returning that "Stumps is not people"! The poor old soul had a social hunger which the "stumps" did not supply. But to those who have learned to commune with nature, and to find the companionship of congenial spirits in books, magazines and papers, the country does not possess the terrors that it does for the ignorant. There are, however, people of cultivated minds and hearts for whom the crowded city life possesses more attractions than life in the country. They are deeply interested in people and in all the activities which engage their minds and energies. They like to study men in their relations with each other, and the social problems which present themselves in more pronounced forms in city life. It would be unfortunate for any one living in the city, to have no interest in humanity and its manifold struggles. The hermit, or recluse of any kind, is not an ideal citizen or Christian. He who loves his fellow men can not be uninterested in the tragedies and comedies of life as they come before him. The city is the place to study human nature, and the problems which grow out of the social instincts which lead men to live together in great aggregations.

But whether in city or country the best place for one to be, except for a temporary change, is the place of his work. There is no happiness in this life equal to that which one finds in his work, when he sees in that work the expression of the best there is in him, and feels that he can best serve the world and develop his own character in the faithful prosecution of that work. It is a great mistake for one to regard his calling in life, provided it be honest and honorable, as an obstacle in his way, rather than as the very means ordained of God by which he is to fulfill his mission in life and work out his destiny. There are many people who are all the time bemoaning their lot in life, feeling that they are fitted for a higher sphere, when this very attitude of mind toward their present task unfits them for making it a stepping-stone to something higher. The most serious mistake one can make in his life-work, however, is to divorce it from conscience, and to habitually act on a plane which his better nature, if it were allowed to assert itself, would condemn. To lower one's ethical standard for purposes of gain, to assume an attitude toward public questions, if he be a public man, which is distinctly lower in its moral quality than his best judgment, is to set in operation the process of moral deterioration which can only end in moral bankruptcy. Unless there be harmony between one's innermost self and his work, then our work ceases to be a means of character-building and a source of happiness.

It has been frequently said of vacations that the home-coming is no less enjoyable than the home-leaving. This is true, but the joy in each case is not the same. In our going away there is the joy which comes from change of situation, novel experiences, new scenes, change of activities, and anticipation of quiet, restful days amid pleasant surroundings. The joy of the return is in taking up again the familiar tasks, the renewal of old associations, contact with one's old friends, and occupying again the one place in life which is a little dearer than any other—the spot we call home. John Howard Paine made his name immortal by giving utterance to that universal sentiment, "There is no place like home!" And then there is pleasure in putting on the old familiar harness, taking up the regular habits of work, and settling down steadily to one's tasks. It is the philosophy of the Easy Chair that we must find our enjoyment and our happiness in the place where we are, and in the work which we are called upon to do. Sad, indeed, is the lot of him who sees no beauty in his environment, and finds no inspiration in his daily tasks. The President uttered a noble sentiment, in a recent speech, when he said, "No man is to be pitied for having to work." But ought we not to pity one who finds no joy in his work, and who sees nothing in it beyond the dull routine of his daily tasks? Blessed is the man who loves his work, no matter how humble, and sees in that work the opportunity for giving expression to his noblest self.

If the Easy Chair were asked to give the key-note for the coming fall and winter work, it would be those noble words of our beloved Paul: "Forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, let us press on toward the goal of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." There are some things we do well to forget. It is good to put out of our memories and out of our hearts the bitternesses, mistakes and narrow prejudices of the past, that we may have a clearer vision of the greater things which God has for us in the future. It is good not to dwell so much upon the achievements of the past as to neglect the greater achievements to which God, by his providence, is calling us. The things that are before far exceed in value the things which are behind. Our faces should be turned ever toward the rising sun and the eternal morning.

"Art is long and time is fleeting,
And our hearts, though stout and brave,
Still like muffled drums are beating
Funeral marches to the grave."

There is no time to waste in petty controversies or in unfraternal disputations. God is calling us to something higher and better. "Dinna ye hear the slogan?" It is the trumpet of the great Captain of our salvation, summoning us to prepare for an advance movement all along the line against the powers of darkness and in furtherance of his triumphing cause. Only by responding to this call can we show to the world, and to principalities and powers, the meaning and mission of our movement among the religious forces of the age.

Questions and Answers.

Can it be possible that there is "a determined effort on foot through the manipulation of the officials of these [missionary] societies, with the connivance of certain editors, to commit our societies to a policy directly the reverse of that to which they are sacredly pledged?"

JOHN B. CASON.

Of course not. We have never known a time in our history when some paper among us was not making such a charge, and we have never known a time when it was less true than it is to-day. There is not only no such "determined purpose," but there is no desire on the part of any one, so far as we know, to turn our missionary societies away from their legitimate work. If some one has conceived the idea that a national convention of the brotherhood has no right to consider and plan for its educational interests, nor for the care of aged and indigent ministers and for widows and orphans, such an one might feel that such a convention, representing the brotherhood rather than any particular society, had transcended its legitimate work. But the great mass of free men and women connected with this reformation will never be convinced that they have no liberty to meet and take counsel together concerning the general interests of the kingdom of God, so long as their action is purely advisory and carries with it no claim of authority to bind others by their recommendations. The last thing in the world we are in danger of is ecclesiasticism; a vastly greater danger is an extreme liberty that borders on religious anarchy.

I have taken the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for over twenty-five years and have been benefited by its good counsels, and now wish to ask you two questions:

1. We have here a church of over 150 members without any organization except there is a business committee and a treasurer. There is not an ordained officer in the church. Good people, good house, no friction. Is this a scriptural church?

2. Is it prudent when a Sunday-school and church go to a picnic ground to enjoy a day of pleasure and recreation, for the preacher in charge to spend the day in playing croquet with the adult members, some of them officers of the church?

A MEMBER.

1. The church would no doubt be more efficient with the usual New Testament officers, and it should provide them, if it has suitable material. Otherwise, it would better remain as it is.

2. We see no reason for prohibiting the preacher from indulging in croquet with his members, any more than from engaging in any other form of recreation. This, however, should be done in moderation. It would not look well to spend the whole day either in that or any other game.

Was the meeting in which the resolution in favor of federation was adopted at Omaha a session of the Home Missionary Society, or of some other society? CLARK BRADEN.

It was an evening session of our national convention held under the auspices of the American Christian Missionary Society.

1. Can a Christian be a successful business man?

2. Was Christ any more than a good man? UNCLE NOAH.

1. Yes, and he should be, other things being equal, a better business man than a non-Christian can possibly be.

2. Yes, he was a good man, plus deity. He was "God manifest in the flesh." He was the divine who became human, that the human might become divine.

Our preacher has somewhat upset our little congregation by declaring that no Christian nowadays received the Holy Ghost, and that "the gift of the Holy Ghost" simply means "eternal life." What do you think of this?

C. F. ELLIS.

315 91st St., Chicago, Ill.

It seems to us your preacher has identified cause and effect. The Holy Spirit is a person through whose agency men are begotten unto a new life, which is the life eternal. The gift of the Holy Spirit should be claimed by Christians to-day as well as by those of the first century.

Notes and Comments.

"He that hath understanding let him count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is 666." (Rev. 13:18.) The latest attempt to unravel this mystery and identify the beast of Revelation is made by a correspondent of "The Religious Herald," as follows:

"Pope Sarto is number 10 of the Pius Line; Leo was 13th of the Lion succession. Add from 9 to 1 inclusive, the sum is 45. Add from 13 to 1-91. Multiply 45 by 13 and add 91 to the product and 676 is the result. Then subtract Sarto's number (10)." Result 666.

This is more ingenious than convincing. Surely the author of Revelation could not have expected his first-century audience to have the sort of understanding to count the number of the beast in this way. Besides, even this solution does not quite locate the beast. Is it Leo or Sarto? Or if it is intended to cover the occupant of the papal chair in general, is it assumed that the honor of being the beast was reserved to the popes of our day. It would be a singular prophetic judgment which would pass over the mediæval and Renaissance popes and characterize as the beast the respectable gentlemen who sit in the papal chair nowadays.

Twelve million dollars for college endowment is the sum which the Presbyterians are attempting to raise. A large committee of prominent men was appointed by the last General Assembly to push this movement. The time has come for the Disciples of Christ to give more unity to their educational appeal. This is one task for our Education Society. This society expects to have its secretary in the field shortly, and to announce the annual Education Day. Be on the lookout for them.

The institutional church, says R. J. Campbell, "needs one minister to be a prophet in the pulpit and another to be a business manager." That is perfectly true. It is not often that the prophetic and the commercial temperaments are so united in one man that he can do all the work that is demanded by a church which takes upon itself the functions of a board of charities, an educational commission and a society for social betterment. But that does not prove that the institutional church is undesirable or impracticable. It only proves that the church needs to call into its service more consecrated business managers, so that the born prophets may not fall into disrepute on account of their inability to serve tables.

We are grateful for the hearty response which our editorial last week "Concerning Newspaper Controversy" has elicited from the brethren. The general sentiment seems to be that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has entered the field of controversy only when important principles were involved, and even then in a fraternal spirit. It is the opinion of many of our most thoughtful readers, however, in which we heartily concur, that the time has come when we can afford to pass by in silence the attacks or criticisms of any religious journal that has shown itself incapable of frank, candid, fraternal and dignified discussion of principles, and has developed a chronic spirit of fault-finding or of hypercriticism. There are papers among us, as our readers know, whose names never appear in our columns, and to whose misrepresentations we never make any reply. If to this list we now add one or two other journals, it is in the interest of the peace and unity of the brotherhood, and in deference to the wishes of our readers, as well as in harmony with our own feelings. We much prefer to be silent rather than to be severe, when silence will serve the same purpose.

Little Lessons in Living.

By S. John Duncan-Clark.

2. The Will of God.

The will of God is the force that energizes and controls the universe. It is the resultant and projection of His infinite love and wisdom combined. It conditions all life and development. It is the one absolute essential of true progress, the program of evolution. Upon it the universe was designed and continues to be ordered. From the majestic movements of the planets, to the minutest detail on the life of His most insignificant creature, all is governed by His will. Among created beings, so far as our knowledge extends, man alone has liberty to live at discord with the divine intention. In the god-like possession of volition, man has chosen to put himself out of gear with God, and hence the seeming chaos in the world to-day. All the sorrow and sighing, sickness and suffering, death and despair proceed from this insanity of choice, that sets the life of man at variance with the purpose of God.

I have said insanity, for such it surely is, that man should hope to reap advantage from the universe by following the short-sighted devices of his own will rather than the wise methods of its Creator. If the inventor of some ingenious machine should be willing to furnish you with plans for its working, so that you might realize the fullest measure of profit from its use, would it be the act of a sane man to reject his plans and formulate methods of your own, not based upon the character and purpose of the invention, but rather upon your own inclination, convenience or pleasure? And yet it is thus that some of us are living. The only reasonable life is that which seeks to conform itself absolutely to the known will of God, for in so doing it enters into harmony with the universal plan, and harmony is health, happiness, heaven. To accept the divine will as the controlling motive and energy in one's life is to become an integral part of the great whole that is moving on to the accomplishment of the divine purpose, and to the achievement of the divine ideal. To reject the divine will for the sake of a misnamed independence, is to separate one's self from the possibility of growth, and to relapse into a condition of inharmony and discord with the great pervading, unifying principle of the universe, that must mean, if persisted in, ultimate extinction, at least as a factor in the sublime purposes of God.

Moreover, the line of God's will is the line of power. To be in harmony with it is to be in the channel of omnipotence. The limit of power for each of us is the measure in which we yield ourselves to the will of God. The lack of power in the church and in individual lives to-day, is because men do not take time to know God's will or to learn His methods. It is not more organization, not more workers, not more money that is primarily needed, but back and behind all these, more sense of dependence upon God, more waiting upon Him for guidance. Little men rush wildly to and fro, bent on great schemes of reform and social betterment; they get in each other's way, they collide with one another, and they attain nothing but noise and exercise. God, the Maker of the universe, surely though slowly works out His own plan in the world, moving, unseen and silent, but ever present among the children of men, and here and there some of us, hearing the still small voice, slip away from the confusion of the crowd and in the quiet of a self-sought Patmos are taken into the Master's confidence and sent back to the whirl of life, no longer to spend our time in futile effort, but to work in line with God on the Master builder's plan, a useful factor in the solving of humanity's problems.

Conditions in Jamaica as a Result of the Hurricane.

By C. C. Smith.

Papers published in Jamaica under date of Sept. 2, have come to hand. They are full of details concerning the results of the storm. From a mass of material I glean the following:

That starvation cannot come to the people for five weeks, as they can subsist on the fallen fruit for that period. But the five weeks are now passed.

The storm reached its greatest fury in the districts where our missions are located. In these 90 per cent of the cocoanut palms, the breadfruit trees and about the same per cent of the bananas and yams are destroyed. The above named fruits and vegetables constitute the main food supply.

We had hoped that the trees which bring in revenue to the people, such as the coffee, nutmeg and allspice, on account of their structure, might have escaped, but find that nearly 80 per cent of these were either broken or overturned. So that the people in these districts not only had their homes destroyed and food supply cut off, but all the source of revenue taken away.

At a meeting of the Agricultural Society of the island a circular was prepared recommending the crops which will bring the quickest return of food. This circular reminded the people that it will take eighteen months to perfect a banana, six or eight months to grow the yam, and that it will take years to replace the fruit trees, but that the sweet potatoes and peas and corn can be made to produce food in three or four months. But where is the seed to come from, or rather, the money to buy the seed?

The members of our churches in the island are the mountain peasant class, who own or rent a small plot of land and entirely depend on it for revenue and food. Among this class is the very greatest suffering, and at some of our missions, far from the main road, there is the greatest danger of famine. The women carry all the market produce to the main roads on their heads. The average "carry" (distance) for some of our districts is ten miles. Some provision must be made for these isolated places quickly.

I see in some of the island papers lists of donations coming in from districts suffering the least to aid those suffering most. Also accounts of subscriptions being opened in England and the United States. Also accounts of relief work undertaken by missionary organizations for their people.

The people can rebuild their own homes, and the climate is so mild that there will not be great suffering from exposure while this is being done. But our chapels must be rebuilt, and our hungry people must be fed. Seed must be furnished to the people and the naked must be clothed.

I have no fears that our brethren in the United States will not respond to this call; my anxiety is lest they be too slow in this. Funds must be placed in the hands of our missionaries, on the island, at once. The canvass in the churches for the relief fund must be made quickly and the money hurried on to the needy field. Our brethren on the island are appealing for help now; shall they appeal in vain? Individual gifts, church gifts, society gifts must be sent now.

The Search For Truth.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

I saw a worker as he delved
Into the heart of earth;
About him lay fresh rocks and shells,
To me of little worth.
And as he deep and deeper plunged,
From pleasure's life aloof,
I asked him why his earnest toil;
He said, "I search for truth."

I saw a worker as he gazed
Into the starry night;
About him, books and cumbrous charts;
I wearied at the sight.
And as he conquered problems vast,
The stars he searched for proof.
I asked him why his earnest toil;
He said, "I search for truth."

I saw a worker as he delved
Into the books of men,
Old parchments, yellowed o'er with age,
Inscribed with style and pen.
And as he labored, 'mid the fruit
Of nation's erring youth,
I asked him why his earnest toil;
He said, "I search for truth."

Our Blind Bishop By F. D. Power

Born August 3, 1831. Born again May 18, 1858. Born into the eternal kingdom, September 3, 1903. These are the dates that mark the limits of his earthly career. Blind from his birth, suddenly, in a moment, he sees, and the vision is not of the faces of men, but of the face of Jesus Christ.

Alexander Newcomer was the son of John and Catherine Newcomer. They were of Swiss origin. Henry, Peter and Christian were the traditional three brothers. They settled in Washington county, Maryland and left a large number of descendants. Mostly they are millers and farmers, though many have served in the state senate and legislature and other positions of responsibility and trust. Alexander was the brother of B. F. Newcomer, one of the most prominent business men of Baltimore, president of the Safe Deposit and Trust Company of that city, and a man of great business capacity and talent, and of rare modesty and benevolence. The Newcomers have the Swiss characteristics: frankness, honesty, independence, courage, industry, frugality, generosity. The older members of the clan were Mennonites; later they have been Dunkers and Disciples. One of them was a bishop of the United Brethren.

Alexander was born in Hagerstown. He was educated at the Institution for the Blind in Philadelphia. His natural life covered 72 years and one month. In all this eventful period he played his part and it was a useful and beautiful service he was called to render. When we think of his limitations, how seriously he was hindered by lack of vision, we are amazed at the work he accomplished. Some way he reminded us of John Milton, who in his blindness gave us the noblest Epic Vision the world has seen, was himself an agonist, building up instead of pulling down, with a firm faith and unflinching courage, keeping his way "uphillward" till he reached and realized the heights his genius pictured. So our brother overcame his difficulties and made his life felt among men, a living, aggressive, ennobling force which all recognized and must remember.

He was a happy soul. God sent ten thousand singing truths into his heart which were singing there day and night. To every selfish, discontented, ungrateful, querulous nature his life was a perpetual rebuke. Sunshine and peace were in his heart and shone out irresistibly in his face and in every word and action of his life. As much of heaven as any man could bear about him without being in heaven itself he showed us in every way.

Socially, he was a charming companion. His uniform cheerfulness, his sweet music, his freedom from every semblance of harsh criticism, of gossip, of all uncharitableness; his constant and unconscious illustration of what a Christian gentleman must be; his perfect courtesy; his kindly consideration for all men—these were felt by all who came in touch with him. Intellectually, he was large and cultured. The best books were his delight. He treasured up the things that are beautiful and wise and noble in poetry and history and philosophy. No better informed man could be found on the questions of the day and the history of great men and of great events. I recall how, the last time I heard him in a public speech, he forcibly and feelingly repeated Longfellow's "Village Blacksmith." He called my attention to books I never heard of from any other source and placed a number of volumes in my hand that have greatly enriched my life. His favorites were Emerson and Irving, Scott and Dickens, and the poets Whittier, Longfellow, Mrs. Browning and Tennyson. He would quote long passages from "Paradise Lost" and "Maud Muller" and Gray's "Elegy," and many others he would repeat word for word with great interest. He would refer to any article in the Millennial Harbinger, the Christian Baptist or Lard's Quarterly and was perfectly familiar with such books as the lives of Campbell, Scott, and John Smith. Most of all he knew the Bible, the Prophets, the Psalms, the writings of Paul. When the pastor would say, "Will Bro. Aleck read the 10th of Romans?" or "the 34th Psalm?" or "the 20th chapter of Revelation?" he would stand and repeat without book or prompting whatever passage might be called for.

Best and noblest was his Christian character and life. How he lived always in communion with his Maker, how he stored up in mind and heart the imperishable riches of the inspired Word, how he lifted us to the throne in his prayers so simple and reverent and beautiful, how he exhorted us in words of greatest wisdom, how day by day he lived these things—we that knew him can never forget. He saw not, yet he endured as seeing Him that is invisible. He loved children, especially the poor children, and would buy them clothing to attend Sunday-school, and books, and teach them music. To the poor and sick his ministrations were constant. He never married. In the happiness of all he shared, and specially was he in touch with all young life. People knew him as "The Judge," the little children called him "Uncle Aleck." Many of us that were so much younger spoke of him as "Aleck," for he was always one of us. So reverent was he that when they would write his will, "In the name of God, Amen." He said, "No; he would approach God through Christ," and so it was written, "In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, Amen!" and so modest was he that when he would throw twenty dollars into the offering he would divide it into small bills that no one might suspect him to be the giver. Four years ago he gave on the annuity plan $2,000 each to Hiram College, the Foreign and Home Society, and the Church Extension Fund; and in his will he remembered the church, the poor, his relatives, friends and domestics. Though blind, he was always useful and busied himself with the "chores" about the house and farm. In storm or night he never absented himself from the services of the sanctuary. The animals loved him. He rode a horse he called "Jin," which was a good deal like the Jinnees or Afreetes of the Arabian story. No one else could ride her or care for her in the stable. She would refuse to respond to any other call, but when she heard his voice she came at once to his caress, took the bit, and bore him carefully over the country roads for miles at the time without danger.

Two of his family survive: his brother William Newcomer, an elder in the Beaver Creek Church, and his blind sister, Miss Ellie, who was his life-long companion. It was a rare life he lived and a peaceful, painless death he died, and from the new house of worship, to be dedicated on the morrow, in the presence of a vast throng of friends and neighbors, his body was borne to its last resting place. It was an hour of victory. Life was sweet to him—birds, flowers, sunshine, the laughter of little children, the ministry of friends, yet he had that which is better; he had reached the city that hath foundations; he had heard the voice of One who said of old, "Receive thy sight; thy faith hath saved thee;" he had looked upon the Lord he loved. After all how good is God. This man could say:

"On my bended knee
I recognize thy purpose clearly seen;
My vision thou hast dimmed, that I may see Thyself, thyself alone."

The Vision and the Reality

By M. B. Ryan

It was long ago, in the distant east. Night had fallen and quiet brooded over land and deep. In a town by the sea some travelers were sleeping, weary with their journey. They had been laboring in the distant province of Galatia. Intending to spend some time in neighboring provinces they had been hindered in their plans and hurried on, by what seemed a divine impulse, until the blue waters of the Ægean burst upon their vision, and they found themselves in the seaport town of Troas. All about them was storied ground. Not far off was the plain of Troy where Homer's heroes had wrought their glorious deeds. Xerxes had passed this way with his myriads of Orientals when he had attempted to conquer Greece. Alexander the Great had come here to kneel at the tomb of Achilles until his spirit was fired by the spirit of the heroes of the past. Julius Cæsar had come here after one of his greatest victories. The lofty range of Ida on the east had looked down on many of the greatest men and events of history up to that time.

The wearied travelers in Troas may not have been interested in these events of the past. They were men of a despised race. In the estimation of the nations they would be considered men of rude culture and narrow sympathies. Even by their own people, the Jews, they were considered fanatics and reprobates. They had adopted the heresy of Jesus the Nazarene. They were going about preaching what they called his gospel, a story that was a stumbling-block to the Jews and foolishness to the Greeks.

The chief one of these men had nothing about him that could be supposed to attract men. His enemies said, and he did not deny it, that his bodily presence was weak and his speech of no account. His own confession indicates that at about this very time he had been afflicted with some physical malady which had increased his debility and his uncomeliness. Neither from personal considerations, nor from what he had to offer, was this a man who would be supposed to be in demand.

But wait! In the quiet of that night at Troas, this man sees a vision. Across the sea, by whose shore he is resting, there stands a man, and his face is eastward. He is looking toward Troas, and toward the chamber where Paul, the Jew, the Christian apostle, is resting. He sees Paul, and beckons to him.

What can this man want? He, too, stands on storied ground. Around him are places and names that remind him of a great past. Behind him are the territories over which Philip of Macedon and his great son Alexander reigned, and the centuries of Macedonian glory and Grecian light and splendor. Over there have transpired many of the finest and greatest things man has ever done. Great poems like those of Homer; great philosophies like those of Plato and Aristotle; great works of art like those of Phidias; great architecture like that of the Parthenon,—these have been born or have come to ripeness and power there. There was nothing which human wisdom and genius and courage and strength could do to satisfy the heart and fill the life with good, that had been missed in the splendid program of existence which had been wrought out on that famous stage of human action.

What then can this representative of so proud and perfect a civilization want of the little Jew in Troas? Hark! It is not a taunt of his Jewish blood: It is not a boast of the splendid fame of Grecian deeds, such as might have been legitimate enough. It is a prayer! And the prayer is a confession of weakness and need and longing for succor. It is, "Come over into Macedonia and help us." It was the cry of a hungry soul, the appeal of those who were ready to perish.

The gospel which Paul preached satisfies man's soul. It may have been a stumbling-block to the Jew and foolishness to the Greek who believed not. But to the believer, whether Jew or Greek, it is the wisdom of God and the power of God. It offers man what he can find nowhere else, yet what he must have, a sufficient personal friend and helper, forgiveness, fellowship, the hope of glory. Paul's story was the story of the personal Savior in his life, his sufferings, his death, his resurrection, his exaltation, his spiritual presence and power; and it presented him as living and laboring and dying and triumphing and reigning in behalf of men, insuring them all needful guidance and cleansing and strength and comfort and final victory over death and the grave.

Now these were things Macedonia needed and Greece needed, notwithstanding their glorious past. There was nothing in their program of life which provided for these needs or assured them to men. And a man might be heir to all they had achieved and bequeathed, and yet be poor and ignorant and wretched and hopeless spiritually. Paul's story did not come into competition with the gifts of Greek civilization as a provision for man's needs. It rose above them, into a sphere that they never reached, yet in which man's needs were as real and as imperative as those to which Greek civilization ministered.

And this is the chief glory of the gospel. It comes in where all else fails. It reaches where all else proves too scant. It is God's provision for the spiritual needs of men as the grains and fruits of earth are for his body, and literature and science and philosophy are for his mind.

And because of this, all ages and all countries need it. No less than Macedonia do our cities and countries need the gospel to-day. No less than this man of Macedonia do our modern men need it. Our civilization is great. We have inherited the great things of Greece and Rome, and have added immensely to the list. We have literature and inventions and learning and achievements and possessions, that the ancients never dreamed of. Yet with all these, if they have only these, men are poor in respect of the things most necessary to happiness and true manhood. They may say, "I am rich and have gotten riches, and have need of nothing;" and they may not know that they are "wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked." Nevertheless their souls will grow hungry and cry for bread. And they can find satisfaction only in Christ. "I am the living bread which came down out of heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever." Paul's vision was true.

CUBS' FOOD

They Thrive on Grape-Nuts.

Herlthy babies don't cry and the well nourished baby that is fed on Grape-Nuts is never a crying baby. Many babies who cannot take any other food relish the perfect food Grape-Nuts and get well.

"My little baby was given up by three doctors who said that the condensed milk on which I had fed it had ruined the child's stomach. One of the doctors told me that the only thing to do would be to try Grape-Nuts, so I got some and prepared it as follows: I soaked 1 1/2 tablespoonfuls in one pint of cold water for half an hour then I strained off the liquid and mixed 12 teaspoonfuls of this strained Grape-Nuts juice with six teaspoonfuls of rich milk, put in a pinch of salt and a little sugar, warmed it and gave it to baby every two hours.

"In this simple, easy way I saved baby's life and have built her up to a strong, healthy child, rosy and laughing. The food must certainly be perfect to have such a wonderful effect as this. I can truthfully say I think it is the best food in the world to raise delicate babies on and is also a delicious, healthful food for grown-ups, as we have discovered in our family." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Grape-Nuts is equally valuable to the strong, healthy man or woman.

Grape-Nuts food stands for the true theory of health.

Federation of Churches and Christian Workers

[A paper read at the Southern California Convention, Long Beach, Cal., and published by special request of the convention.]

By J. W. Utter

My first word upon this theme shall be in the way of an examination into the origin, the purposes and achievements of this movement which we call Church Federation. Other movements, very similar in their purposes and organization, have existed previous to church federation. For example, the National Council of England, the Evangelical Council of Italy, and, in our own country, the Evangelical Alliance and the Interdenominational Commission of Maine.

"The Federation of Churches and Christian Workers" was organized in New York City in 1896; in New Haven, Conn., in 1898; in Hartford, Conn., in 1900. Many other city organizations and state organizations followed later, and the national "Federation of Churches and Christian Workers" was completed Feb. 6, 1901, in the city of Philadelphia. This movement differs from other nearly-related movements in this particular, that while other movements have sought a union of denominations for the purpose of co-operation, this organization seeks a federation of individual churches for the same purpose.

Josiah Strong characterizes the former as federation at the top, while he calls the movement under present discussion, federation at the bottom. Quoting now from its official literature, I notice that the government of the federation shall be vested in a council. This council shall be composed of the pastor and two delegates from each church in the federation. The council shall have no authority over the churches, or any of them, its powers shall be simply advisory and executive. No compulsion is possible in any case.

Further it is stated, "It is no ecclesiastical machine. It has no control over the churches. It cannot force a church to do what it is reluctant to do." It only affords a means by which the spirit of brotherhood, so beautifully displayed, may find fuller expression, and the work now being done may be systematized, and rendered more effective.

Purpose.

The purpose, or the purposes, of this organization may be rightly and clearly understood by a brief reference to their published documents. Under Article 2 of their model constitution we have the following statement: "The object of the federation is the promotion of acquaintance, fellowship, and effective co-operation among the several churches in order that their essential unity may be manifested, that the evangelization of the city may be more systematically accomplished, that a means may be found of expressing the Christian sentiment of the community in regard to moral issues, that the various Christian and benevolent activities of the city may be more completely co-ordinated, and that other appropriate ends may be secured." The leading purposes are well summarized by President Alfred Perry, of Marietta, Ohio. "The work of federation," he observes, "follows two main lines, or falls into two chief departments." The most fundamental is that of evangelization. How to reach effectively with the gospel every individual in the community is the problem which presses upon the churches. The other chief department of the Federation will be along the line of civic reform. The Christian forces of the city are disorganized and are at a great disadvantage in any conflict with the forces of evil. The saloon is organized and has influence in politics; bad men in office advance evil ends, while the cause of righteousness in all our cities waits for the consolidation of the Christian forces of the city, and for some recognized instrumentality for expressing the united Christian sentiment of the community in regard to moral issues.

In the report of the National Committee of Church Federation they say: "The unit of this federation movement is the linking together of all the local churches in a given area for the accomplishment of common ends, the bringing of the healing message and the helpful ministry of the gospel to every soul and, by united action, consolidate the forces of righteousness in the interests of moral and civic reform. Here again we have the two chief purposes of this federation movement clearly stated to be that of evangelization and the advancement of moral and civic reform. So much for the theory of church federation, but what has been accomplished and what is the condition of the movement to-day? Organization has been perfected in twenty-four of our cities, aggregating a population of about six millions. State organizations have been perfected in the following states: New York, Ohio, Massachusetts, Nebraska, Wisconsin and Michigan, while the states of Illinois, Minnesota, S. Dakota, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Rhode Island and Pennsylvania are on the way towards organization. In four cities, viz., Toledo, O., Albany, N. Y., Auburn, Me., and Defiance, O., within the past few months, volunteer visitors numbering over two thousand, from the federated churches, have been engaged in a house-to-house visitation. In other cities a systematic and frequent visitation is carried on by which every unchurched family is discovered, with an outstretched hand of welcome and sympathy. A canvass made in the city of New York, (in which our Brother Philputt was engaged) discovered that one-fourth of all the Protestant ministers in New York were calling only on families connected with their several churches, and all living within an area of eighteen blocks, while one-third of all the Protestant families of that same district were without church homes. Other work, such as the following, has been done in New York City. Philanthropic institutions have been placed in needy districts. The increase of the effectiveness of relief and reform work by the adoption of locality lines for the co-operative care of the entire community, permitting also the discovery of vicious influences, wherever existing in a district, and securing the dislodgment of the same by the united blows of a co-operative church. And the plans are already formed by which the work of evangelization and moral reform will be carried, within two years, to every square foot of Greater New York, and time would fail me to tell of the effective work of house-to-house visitation, of simultaneous mission work, of benevolent work, of moral and civic reform prosecuted in the past few years in the cities, especially of Chicago, of Philadelphia, of Hartford, Conn., of Pittsburg, Easton and Erie, Pa., of Cambridge, Mass., and Toledo, O.

In all these cities, and many others, the plans and purposes of the General Federation movement have been carried out, and we are assured that the utmost harmony has prevailed, and that the results everywhere have been most gratifying.

We now pass from that which has been simply historical and explanatory in its nature to a consideration of the question itself. And first let me state and also examine, very briefly, some of the objections which have been and may be urged against this movement from the standpoint of the Disciples of Christ.

The one which is perhaps the most frequently urged by our people is that by joining in this federation we thereby acknowledge the validity of denominationalism. We unite with the denominations, it is said, upon terms of equality, and thus tacitly endorse the legality of their position. That while we have been for all these years protesting against sectarianism, that now in this way we seem to lay down our arms and concede their right to exist as they are, and join in with them on terms of equality. There may be something in this objection, but I do not claim to be good authority on this point, but it appears to me from all that I can gather concerning the grounds upon which we unite and the purposes of our federation, that the questions of inferiority or superiority, or that of endorsement of each other's doctrinal positions, do not properly come into view. But recognizing, as we do, the Christian character of our brethren in other religious bodies, and

Jewish Evangelization Facts

BY BERNARD GREENSTEIN

The most marvelous fact about the Jews is that never in their forty-century career have they been a numerous people. This is simply unexplainable upon a strictly naturalistic basis, in view of their many well-known characteristics, such as very early marriages, unusual fecundity, comparative freedom from destructive vices and diseases, remarkably low death-rate, highly developed racial instinct of self-preservation, and a peculiarly high morality.

We deliberately defy any infidel on earth to explain the Jew in a strictly naturalistic basis in view of these historically well authenticated facts.

Jewish statistics are a difficult proposition for many obvious reasons: their long, universal dispersion in countries known and unknown, systematic governmental interferences with statistical work inspired by a deep-rooted anti-semitism, and their own former aversion to statistics as a mark of national grief.

Zionism, on the Jewish side, has been a powerful inspiration to the gathering of Jewish statistics. On the Christian side a new interest in Jewish evangelization has led to a comprehensive effort at Jewish statistics.

According to Dr. Adler, editor of the Jewish Year Book 1901-1902, there are 10,766,749 Jews in 37 countries of both hemispheres. They are roughly distributed as follows: Europe, 9,000,000; North and South America, 1,100,000; Asia, 330,000; Australia and Oceania, 20,000.

In our own land there were probably 3,000 Jews in 1818; in 1900 there were 1,058,135. During 20 years preceding July 1, 1901, 644,966 immigrated through the New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore offices. In 1901, 44,208 Jews passed through the New York office alone.

There are probably 55,000 Jews emigrating to America from Central Europe every year, and there is a strong likelihood of this number being augmented to nearly 100,000 Jews per annum on account of the late Roumania and Kishenev incidents, which really are the heart-throbs of a diabolical anti-semitism in Central and Eastern Europe. It would not surprise me in the least if 2,000,000 foreign Jews would come to America in eight years.

The general observations deducible from these figures are: 1. The Jewish people are thoroughly scattered; the bulk of the nation is in Europe—Russia, 5,189,000 (1897), and Austria-Hungary 1,866,837 (1900), being the largest centers of population. 2. The tide of Jewish emigration is strongly in our direction. 3. The tide is increasing at a phenomenal rate.

What has the actual Jewish Christian work been in the past 100 years?

England was the first country to undertake evangelization among the Jews. She began in 1809, and now the English Church, through her powerful ally, the London Society for Promoting Christianity Among the Jews, has 52 mission stations, 199 missionaries, with $225,600 invested. London, England, has 47 missions, 146 missionaries; their combined annual income is $167,500. God bless England! In all the British Isles there are 120 mission stations, with 481 missionaries, and an annual income of $503,600.

In Europe, the greatest center of Jewish population, there are only 29 mission stations, 40 missionaries, and only $64,950 annual income. God pity Europe!

In Africa, among nearly 550,000 Jews, there are only two mission stations, two missionaries, and $1,500 invested annually. In Asia and Australia there are 15 missions, 45 missionaries, and $48,000 annual income.

We observe that England did noble pioneer work in this most important part of universal evangelization, and has kept it up, increasing stations, men and money all through the years; that in the neediest parts of Central and Eastern Europe missions are rare, men are few, and money is scarce.

In America there are 47 mission stations, 80 missionaries, and an annual income of only $54,950. New York City alone has 10 mission societies, 18 mission stations, 35 missionaries, and $30,200 annual income. Roughly speaking, three-fifths of this money is being spent on nearly one-half of the Jewish population in America.

I may say the figures are not strictly accurate, but the very next thing to it. The total will amount to 213 stations, 648 men, and practically an annual income of $673,000. These figures were compiled by Rev. Mr. Thompson, of New York.

In closing, the trophies of Jewish evangelization are almost incredible for so proverbially a stubborn people. In the past century, according to a Jewish Christian statistician in Germany, 72,740 Jews have been baptized into the Protestant religion, and these with their children at present aggregate approximately 120,000 Jewish Christians. This authority also declares that the Roman Catholic Church has received 57,300 Jews, and the Greek Church 74,500, making a grand total of 204,540 Jews received into the various Christian Churches since the beginning of the 19th century.

England has 250 rectors and preachers, America probably about 125 ministers and preachers. According to Rev. Mr. Thompson, there "is one Protestant convert to every 156 of the present Jewish population."

We cannot fail to observe that America is far behind the times in this field; that the American work is disproportionate; that Jewish missions are comparatively the most fruitful of missions in general; and that Jews, when converted, do not fail to get into working order.

A man was asked, "Have you joined the church?" He replied, "No! the dying thief didn't join the church, and he went to heaven." When he was asked as to whether he had been baptized, had taken the sacrament, had been engaged in active service for others; he would reply that the dying thief was saved without doing any of these things. Finally, he was asked, "How much do you give to missions?" He said, "I'm just like the dying thief; he never gave anything to missions." His questioner answered, "Just like the dying thief, are you? But there's one difference at least—he was a dying thief, and you are a living thief."

TWO TIPS

And Both Winners.

A man gets a friendly tip now and then that's worth while.

A Nashville man says: "For many years I was a perfect slave to coffee, drinking it every day and all the time I suffered with stomach trouble and such terrific nervousness that at times I was unable to attend to business and life seemed hardly worth living. I attributed my troubles to other causes than coffee and continued to drench my system with this drug. Finally I got so bad I could not sleep, my limbs were weak and trembling and I had a constant dread of some impending danger and the many medicines I tried, failed to help me at all.

"One day a friend told me what Postum had done for her husband and advised me to quit coffee and try it, but I would not do so. Finally another friend met me on the street one day and after talking about my health he said, 'You try Postum Cereal Coffee and leave coffee alone,' adding that his nervous troubles had all disappeared when he gave up coffee and began to drink Postum.

"This made such a great impression on me that I resolved to try it, although I confess I had little hopes. However, I started in, and to my unbounded surprise, in less than two weeks I was like another person. All of my old troubles are now gone and I am a strong, healthy, living example of the wonderful rebuilding power of Postum. It is a fine drink as well as a delicious beverage, and I know it will correct all coffee ills; I know what a splendid effect it had on me to give up coffee and drink Postum." True Basis of Christian Unity

BY A. M. MOTT

1. The Bible. The Bible is the word of God, containing God's revealed mind and will to man, and is its own interpreter; and so perfect that nothing can be added thereto or taken from without destroying its harmony.

2. The Son. That the Lord Jesus Christ is the only begotten Son of God, the Mediator, Teacher, Supreme Law-giver, the crucified, buried and risen Lord, possessing all authority in heaven and in earth in order to redeem man from his alienated state, that he might return to his God and find pardon or favor. 3. The one Church must have the one creed, in answer to the prayer of Christ, that all be one in him. This oneness is necessary for the conversion of the world (John 17:21). 4. The dissolution of all party names and creeds, and simply to take the name "Christian," for ye are the bride of Christ; so take his name. 5. Immersion the sole baptism, to be administered on confession of faith in Christ Jesus. Baptize believers only, as commanded by the Lord Jesus (Matt. 28:18-20). "And Jesus came and spake unto them (the apostles) saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, (by reason of this authority) and teach the whole creation, baptizing them in (into) the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have said unto you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." 6. Beginning at Jerusalem (Luke 24:44-49 and Acts 2). Throw the whole force of the Church into destroying sin, and not the building up of a denominational wall of prejudice and sectarianism and let the Pentecostal message of salvation be the gospel of safety and leave the side-tracks to the devil and his children. 7. The Holy Spirit as Teacher and Comforter. The Holy Spirit was sent in Christ's name to consummate the system of salvation, to teach his apostles whose commission was to the whole creation (John 14:26). This spirit God gives to them that obey him (Acts 5:32), whom the world cannot receive (John 14:17). 8. Christ "is the head of the body, the Church: who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence," "of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." "For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one spirit." To those under assumed names God calls "come out of her my people" (Rev. 18:4).

9. "The Lord's day, or Sunday, commonly called the first day of the week, to be observed by all in commemoration of the glorious triumph of our Lord over death and the grave." As the Jewish Sabbath ended when Christ on the cross proclaimed, "It is finished," the members of Christ's body should come together on this day with a higher and holier significance, for prayer and worship, as they partake of the sacrament in commemoration of his broken body and shed blood for the sins of the world.

10. The Scriptures clearly teach regeneration, or the new birth; a spiritual change from a carnal to a Christian life. This regeneration of the soul, with all its affections, is effected by the spirit and grace of God, and is called the new birth, for the soul must become Christlike, in his likeness.

11. Christ will come again as judge; his coming will be as the lightning; and every eye shall see him. Those who have purified their souls by obeying the truth (1 Pet. 1:22), shall enjoy him. He will take vengeance on them that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, separating the just from the unjust, giving each one as his reward shall be, and gathering his bride, the Church, home.

12. As man is created with a will, over which he has full control, which gives to him the power of choice, he therefore is a free moral agent and is accountable for his own destiny, for weal or woe. These elementary gospel truths furnish the Bible ground for the union of Christendom.

Prayer.

Jeremy Taylor said: "The man who is often engaged in prayer will grow rich in God's favor, for this is our traffic with heaven, and brings thence the most precious commodities; and he who, on the ships of desire, makes the most voyages to that land of spices and pearls, will be sure to improve his stock most, and have most of heaven upon earth."

Prayer is natural to man. It is true that when men are at ease, in robust health, and the current of life is running smoothly, they may have but few thoughts of God, and no thought whatever of praying to him. But when troubles come, an incurable disease takes hold upon this frail body, and human resources all fail and human helplessness becomes apparent to him and to his friends, it is then that he turns to God and cries out to him as instinctively as the little child rushes into its father's arms in the moment of danger.

What observant and kind-hearted physician has not noticed this repeatedly, when engaged in the performance of the duties of his chosen profession? This instinct is not the result of education in a Christian land; for it is heard from men of every class, from the hovel of the poor to the palace of the rich. Sir Walter Raleigh one day asked a favor of Queen Elizabeth; she replied, "Raleigh, when will you leave off begging?" He answered, "When your Majesty leaves off giving." Let us then never leave off asking of God, who is ever giving, and ever willing to give.

CLAYTON KEITH.

The poorest reason a man ever has for voting with a party is the fact that he has always voted with it; and it is the commonest reason.

Levity is often less foolish and gravity less wise than each of them appears.

"The Hills of God."

By Walter Scott Hayden.

At crimson glow of sunset time I gaze
Across the western plain on distant peaks

With radiance crowned. The gates of Heaven seem there

And glory bright, faint glimpses of a land

That basks and glows in light ineffable.

Are not these heights the very Hills of God?

I cry. If all things beat with life divine,

From tiny flower to mighty throbbing
sun,

If beauty is God's living garment bright,

Then here His presence is, supremely here.

Again I hold within my hand the Book
Of books with story old of Gerizim.
And Ebal, Horeb's flaming bush,
Sinai

With thunders loud and Tables of the Law,

Of Hermon's dews and Olivet so dear
To man since Christ was here, and Calvary,

Most sacred of the hills of earth. Are these?

Surely these are in truth the Hills of God.

But as I speak I know my words are vain.

"Not in this mountain, but in truth,"
He said;

And men may walk these hills without a thought

Of God, nor see His presence, hear
His voice.

No place is full of God for us, if heart
No altar has, no sacred shrine within.

Wherever men surmount the heights of love,

Of holy aspiration and of prayer,
Where summits of self-sacrifice and deeds

Heroic are, there rise the Hills of God.

News From Many Fields

Columbia, Missouri.

The University of Missouri is opening with a larger attendance than last year by nearly 100 at the present time. Many old students will be in next week. There was a fine gathering on convocation morning, Sept. 8. President Jesse gave a wholesome talk, in the course of which he said, "No student, in fact no one, can develop what is best in him if he does not believe in God. I mean every word of this and repeat it. No one can reach the supreme height of his natural ability without acknowledged allegiance to a higher power."

The university Y. M. C. A. is very active. Several young men were on the ground a week before the opening planning their work. They have secured work for poor young men amounting to above $1,300.

Christian College opens next week, and reports a large attendance promised. Stevens College and the Normal Academy are prosperous. The latter is building to accommodate several hundred students.

The Bible College rejoices to see the ministerial students all back, and new ones promised, and a growing number of university students planning to take Bible work. A feature of this year's work will be a series of lectures on the historical biography of the Old Testament, to be delivered by the dean in the church auditorium on Sunday mornings. The pastor, C. H. Winders, and Superintendent Emberson are enthusiastic in the organization of the work, and a large class is expected.

Columbia anticipates a large gathering at the state meeting, and Pastor Winders and his committees are shaping matters excellently for their entertainment.

Washington State.

Washington churches are rallying for a splendid campaign. Evangelist Morris has removed his family from Walla Walla to Sumner, a beautiful village a few miles out from Tacoma, and will devote himself to evangelizing west of the mountains. David Husband is now pastor of the Sumner church and plans are being made for him to gather up the scattered members of what was once a congregation in Puyallup, a town three miles west of Sumner.

L. F. Stephens and wife are now in a meeting at Castle Rock. From this meeting they will go to eastern Washington, and devote themselves to evangelistic work.

Whitman county keeps Evangelist McConnell busy and report favorably of his work.

President of the board, J. T. Eshelman, will begin a meeting in Olympia about Oct. 1. This church in the state capitol was started by Brother Eshelman while he was a member of the State Senate from Yakima county. W. S. Crockett is the beloved pastor at Olympia.

Neal McCallum has resigned and closed his work at Ellensburg. He will locate somewhere on Puget Sound, most likely in Tacoma.

A. C. Vail, of North Yakima, reports the work prosperous and some splendid additions to the church recently. It so happened that A. C. Vail, W. S. Crockett, J. T. Eshelman and the writer spent an afternoon together a few days ago, and in talking of the work it was remarked that all had served the North Yakima church as pastor. We are unanimous in declaring it one of the best churches in the state.

The Church Extension offering is now being made. The books for 1903 will soon close. What will be the record of your church, dear reader? Have you fellowship in all of our world-wide missionary movements? Times are good. Not many can plead poverty this year. May the Lord so open the hearts of our people that they may give heed to the things being preached by those who yearn for the evangelizing and housing of the multitudes now without the Christ.

Will you meet me at Detroit? This is the question of to-day. Many are asking it and many are saying yes. The writer expects to attend and there may be others from the First Church. I have the assurance that some will go from Eastern Washington. It would be a glorious thing if the watchword of the committee could be realized. "A representative from each church" would mean a mighty convention and a great uplift to our churches, all of our churches or their return.

R. E. Dunlap, the apostle of prohibition, has associated with him now Brother and Sister Webb, the well-known and deservedly popular singers. They are meeting with good success.
Tacoma. MORTON L. ROSE.

Nebraska.

W. W. Divine has located at Kearney, and will divide his time between that city and Lexington until they can both be made to support a man all the time. This we hope to do within the year. Bro. Divine is welcome to Nebraska. A reception was tendered to him and Mrs. Divine on the 15th.

The last report from Memphis, where Austin and McVay were at work, was that 36 had been added. This was on the 10th, and the meeting was to continue until the 13th at least. This means a new congregation.

The meeting at Blue Springs, D. G. Wagoner and Louis R. Smith, closed on the 6th with three added. The rainy weather swept down on them and made the tent very uncomfortable.

A. L. Ogden began his fourth term of labor for the N. C. M. S., on the 13th, at Elm Creek, where we have a number of brethren. We hope by this effort to establish the work in good condition. Albert E. Pettett has been preaching out there to the unorganized Disciples.

Z. O. Doward went to Chicago last week on a business trip. They are planning to dedicate at Grand Island on Oct. 11. J. W. Hilton is to be master of ceremonies.

The church at Gross expects to dedicate their new house at the same time.

John T. Smith reports himself well pleased with his work in Reserve, Kan., and that he wants to go with the Nebraska contingent to Detroit.

J. W. Hilton will be the pastor of the Bethany congregation from hence forward. This will be a great step forward for this church, as they have been doing without pastoral oversight, and the work is a great one.

Hugh Lomax preaches regularly at Blue Vale.

Four by letter at York on the 6th. C. S. Paine occupied the pulpit at North Side, Omaha, and at Irvington again on the 6th. Chas. D. Richards has located at Douglas.

J. H. Bicknell's meeting at Dewese had nine confessions in nine days. Meeting still continues. W. E. Gray, is the regular preacher.

The minutes are now being printed, and we hope to get them into the mails promptly. The matter was extensive, and required much care in its editing. We are believing that the book will be a credit to our work when completed.

Thus far we have reports from ten who will go to the National Convention at Detroit. This needs attention promptly. Let me hear from you as soon as practicable. We want to have a representative number from Nebraska, and Detroit is a delightful place to visit. The convention program is in the papers, and it promises to be complete and helpful. The reports from the different boards will be full of encouragement. There is victory in the air. Let us go up a hundred strong and do our part in making this a great convention. Write me that you will go if possible. The fare from Lincoln is $22.40 for the round trip, and the additional fare from your place. From Omaha, $21.50.

Cotner opened with a large number of new students this year. The train committees were prominently in evidence at the depots, and did good service. This was a wise move. Now let us boost for the street-car line, and then we will be fixed. Send your children to our own schools. It pays best in the long run.

The secretary spent Lord's day, 13th, at Charleston. We hope to revive this work. They have a neat little house and well appointed. The gospel is needed there and we must find the way.

Pulpit Supply Committee reorganized on the 9th at Lincoln. W. W. Slabaugh was re-elected chairman. W. A. BALDWIN.

Southwest Missouri.

On Sunday, Sept. 6, the writer assisted Bro. J. R. Miller and the church at Pepsin, Mo., in dedicating their new building to the worship and service of God. Less than a year ago Bro. A. J. Williams, our district evangelist held a meeting in a schoolhouse in that vicinity and this house is the result. It is commodious and has modern arrangements. Three services were held and good audiences attended them all. Brother Williams preached on Saturday night and ably assisted in getting pledges. Enough was raised to insure the completion of the house, and at the evening service the building was solemnly set apart to the service of God. This work had the bitter opposition of our brethren who oppose the use of instrumental music, etc., in the church. Henceforth there will be a Bible-school and Endeavor Society in this place for the training of the young people who attend. Bro. J. R. Miller, who was raised here and who goes back to the Bible College to finish his education, and who has led in this work, deserves great praise for his perseverance and untiring energy in seeing this work brought to a successful conclusion.

Bro. Perry T. Martin, of Aurora, has been compelled to resign his work on account of ill health. He is now in Indiana. His stay in Southwest Missouri has been short, but long enough for him to win a high place in the esteem of the brethren as a consecrated worker and a preacher of great ability. We are sorry to lose him, and shall pray for his speedy recovery.

Brother Rothwell, of Galena, Kan., has also broken down in health and is away for a rest to see if he can again take up his work. Still there are some people who say that a preacher has no work to do.

The Central Church, Springfield, has as yet not selected a successor to W. E. Harlow. Brother Harlow, with Brother Ridenour as singer, begins a meeting at the First Church, Joplin, on Oct. 4.

W. A. Moore, of St. Louis, is in a meeting with the South Joplin Church, with six added the first five days and a fine prospect for a great harvest. W. F. TURNER.

Missouri Bible-School Notes.

To those asking about a third campaign movement will say that we are going to borrow from Tuxedo and have the "hustlers" against the "rustlers," with the following good points: Attendance, three points; punctuality, three points; Bibles, two points; offering, two points; new pupils, two points. This will help us emphasize some things that should be urged upon our schools. But have the red and blue campaign first and then the other.

R. B. Havener in his helping the brethren at Elkton sees a new house under way, and has hope of housing them before cold weather. Meeting going on.

L. G. Wilhoite is now superintendent at Holden, and our Brother Murphy of the First, St. Louis, will have the oversight of the congregation Oct. 1. The work will move and you will hear of it, for he is a Bible-school and Endeavorer.

Oklahoma, where your secretary went to the help of the brethren, intends having a state Bible school man. D. T. Morgan was elected president of the board for the twelfth year, and J. M. Monroe continues as corresponding secretary.

Missouri should be proud of the army of faithful men and women of God sent into Oklahoma, such as S. D. Dutcher, J. T. Ogle, Robt. Morton, J. G. Creason, A. D. Bourn, Roy Moore, Fielding Vaughn, W. H. Williams and their families, and Isom Roberts, who is still traveling alone, poor soul. These are all great workers in the new land.

W. A. Moore has opened up his work at South Joplin with fine prospects, having 40 additions in ten days and the house crowded and there's more to follow, and the end will be a new pastor and another strong church in Joplin. Good for Turner and Baker, one of whom plans and the other does for Christ.

Lees Summit is without doubt one of the best small schools in Missouri, always at the front in the Master's work, and the results are plain in the good additions and excellent workers developed therein. Your servant has their apportionment in full.

A representative from every school and Endeavor at Detroit, for we are to inaugurate the new national Bible-school and Endeavor superintendent at that time and want you with us. It is one of the most important steps ever taken by the Disciples of Christ in this great work for the Son of God.

Have you ordered boys' and girls' rally day supplies from B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio, and for any Sunday between now and Dec. 1. Order immediately and make it the great day of the year for Christ and native land.

T. J. Head is now pushing the work at Bloomfield with a great prospect for good.

Second quarter now due and you have not sent in the first. Send both now.

Wisconsin Yearly Report.

Previous to the year 1902 we followed the old established course of maintaining a state evangelist who went about preaching in the most needy places with such immediate success that they were generally enabled to make encouraging reports, sometimes quite glowing. But in the absence of the evangelist, the disintegrating forces resumed their work; so that at the year's end there was little if any advance.

In October, 1901, the beginning of our business year for 1902, a change of policy was inaugurated. With our calculated resources of $400 from the churches in the state, $400 from the home mission fund, and $400 from the C. W. B. M., and something further that might be raised in the working field, we arranged for continuous service in nearly all the weak points. Some of the contiguous were grouped together and served by one man, so that our progress could be steadily maintained. On this change of policy last year's work showed only good indication. This year we are thankful to say good results are shown.

Reports show that we have 29 congregations in the state, a total membership of 1,387, being a net gain over last year of 144, or over 11 1/2 per cent. Also 26 Bible-schools with a total enrollment of 1,328; seven Christian Endeavor societies with about 160 members. Five new churches have been organized during the past year, namely, Martintown, Superior, Edson Center, Eggan and Seymour, the last two being Norwegian congregations with a combined membership of 87. Martintown was organized by our veteran preaching brother, Melton Wells, last spring and has a membership of 52. All these are thrifty and hopeful, and are the principal showing for our small missionary expenditure, only $1,588.67. The results though also small are great in proportion.

A more detailed statement will show our general conditions more fully.

An Ancient Foe

To health and happiness is Scrofula—as ugly as ever since time immemorial.

It causes bunches in the neck, disfigures the skin, inflames the mucous membrane, wastes the muscles, weakens the bones, reduces the power of resistance to disease and the capacity for recovery, and develops into consumption.

"A bunch appeared on the left side of my neck. It caused great pain, was lanced, and became a running sore. I went into a general decline. I was persuaded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and when I had taken six bottles my neck was healed, and I have never had any trouble of the kind since." Mrs. K. T. SNYDER, Troy, Ohio.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills will rid you of it, radically and permanently, as they have rid thousands.

The receipts are about $200 greater than last year's and the balance about $420 greater. This, however, will soon be called for by the increasing necessities of the work.

As to the work done—

There have been eleven missionaries employed in whole or part time, laboring a total of 1,128 days and preaching 419 sermons, having worked at 12 points, 79 additions, 28 by baptism and otherwise 51.

The places which received aid were Ladysmith, Pardeeville, Twin Grove, West Lima, Bloom City, Viroqua, Manitowoc, Chippewa Falls, Seymour, Eggan, Rib Lake and Superior. The greater portion of these have been assisted in the support of pastors, a few being helped to evangelistic work only.

The new and encouraging feature is the great advance in the work among the Scandinavians, which was assisted by the American Home Board. Our new policy will be continued. We expect much further advances this year.

Our yearly state meeting which has closed this evening, Sept. 18, began on the 15th and was held in the home of the Milwaukee congregation. The number of delegates has not been so large as on some other occasions, but the devotion to the missionary business in hand and the attendance and attention to the interesting program of addresses, Bible studies, devotional exercises, etc., has been exceptionally good. Bro. Knox Taylor, with his superb object lesson charts interested and instructed us exceedingly. We had most inspiring addresses, first from Bro. D. T. Denman, of the First Baptist Church, this city, on "Thou Shalt Love the Lord thy God." Also, several by Bro. E. B. Ranshaw, of the American Home Board, and Bro. D. N. Wetzell, of Footville. Sister Kelly gave us some of her inimitable talks and one interesting address on Junior Work. Bro. Thurman, of Green Bay, as president of the association, presided in his kindly way and business-like manner. The homes of the Milwaukee congregation were free homes to the delegates, the sisters furnishing dinner and tea at the church, thus keeping delegates together always ready for business and ready to fill in the intermissions by renewing or making those delightful acquaintances, so delightful to those who are engaged in such heroic work as is necessary to be in Wisconsin.

Our new board for the current year is the old one re-elected, with the exception of Bro.

Kreidler, who at his most persistent request was left off; Bro. D. N. Wetzell, of Footville, taking his place as corresponding secretary.

The presidency of the C. W. B. M. was changed from Sister Tucker to Sister E. J. Taylor, both of Milwaukee.

On the whole we had a most pleasant, inspiring and uplifting yearly meeting, the workers retiring to their respective fields determined to push ahead to greater achievements.

W. H. TROUT.

Illinois C. W. B. M.

This association held its annual convention in Eureka, Aug. 31 and Sept. 1. The reports showed a year of faithful service by the state board with good results; but the results were far from what they would have been with the earnest co-operation of the nineteen-twentieths of the sisters in the state who are not enlisted in the work. With the hope of gaining some of these, the work this year will be under the motto, "Go forward, each one win one." The state board and district secretaries will make a special effort to organize new auxiliaries and children's societies.

A new phase to be introduced into the work is the holding of a series of missionary institutes at central points. The aim will be to hold them at such times and places as will practically reach the women in all the churches.

In these institutes instruction will be given in practical methods of auxiliary work; objects of our organization—national, state, district, auxiliary, children's societies, and fields of our work. Miss Lura V. Thompson will assist Miss Hale in holding institutes.

The offering made to the state and national treasuries during the year amounted to more than $10,000, an average of nearly $3 per member. The special offerings for the new year are to be $1,500 for Chicago missions, $600 for the salary of Mrs. Bertha Lohr, teacher at Bilaspur, India, and $300 for the salary of Miss Bertha Westrup, teacher at Monterey, Mexico.

An interesting conference on united mission study and missionary social union was led by Mrs. C. C. Brown, state president of the Pres. W. F. M. Society. The fact that the missionary society has as good intellectual and social features as any other literary societies and above these the spiritual was emphasized.

A unique feature of the convention was a C. W. B. M. conference held by six pastors, in which they told how the C. W. B. M. helps the pastors, how the pastors help the C. W. B. M., some of the benefits and opportunities brought through the Tidings and C. W. B. M. day, and the young people's work and Junior Builders. And recognizing the fact that nothing is perfect, closed the conference with some friendly, helpful criticism.

W. M. Forrest, recently returned from India, gave the convention two addresses on the history and condition of India, presenting some of the great needs of the people and the opportunities that are now open for giving them the word of life.

The state officers were re-elected, Miss Lola Hale accepting the office of superintendent of young people's work only till her successor can be secured.

The Records.

The lessons of the fourth quarter cover the history of the reigns of David and Solomon—the Augustan age of the Hebrew monarchy. We have two parallel records of the history of this period. The reign of David is covered by the entire book of 2 Samuel and also by 1 Chronicles, chapters 11 to 29 (the end of the book). The reign of Solomon is described in 1 Kings, chapters 1-11, and a second account of it is given in 2 Chron., chapters 1-9. Samuel and Kings form a continuous narrative, with unity of literary style, historical method and point of view. In these respects the two books of Chronicles are also homogeneous, but they differ from Samuel and Kings. The author of Samuel and Kings was chiefly interested in the religious truths embodied in Hebrew history, especially these: that Jehovah has cared for Israel and given her all the blessings that she possesses, that fidelity to Jehovah is the only secret of prosperity, and that righteousness is essential to acceptable service of God. The writer of Chronicles denies none of these things, but he writes from the point of view of the priests and his chief interest is in the ritual, the orders and courses of priests and in genealogies and long lists of names of officials. It is not that the two authors had different religious beliefs or that they necessarily wrote at widely separated times, but they were men of different temperaments, with different education, writing for different purposes and therefore emphasizing different things. For example, 1 Kings 5 tells us that David brought the ark up to Jerusalem and in that connection gives the incidents of the death of Uzza, David's dancing and his wife's protest. But 1 Chron. 13, 15 and 16 tells by name just what particular Levites made up the party which escorted the ark, and who were the singers and who played the cymbals and who played the psalteries and who played the harps, and with what ceremonies and sacrifices the ark was received in Jerusalem and what Levites were appointed to minister before it.

These two histories were not the only nor the earliest narratives of these events. There were certain books which are no longer extant and which were perhaps used as sources by the authors of Samuel, Kings and Chronicles. There were "The Book of the Acts of Solomon" (1 Kings 11:41), "The History of Nathan," "The Prophecy of Ahijah," and "The Visions of Iddo" (2 Chron. 9:29). There are several other lost books mentioned, such as "The Book of Jashar" and "The Book of the Wars of the Lord,"—all of which indicates that our Old Testament is by no means a complete collection of Hebrew literature, though it doubtless contains all which the divine wisdom intended for our use.

The Reign of David.

The greatest of all the Hebrew kings was David. He found the kingdom divided by a distinct line of cleavage between the northern and southern tribes and overrun by the victorious Philistines. His reign began as a vassal kingship over two tribes. He left the kingdom united, vastly enlarged, free, prosperous, rich, and more than ever committed to the pure worship of Jehovah. After the reunion of the northern and southern tribes (2 Sam. 5:1-3), David captured Jerusalem which, though lying within his territory, had been held as an apparently impregnable fortress by the tribe of Jebusites. Here David created a city and fixed his capital.

One of his first acts was to bring the ark up from the house of Abinadab at Baale-judah, to the capital. It was on this expedition that Uzza paid with his life the forfeit for his presumption (2 Sam. 6). David's reign was a time of many wars. Not only was the yoke of the Philistines thrown off, but there were successful wars of conquest against Edom, Ammon and Syria. The incident of Uriah and Bathsheba (2 Sam. 11, 12), shows how grossly a great and good man could sin. Absalom's conspiracy and revolt and final death were a great grief to David, and Sheba's rebellion further disturbed his peace. The numbering of Israel and the subsequent pestilence (2 Sam. 24) were a sorrow to his old age, and the attempted usurpation of Adonijah (1 Kings 1) cast a shadow over his death bed. David's life was far from peaceful. Probably he had less peace and pleasure as king than he would have had if he had remained an obscure shepherd at Bethlehem. But he did a great work in establishing the kingdom on a firm basis, he did much toward reducing to an orderly system the tabernacle service and the ministry of the priests and levites, and he poured forth the joys, the sorrows, the thanksgiving and the penitence of his soul in psalms which have comforted and uplifted believers in all ages.

The Reign of Solomon.

Solomon's reign was greater in splendor, though less in achievement, than that of David. To every nation there comes a time of flood-tide of prosperity, a time when all the seeds of past endeavor seem to ripen at once into a glorious harvest of visible and tangible results. Such was the age of Pericles in Athens, the reign of Augustus in Rome, the time of the Renaissance in Italy, the reign of Elizabeth in England, and such was the reign of Solomon in Israel. A marriage with an Egyptian princess gave standing among the nations, conquest widened Solomon's dominions, gold flowed into his treasury. The king himself, having chosen wisdom as his gift, became a fountain of justice and philosophy, dealing out shrewd judgments and coining the wisdom of his time into imperishable proverbs. The building of the temple was the crowning event of his reign, and much of the space devoted to his reign in both narratives is given to the description of this wonderful building and its dedication and the settling up of the ark in it. Visitors came from all quarters to see the wonders of Jerusalem, which was at once the Rome, the Paris and the London of that day. Among others came the queen of Sheba. In Solomon's latter years his wives multiplied as rapidly as his wealth. Many of them, married no doubt for political reasons, were heathen princesses. Their religions, perhaps also for reasons of state, were permitted in Israel. The compact with Jehovah was broken. The necessary condition of prosperity was therefore lost. Ruin could only be postponed, not prevented. Even in Solomon's lifetime the rebellions of Hadad, Rezon and Jeroboam gave token that his empire was about to crumble under the weight of its own corruption.

Such were the reigns of David and Solomon. It is suggested that the teacher spend some time in giving the class a vivid outline view of this period in which the lessons for this quarter lie.

The Lesson for the Day.

The Value of the Ark.

For many years prior to the beginning of David's reign the Ark of the Covenant had been at Baale-judah, otherwise known as Kirjath-baal or Kirjath-jearim, about seven miles northwest of Jerusalem. It was natural that David should desire to bring it up to his newly established capital at Jerusalem, because all Israel recognized it as the visible symbol of the presence of Jehovah. It was well understood that the national worship should center in the spot where the ark was kept. In the days of Samuel, when religious and political affairs had not been separated, the location of the ark fixed the seat of Israel's government, both political and religious. Since the establishment of the kingdom, religion and politics were more or less divorced. But David, with the eye of a statesman, saw that to center the worship as well as the government at Jerusalem would vastly strengthen his position and serve to unify his recently divided kingdom. This was the political value of the Ark of David.

Its religious value was that it gave definiteness to the popular thought of God, without sacrificing the dignity and holiness of the deity. The purpose of an idol is primarily to make the idea of God definite and concrete, so that it may come home vividly to men who are living on a low plane and who apprehend only what appeals to the senses. But the idol, while helping men to feel God as near and definite, made it impossible to think of Him as spiritual and holy. So images were forbidden to Israel, and they were told to make something which would be a visible token of His presence without attempting to be a representative of His form. The result was the Ark of the Covenant.

Uzza's Presumption.

Uzza had been taught to believe that Jehovah was really and supremely present in the ark. Yet when the ark tottered, he put forth his hand to keep it from falling—to bolster up Jehovah with his feeble arm. Small wonder that he fell dead! What did his act imply? First, it implied that Jehovah was dependent upon human aid, as though the God who had caused Israel to prevail over her enemies would fall if the oxen stumbled. Second, it implied that Jehovah was subject to the ark, rather than the ark subject to Jehovah. Whenever symbols have been used in religion, men have been prone to think of the reality as in bondage to the symbol. If the ark falls, then God will fall! The truth of the matter is that God was in the ark quite enough to take care of it as far as necessary, but He was also greater than the ark so that a calamity to it would not be a calamity to Him. For this failure to appreciate the true relation of the symbol to the reality, Uzza fell.

The Modern Application.

We have no arks to-day, and we do not localize God in any symbol or place. But we have certain plans and ideas and projects which are, in our opinions, very closely bound up with the will of God. We are sure God wants some plan carried out; it fails; we lose faith in God. We are sure that if God is good some sick loved one will be restored to health, but the loved one is taken; we lose faith. Some cherished doctrine is attacked and we feel that if it totters the very throne of God will fall. What we need to learn is that God is greater than any scheme or desire which we may have assigned to Him; that His goodness does not fall with the falling of some hope of ours; that His plans and purposes form such a vast circumference that we can see only a very little arc, sometimes not enough to catch the swing of the circle. Lord, deliver us from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over us.

GREAT MEN OF THE BIBLE.—I. ABRAHAM
—Gen 12:1-8; Heb. 7:1-10; Rom. 4:1-9.

There are few more fruitful sources of spiritual growth and knowledge of the will of God than the study of the lives and characters of holy men who have stood close to God and have reflected His will and embodied His truth in their lives. We need no mediator to stand between God and us, since Christ has once for all filled the place of mediator and has opened to each of us the privilege of entering directly into the Father's presence. But, though we need no priestly mediation and no intercession of saints when we would draw near to God, yet we need guidance and instruction and encouragement. The great and good men of past ages, the saints of both Hebrew and Christian history can serve us as teachers and leaders if we are willing to learn the lessons of their lives.

Abraham was pre-eminently the embodiment of faith. He was a pioneer, an adventurer into far countries. Leaving his home and friends in the distant east, he went out to seek his fortune in unknown western lands, like the pioneers of our own country. All such pioneer work requires faith. The men who have led the way into new fields of colonization or of business, have ever been men of vision. To see in the wilderness the possibility of a garden, to see in a land of savages the promise of a civilization, to see in a group of unexplained and unstudied phenomena the field for a science, to see in fallen humanity the potency of divine life—this is the pioneer's faith. Other men see only the risks and difficulties; he sees the glorious success that lies beyond. "Faith gives substance (reality) to things hoped for." Without this faith, which makes the thing hoped for seem as real and substantial as the palpable obstacles, no new fields would ever be entered, the race of pioneers would be extinct and civilization would halt.

So to Abraham, in Ur of the Chaldees, came the message that great things awaited him in the west, that there he should achieve the highest ambition of the oriental and become the patriarch of a great tribe. And he believed. The message was the voice of God to him and it carried conviction to his soul. He staked everything upon the truth of that message.

There are many lessons to be learned from the character and career of Abraham, but the one which comes home to us with most force is this—that the highest degree of prosperity and usefulness is reserved for the men who are not afraid to believe in their best visions or to follow the leadings of impulses which they recognize as expressing the will of God. The proof of faith is action. If I believe in God I can give no stronger proof of my belief than to follow the program which He lays out. This may involve the abandonment of some projects of my own devising. Abraham had to leave Ur before he could enter Canaan, and many of us have to leave some of our inherited ideas and established habits before we can come into the possessions which God is trying to give us. If we have faith in Him we will not hesitate.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Frank G. Tyrrell.
Sept. 30.

III. OSTENTATION IN RELIGION.—
Matt. 6:1-18.

The first verse of the sixth chapter of Matthew seems to be a general statement. "Take heed that ye do not your righteousness," the revised version has it; that is, your religious duties. Then under this general warning are three specific admonitions, regarding almsgiving, prayer and fasting.

"To be seen of men;" the original here is theathanai, a theatrical word; hypokritai, hypocrites, signifies disguised players in masks; sounding a trumpet may allude to the music of the stage. The orchestra strikes up a merry melody which is the signal for the entrance of the masked actors. There was a class of religionists in our Savior's time who made an exhibition, a theatrical spectacle of their devotions. To use a phrase of the streets, they "played to the galleries." And yet they considered themselves models of religious decorum. They were eminently respectable; their names were familiar to all as leaders in the synagogues.

Jesus looks with blazing eyes upon these masked players, and they writhe under his indignant gaze. He tears off the mask; he pierces the disguise; he scourges them off the boards, and they retreat with muttered curses. Always and everywhere he met ostentation in religion the same way. He was true; he was genuine; and he could not endure counterfeits. The result of such a life as they lived is seen in the degradation of the temple, when they had transformed it into a place of merchandise, a den of thieves.

Almsgiving is not condemned, but a proud, arrogant, theatrical fashion of giving alms is condemned, and that roundly. Do not send forth heralds to tell the world what you are about to do. Cast up accounts in secret. Let the transaction lie between you and your Lord. "Thy Father, who seeth in secret, shall recompense thee." But the man who struts like a stage-hero has his reward, in that which he seeks, the applauding galleries. And the applause dies away, and the air is motionless and the theatre empty. There is darkness and solitude everywhere. Beware how you plead secrecy in almsgiving as a mask for withholding alms altogether!

The editor of this paper tells a story of a pompous gentleman who went to a religious gathering expecting to make a speech, but the chairman called on him to pray. He hesitated a moment, and then said: "Very well, I will try to throw my remarks into the form of a prayer." A vealy, jejune reporter in the east described a certain petition as "the most eloquent prayer ever addressed to a Boston audience." The theatrical prayer has not wholly disappeared, in spite of the Master's solemn warning, uttered so long ago. Whether in the congregation or in your own home, let your prayers be the agonized appeals of a hungry heart. The minister who lives close to Christ will find that his prayers lift his congregations nearer heaven than his sermons.

The extravagances to which these players went with their fasting and marring of their faces became subject of jest and caricature in the theatres of that time. On the stage and in popular novels to-day, when religion is satirized, it is always the religion of pretenders, players, hypocrites. He who would get a reputation for piety appears in public dejected, care-worn, fatigued. But his fatigue is nothing, compared with the weariness he induces in the beholders.

If our religion is not ostentatious, it must be genuine. And if genuine, it must grapple hold of every-day life. It will not do to limit it to the sanctuary, to Sunday observances; these have their place, but the man on the street ought to know that you have a hope, a life, a love, which he has not, which he would give the world to possess.

PRAYER.

For a great teacher, a faithful witness, O God, we thank thee. The word of Christ, piercing, illuminating, is just the word the world needs. We bless thy name for the records of his doings and sayings. No literature can be compared with the story of the Christ, for beauty, for power. Make us all like him, sincere, patient, meek, triumphant. Amen. (Topic for Oct. 7, IV. Laying up Treasures.—Matt. 6:19-24; Luke 12:16-21.)

Our Budget

—Missouri and Kentucky in convention this week, the former at Columbia, the latter at Paris.

—The National Conventions at Detroit draw near. Send in all dues to any of the societies before the end of the present month.

—Let us gird ourselves for a great fall and winter campaign in pushing forward the kingdom of Christ. Let every local church become a center of missionary activity.

—This requires a great deal of prayer and heart-searching. Only an intense and consecrated type of Christianity can cope successfully with the evils of our day.

—The best way to teach unity to others, and to show them its beauties, is to practice it among ourselves. "Let there be no divisions among you."

—Right reason and sound judgment may suffer eclipse with many for a season, but they have a way of asserting themselves in the long run that leaves no room to doubt their existence.

—Word comes to us from every section of the field, and from those who have erstwhile been the open opposers or doubters of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, renewing their faith, approving our course and pledging their earnest co-operation.

—We have never doubted that such would be the case. Wisdom is justified of her children in due time, though some of her children may be a little slow in getting round to it. Better doubt the law of gravitation than to doubt that God rules in this world, and that sooner or later right and truth will win the day. To doubt that is the worst form of skepticism.

—A new church and Sunday-school have been organized in South Chicago.

—J. L. Keevil, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has accepted a call to Johnson City, Tenn., and will begin at once.

—Clark Braden, who has been for many years at Cairo, Ill., has accepted the pastorate of the church at Salem, Ill.

—C. B. Millard, Effingham, Ill., is open for engagements as singing evangelist for four weeks, beginning the last week in October.

—The meeting at Hiram, O., this year will be held immediately after the Detroit convention, and will be in charge of J. E. Lynn, of Springfield, Ill.

—James S. Helm has re-entered the field as evangelistic singer, and has some unengaged time. He may be addressed at No. 1 Campbell Park, Chicago, Ill.

—The Christian Church at Princeton, Ill., wishes to secure a singing evangelist to assist the pastor in a four weeks' meeting, to begin Oct. 25. Address I. N. Grisso.

—Prof. Herbert Martin, who has been spending his vacation with his wife's people at New Holland, O., and preaching in the vicinity, has returned to Yale College.

—Joseph Gaylor, Springfield, Mo., invites correspondence from any member of the Christian Church who desires to enter the hotel business in a town of 1,200 people, where there is practically no competition.

—It is reported that the new Campbell-Hagerman College at Lexington, Ky., opened with an enrollment of 119 pupils. The new buildings are not quite completed, but are near enough completion to be used.

—A number of new missionaries sail this month for their fields of labor in different parts of the world. The prayers of the churches will follow them as they go to break the bread of life to the starving millions.

—A new book by E. L. Powell, of Louisville, Ky., is now in the press of Sheltman & Co. The title is "Savonarola, or the Reformation of the City." It will include a number of addresses and articles in his characteristic and captivating style, some of which have already been published in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—F. O. Fannon, lately of Sedalia, Mo., will assist A. P. Cobb in a meeting at Waynesburg, Pa. Mrs. Cobb will assist in the music. Brother Fannon's sons are attending school at Lexington, the older preparing for the ministry.

—Persons going to Ann Arbor, Mich., to attend the University are invited to address J. A. Canby, pastor of the Christian Church, 636 E. University Ave., who will take pleasure in giving them any information or assistance possible.

—The Lenox Avenue Church, New York, will celebrate the tenth anniversary of its dedication on Oct. 4. There will be special services, and it is hoped that J. M. Philpott, who was pastor of the church at that time, may be present.

—The church at Miami, Mo., wishes to secure a pastor either for full time or half time. Arrangements have been made for a protracted meeting to be held by E. H. Richmond early in October. Address Charles H. Hitchborn, clerk.

B. B. Dabney, pastor at Rushville, Ill., writes that the church there has just gone through a five days' money-raising campaign under the leadership of Bro. D. E. Hughes. The amount needed to pay off the church debt of $615 was raised.

—Last week the foreign society received another gift of $500 on the annuity plan. F. M. Rains, corresponding secretary, Cincinnati, O., will take pleasure in sending, free of charge, an illustrated booklet explaining the plan, the interest paid, etc.

—A Ministerial Association was organized at Grand Valley, Ont., Sept. 14, including all the preachers in the town and vicinity. L. A. Chapman, pastor of the Christian Church, was elected president. All of the members of the association have college and seminary training.

—We are glad to learn from Bro. Sumner T. Martin that he has reconsidered his decision to leave the church at Bellaire, O., for the western field. We are sure he would do effective work wherever he might be located, but his success at Bellaire has been so noteworthy that we would regret to see him leave after so short a pastorate.

—Clarence Mitchell, who has just ended his pastorate at Wellsville, N. Y., will enter the field as evangelist. He was pastor at Grove Hill, O., five years, at Lima, O., three years, and at Wellsville, N. Y., two years. During these ten years he has made a thousand converts. Churches wishing his services may address him at 215 E. Kibby St., Lima, O.

—O. M. Eaton and Otha Wilkison preached at the annual meeting of Disciples at Kinnamon's Grove, near Flora, Ill., the first Sunday in September. Brother Eaton also recently preached a week at Mount Erie, Ill., to good audiences. Brother and Sister Wilkison had charge of the music, Mrs. Wilkison leading with a cornet. We have no church there.

—Christian College, Columbia, opened Wednesday, Sept. 16, with 142 student boarders, besides an unusually large number of day pupils. This is the largest attendance that the college has ever had, and it would have been still larger if there had been more room in the dormitory. Several applications had to be refused on account of lack of room.

—The Hammett Place Christian Church will hold a rally on Sunday, Sept. 27, at which time the regular quarterly missionary collection will be taken. This church takes four missionary collections a year, the proceeds of which are divided among the several missionary enterprises. The work at Hammett Place is prospering under the pastorate of Samuel B. Moore.

—S. W. Nay, State C. E. Superintendent for Kansas, wishes to remind the Endeavor Societies of that state that the missionary year will close Sept. 30, and that all reports and offerings to Kansas missions and the Bible Chair work at Lawrence should be sent in at once. It is desired to have at least one delegate from each society at the state convention at Newton, Oct. 5-8.

—C. L. Organ, pastor of the church at Weldon, Ia., has just closed a successful meeting in which he was assisted by Paul E. Lineback, of Des Moines. The meeting continued five weeks and resulted in 31 additions to the church. Brother Organ's work at Weldon has been a constant success. During his three years' pastorate there have been 189 additions, of which 116 were by baptism.

—W. S. Buchanan, of Lake Charles, La., is rallying the southern delegation for the Detroit convention. He requests all persons in the states of Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee and South Carolina who are going to the convention to notify him at once, so that arrangements may be made for a special train over the Southern Pacific and Queen Crescent routes.

Bro. O. A. Bartholomew is visiting at his old home, Georgetown, O., and we are glad to hear that his health is somewhat improved. He preached last Sunday—morning and evening—at Georgetown, and has preached twelve or fifteen times in the vicinity during the past three weeks. R. H. Dodson, minister at Georgetown, expresses his gratification at having Brother Bartholomew in their midst.

—In looking over the files of THE CHRISTIAN, now CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for 1874, we find in our issue for June 4, a letter from Sister C. N. Pearre, urging the sisters to organize for missionary work, and suggesting ten cents per month as the minimum contribution. In the following issue, June 11, we had an editorial strongly commending the letter of Sister Pearre, and saying we had long felt that we had a dormant power in the sisterhood of the church that was unused. Does any one know of any earlier publication in any of our journals of any article or letter on this subject?

—Dr. H. F. Fisk, principal of the Academy of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., will celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of his entrance upon that position on Oct. 30, 31. In that connection a national conference on Secondary Education and its Problems has been called by the Northwestern University. The broader problems of secondary education, in which not only professional educators but all intelligent citizens are interested, will be discussed.

—The latest report from the officers of the foreign society is to the effect that only $2,000 is needed to reach the $200,000, with enough in sight to insure the amount. The secretary thinks the gain in receipts will be the largest of any one year in the history of the society. A large number of new missionaries have been sent out, and the report of the advances on the mission fields are most inspiring. We may expect a thrilling report at the Detroit convention.

—The Church of Christ in Syracuse, N. Y., of which W. D. Ryan is pastor, has purchased the building in which it has been conducting a mission Sunday-school during the past year, and the new church will be organized under the name of the Rowland Street Church of Christ, while the original church will be called the Central Church of Christ. Brother Ryan will minister to both congregations until the new church is strong enough to support a preacher of its own.

—"The name of Bro. J. R. Ewers was omitted from the list of pastors of our Black Rock Church, given in your number for Sept. 10. I am quite sure that the omission was not mine, and may be traced to compositor or proof-reader. Be that as it may, I ask you now, in justice both to the brother named and to myself, to make the correction. Brother Ewers was one of the most energetic and faithful pastors who ever served the church, and must ever be regarded as inseparable from its history."—ANSON G. CHESTER.

—An exercise for Forefathers' Day has been prepared by D. R. Lucas, and is being distributed by the Board of Ministerial Relief. The exercise is designed for use in Endeavor Societies or Sunday-schools, and will interest the young people in the old ministers and in the history of our movement. The exercise contains considerable information about our early history, arranged in attractive form. The second Lord's day in October is Forefathers' Day. Copies of the exercise may be obtained by addressing Howard Cale, 120 E. Market St., Indianapolis, Ind.

—Sunday morning, Sept. 13, Dr. Susie J. Rijnhart spoke in the South Broadway Church, Denver. She was on her way to Tibet. The afternoon of the same day a mass meeting was held in the Central Church to welcome and speed on their way to the Philippines, Dr. C. L. Pichett and Dr. Leta M. Pichett, his wife. Dr. Rijnhart was present and spoke. Miss Effie D. Kellar, of China, was also present. She will leave Denver in a few days for her field of labor in China. She has been in Colorado a year recruiting her health. Dr. W. Bayard Craig, pastor of the Central Church, occupied the chair.

—The Board of Church Extension has received, since the first of September, two annuity gifts: $100 from a sister in Texas, and $500 from a sister in Indiana.

Remit to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec. 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo

—The editor was called to assist in the marriage of Miss Ethel Ireland and Mr. H. H. Kring on Thursday evening of last week. Miss Ethel is the daughter of Brother and Sister Gilbert E. Ireland, of the Carondelet Church. The ceremony was pronounced by the father of the bride. This is the second and last daughter of Brother and Sister Ireland, the other having been married more than a year ago. Mr. and Mrs. Kring will abide under the paternal roof. Brother Ireland celebrated the occasion by a poem which was printed and placed at each plate at the dinner following the wedding. Miss Ethel had been in the employ of the Christian Publishing Co. for a good while, and all our office force join with us in best wishes to her and her husband in their married life.

—For the second time I am saying "farewell" to the beloved Atchison church. It is a trying ordeal. It fell to my lot to be with the church during its formal organization and the building of its house of worship in '83-5, and now for the past five and a half years to be with the church while its mortgage debt of $2,500 was being paid. That has been done, and besides $1,000 spent on improvements of the building, all paid for. We have received 324 into the fellowship of the church, of whom 151 were baptized. The church paid this year more to the foreign and home missionary societies than ever before in its history, so far as I know. I am leaving the church perfectly united, harmonious and enthusiastic, and in the best financial condition in its history. The brethren have been loyal, spiritually minded, and they are worthy the labors of the best man among us. I pray God's blessings upon the devoted church and upon my successor.

WALTER SCOTT PRIEST.

Carondelet Mission, St. Louis.

The most important mission we are carrying on in St. Louis, at present, is that in Carondelet, under the charge of Gilbert E. Ireland, ably assisted by his efficient and consecrated wife. The special work of raising funds to pay off their indebtedness and enlarge the building so as to meet the demands of the cause in that community was put into the hands of Sister Ireland some time ago, and she has given much time and prayerful labor to it. In a letter from her just received she writes:

"The longer we stay here the more apparent are the possibilities that open up before this little church. But we cannot cope with these possibilities unaided. We have a population of over 50,000 and ours is the only church to represent our simple gospel plea. Yet this debt does so hamper and the constant recurring call of $60 for a half year's interest is such a burden on our hands and such a spoiling of our time for better work! Will not our churches and Christian workers listen to our plea? How trifling the sum seems! Two thousand five hundred dollars would pay the debt, free us from that heavy incumbrance, and, with what we ourselves are putting into the fund, will give us a neat front that will be both attractive and inviting. In a few years Carondelet will be self-supporting. We are sparing no effort on our part in this missionary field. We have stood at our post all through the hot season, not even taking time for a boat ride. Last Sunday, one of the hottest of the season, we organized a branch Sunday-school in the car-sheds of the Transit Company and enrolled 58 scholars. This means an extra walk, for some of us, of 34 blocks, but we feel sure that the harvest by and by will compensate for this laborious seed-sowing. I had so hoped the appeal of last spring would have brought responses that would have warranted our going ahead with our improvements in September. But alas! hundreds of our St. Louis Christian people have not even returned the stamped envelope and wished us God's speed. The following statement shows how our need could be supplied and how far it has been met:

We are sure that if our brethren in St. Louis and throughout the state of Missouri fully realized the needs of this field and the heroic labors of Brother and Sister Ireland to supply those needs, there would be a much more generous response to the appeals which Sister Ireland has sent out. Let us hope that many who received her letter will even yet answer it with a gift, and that others who have not been directly addressed, may feel inclined to open their hearts and their purses to this splendid mission. Annual Convention of the English Churches.

I have just returned from our annual convention at Southampton. We have had a very successful gathering. Delegates from all the churches, as well as visitors, were present, and a spirit of great hopefulness pervaded all the meetings. It is impossible to secure the best attendance at a place so far removed from the center of our operations as Southampton. But on the other hand, Southampton offers many advantages. We have one of the best church buildings there in the brotherhood, and it stands in the finest location in the town. The church, too, is greatly prospering under the able ministrations of its present pastor, Leslie W. Morgan. The town is the southern gateway to England and is the center of great shipping interests. It is very much alive and is growing rapidly. The church is doing its full share in the moral and spiritual work of the town and is held in honor by all.

Many of the leading pulpits in the town, Congregational, Baptist and Wesleyan, were occupied by our preachers on the Lord's day preceding the convention. This is a new feature of these annual gatherings. The general theme of the convention was "New Testament Christianity." This was introduced by an address of much learning and power by the president on Monday evening, and was continued in papers by T. H. Bates and E. H. Spring on Tuesday morning, and an address at a young people's meeting on Tuesday evening by M. W. Williams. The reports from the churches showed a gain in almost every instance, and many of the churches, in spite of their heavy financial burdens, had succeeded in reducing their indebtedness. The aggregate amount raised for this purpose was $1,420. There is an encouraging advance in the direction of self-support on the part of the Southampton church, and most of the churches are making some progress in this direction.

During the year the executive board have given much time to the discussion of the future policy of the association, and on Wednesday afternoon the matter was laid before the convention by the writer, whom it was also decided to send to Detroit to represent the English churches. The C. W. B. M. of Great Britain report a very prosperous year, having raised more money by some $250. Mrs. B. N. Mitchell, of Liverpool, was elected president for the ensuing year. The next convention is to be held at Chester, when E. H. Spring, of Gloucester, will deliver the presidential address. By a very fortunate circumstance, Brother and Sister A. C. Smithers, of Los Angeles, were present and delivered addresses on Wednesday evening.

The Backlook and the Forelook.

It was a happy thought of the church of Christ at New Berlin, Ohio, to arrange for a Lord's day meeting when the old and the young should meet together to learn whether the voice of the past and the voice of the present were in harmony with each other. Largely by the thought and active work of T. A. Fleming, the earnest, intelligent and wise preacher for the church, an "Old Folks' Day" was arranged for and a program prepared for its services. The first Sunday in August, 1903, was chosen as the day for the services. Many of the members of the Churches of Christ near by were present. Canton, Sparta, Indian Run, Shreve and Akron were represented. The older preachers of the vicinity were represented by J. Harrison Jones in his 91st year, and the 72nd of his ministry; Adam Moore, A. M. Harrier, and F. M. Green; and the younger ministry was represented by T. A. Fleming, the resident preacher. All of these participated in the services of the day. W. H. Hoover and John Evans, "pillars in the church" and faithful brethren added their willing service to the interest of the occasion. The meeting was a delight to all who participated in the three services. The church house at New Berlin was erected by a union of several denominations; but recently the union became so complete that the entire property is now in the possession of the Disciples of Christ. It is now nearly forty years since I preached to the few brethren who formed the first organization.

It will be seen by the following statement that the present membership is determined to let the New Testament furnish its directing of duty, faith and practice: Their plea is—

1. The union of all God's people on God's word.
2. The exaltation of Christ above all denominational division, and God's word above all human creeds.
3. The manifestation of loyalty, by the maintenance of such forms of practice only, as were certainly in use in the time of Christ and his apostles.
4. Within the safeguards of God's word, liberty to hold such opinions as shall under the guidance of the Holy Spirit seem a stimulus to holy life and the manifestation of love toward God and our fellowmen.
5. To turn sinners to Christ according to New Testament teaching and practice.
6. In church life, to grow in grace and knowledge of the truth, to cultivate brotherly love, to keep our confidence steadfast to the end, and the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.

Letters were read from a few of the preachers who in the years gone by preached for the congregation which added to the pleasure of the services.

Such meetings cannot fail to do good to the old and to the young. The old see themselves again as they once were and the young are informed of the way their fathers trod. The old and the new touch each other and the glory of the first house is compared with the splendor of the second. Times have changed and conditions are not as they once were, but the word of the Lord endures forever and the love of God is the same yesterday, to-day and forever.

Dedication at Carrsville, Ky.

The new Church of Christ, was dedicated here Aug. 30. J. Shelby Rowe, of Cave in Rock, Ill., did the preaching, assisted by E. S. Tinsley, of Rock Creek, Ill., subject being, "On This Rock I Will Build My Church."

The sum of $200 was due on the house which was provided for and the house dedicated to the Lord's service. The choir from the Presbyterian church here furnished the music for the occasion for which they have our thanks. Too much cannot be said in praise of David Ellis of his untiring energy in soliciting means and giving for the building. Brother Rowe is very greatly beloved by this people. The church is happy and will evidently do a greater work for the Master.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver, the excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles, and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate, people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

Dedication at Chauncey, Ohio.

One of the oldest congregations in southern Ohio is located at Chauncey, Athens Co. Many of the pioneer preachers have sounded out the word of truth from this congregation, and here hundreds have accepted Christ as their only Savior and Redeemer. The church here has just completed and dedicated a new house. It is of brick, stone and slate. It is well built and furnished, and will be a fine home for the church for many years to come. On Lord's day, Sept. 6, the writer preached the opening sermon, raised the money and dedicated this new house. Large delegations were present from the surrounding congregations, and all seemed to enter most heartily into the spirit of the occasion. It was a great pleasure to meet several of the preachers of southern Ohio at this dedication.

Our National Conventions.

The National Conventions for 1903 will be held at Detroit, Mich., Oct. 16-21, 1903. The C. W. B. M. will begin its sessions on Friday, Oct. 16, at 9 A. M. and continue in session through Friday and Saturday. The general board meetings of the A. C. M. S. and the F. C. M. S. will be held in the Woodward Avenue Congregational Church on Saturday afternoon and evening. A "Good Citizenship Meeting" will be held on Saturday evening. All the offered pulpits of Detroit will be occupied on Lord's day morning and evening by ministers attending the convention. The union communion services will be held at 3 P. M. on Lord's day, Oct. 18.

The F. C. M. S. will occupy Monday, Oct. 19. The A. C. M. S., Board of Church Extension, Ministerial Relief, National Benevolences, etc., will occupy Tuesday and Wednesday.

PLACES OF MEETING.

The principal places of meeting will be in the Woodward Avenue Baptist Church. The general headquarters will be in the Woodward Avenue Congregational Church and the First Presbyterian Church.

ENTERTAINMENT.

In entertaining the delegates the usual custom will be followed of taking visitors into Christian homes of Detroit. The rate of such homes will be fifty cents each person for lodging, and 25 cents for meals. The hotels will entertain delegates at rates ranging from $1.50 to $5.00 per day.

RATES OF FARE.

The Central Passenger Association, including Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Illinois, will give a rate of one fare for the round trip. The Western Passenger Association of lines west of Chicago and St. Louis will give a rate of one fare, plus $2, for the round trip. The Trunk Line and Southeastern Associations, east of Pittsburg and south of the Ohio river and east of the Mississippi, have not yet announced their rate, but we are hoping for a low rate of fare from them.

The church at Detroit extends a very earnest and cordial invitation to our brethren to come up to this great convention in large numbers. Our motto has been, "A representative from every church." We hope that every congregation among us will soon get into the habit of sending their minister to the national convention and paying his expenses. The program has been printed in our papers. It is thought it will be found a very strong and attractive one. "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord." BENJAMIN L. SMITH, Cor. Sec.

An Opportunity in New Mexico.

It is often very difficult to realize the full significance of apparently small historical events. If New Mexico had been first explored by those from the east instead of from the south, by Anglo-Saxon instead of Latin, a very different story would have been to tell about the past history of this inviting territory. As it was, Coronado explored this section in 1540, and consequently the Spaniards settled its rich valleys at Santa Fe, and elsewhere, in 1600-1608. If the English had come first, there can be little doubt that New Mexico would long have been in society and progress the peer of the great commonwealth of Colorado.

The Mexican must be assimilated and displaced; and this is now being done. It is now time for the Mexican to be outvoted by the United States people. Thousands upon thousands of well-to-do people are pouring into New Mexico. They are coming into the Llano Estacado country to take homestead claims; they are coming into the great Pecos Valley to buy its marvelous irrigated fruit and hay and stock lands; they are coming to seek the health of some member of their families, to buy property and live in what is coming to be regarded as the greatest sanitarium for the cure of lung troubles within the borders of the United States; they are coming to do mining and railroading. They are coming.

Many of the comers are Disciples. Other religious bodies are showing, by the number of evangelists they are sending to this section, that they see the opportunity.

Shall we seize this surpassing opportunity? The Disciples of Christ, through their home mission society, are sending one man into the territory on one edge to preach one Lord's day! There are nearly two churches in this growing young state, soon to be.

I plead right to the heart of our strong missionary churches that here is the greatest opportunity of the decade to do a needed service that will be surprising in the number of churches organized and men located, even if one man only be placed in the field as territorial evangelist.

What a splendid thing it would be for some one man, for one man and wife, for some one large church, to take this territory as its home field! Now is the nick of time for the Disciples in New Mexico. The great country shall become religiously what its religious pioneers were. I call attention to New Mexico. Who will respond?

You can at least send an offering to the home mission office right now and help raise that $100,000, so our society may be able to take up the work. JESSE B. HASTON.

The Disaster in the Island of Jamaica.

There was an account in the papers of last week of the destruction wrought in the island of Jamaica by a tornado. G. E. Randall writes again of the great distress in the island, but the word comes in but slowly and many of our stations are not yet heard from.

The mountain roads are impassable. Nearly all of the food supply of the people has been destroyed.

Help is asked for and must be sent quickly. This is a matter which appeals to the whole church.

Our brethren in Jamaica are hungry. Will we not give them food?

Thousands are without shelter and it will take many months to restore the food supply.

Our schools and mission houses which have been destroyed must be rebuilt, but to this we can give more time, but the people must be fed and fed now.

Will not everyone who reads this inclose at least one dollar to Helen E. Moses, Sec., 152 East Market St., Indianapolis, Ind?

Just as the suffering of our brethren in Jacksonville and Galveston called forth generous response, so will the suffering of our brethren in the island of Jamaica call forth generous response. C. C. SMITH.

From the East to Detroit.

For our great annual gathering, Oct. 16-22, a rate of one and one-third fares for the round trip has been granted by the Eastern Passenger Association. Tickets will be on sale Oct. 13-18, can be validated for return Oct. 16-22; tickets good returning Oct. 16-26 inclusive.

Passengers in the territory south of New York will in the main go by the Penna. Lines or B. & O. The fare will be the same on these roads, $19 for the round trip from Washington. The Penna. Lines will carry us either via Pittsburg, Buffalo or Cleveland, as we select. At Buffalo or Cleveland we can take steamer for Detroit.

The B. & O. will carry us via Pittsburg and Toledo, or via Philadelphia through the "Switzerland of America," to Niagara Falls, where we may avail ourselves of "stop over" privilege. From there passage may be had to Detroit through Canada by rail, or from Buffalo by steamer.

A move is on foot to have all Disciples from the east meet in Buffalo and go thence by boat which may be chartered for the occasion, or by the daily service to Detroit.

Let me have your name and address, and your choice of routes. I will co-operate with other excursion managers to secure the best possible service for you. Write at once.

An Endowment for the Eugene Divinity School.

The official board of the Eugene Divinity school heartily endorses the recommendation of the centennial committee of the national convention referring to the adequate endowment of our schools. An effort is now in progress to raise fifty thousand by 1909. The churches in the Pacific northwest are in hearty accord with the movement. They feel the need of more and better equipped men, and the attendance at the Eugene Divinity School is a demonstration that the young men are to be found who will enter the ministry and are availing themselves of the opportunities of the school.

There were nineteen last year who expect to give their life to preaching the gospel, and there are others expected this fall.

A large number at our Turner state meeting pledged $10 (ten dollars) per year for five years toward the permanent endowment. A. McLean, of the foreign society, and Evangelist Allen Wilson, were among the number.

Pres. E. C. Sanderson has done a splendid work in the establishment of this school at the seat of the Oregon State University. It means more to the brotherhood than if some one had given one hundred thousand dollars endowment for a school on condition that it be located at some point where we would be deprived of the privileges of the State University or some similar school. Brethren, if you have money to give or leave to some worthy object why not remember the Eugene Divinity School?

Send E. C. Sanderson either a cash offering or a pledge for five years at ten dollars per year to help raise this endowment.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

A sister in Moberly writes concerning the work there. "We have splendid meetings; Sister Rothwell is a grand leader; we are so fortunate to have her. Our sisters are enthusiastic on the missionary question. You'd never think we were the same indifferent women of a while back." Good, my sister. May God clear the understanding of others concerning their duty and privilege in the service of the King.

Our hearts are made glad by the splendid reports sent by many of the auxiliaries at the year's close. Many show advancement in membership, in Tidings and in gifts. They are more full and complete than formerly, showing that auxiliary officers are aware of the importance and dignity of the cause. Our aim of 50 new auxiliaries was higher than we attained, as was also the aim of members; nearly 500 of the 1,000 of the latter, only, are reported. Burgess Memorial offerings are reported as $2,073.52. As some of our auxiliary officers report the same special offering every quarter, consequently part of this sum may be counted twice, or more, but it is approximately correct.

Reports show an increase in Tidings of 147. We hope all expiring subscriptions will be attended to at once, that our national report may show a list for Missouri which corresponds to the list our auxiliaries report.

This letter will reach you during our state meeting. I trust it will find many of our number present at Columbia storing up hints as to ways and means, and enthusiastic to put them into execution in their respective fields, that next year may far exceed this in strength and power for good.

Now let's get ready to go to Detroit, to the national convention. Auxiliary officers should go; auxiliary members should go; non-missionary church members should go; all who possibly can, should go. Your pastor should go; you sisters should agitate the question of his going. The church will receive ten-fold by sending him, as will auxiliaries by sending their president. This beautiful lake city offers extraordinary attractions. The season is a delightful one. Let us all go.

Kentucky University Opening.

Kentucky University opened Monday, Sept. 14, with a large increase in attendance. Professor Milligan declared on Monday morning that there were more students in chapel than he had seen on the opening day for the past twenty years. The enrollment in the College of Liberal Arts for the first week is 30 per cent larger than for the first week of last year. The enrollment in the College of the Bible the first three days is 25 per cent greater than the enrollment for the entire session last year. As usual, there are a large number of students from foreign countries. Australia, however, leads in the number of students sent to the University.

At Hamilton College the enrollment was the greatest in the history of the institution. This phenomenal increase in the attendance was unexpected inasmuch as this was the first year under the auspices of the University. The president, Mrs. St. Clair, says that the rooms are about all taken and they have engaged rooms out in town for members of the faculty. She says it will be necessary to provide additional buildings to accommodate the students. The enrollment of boarding students in the first week is 37 per cent larger than for the whole session of last year and of the day pupils 50 per cent greater than that of last year. The wisdom of President Jenkins in associating Hamilton College with the University is apparent already in the increased facilities of Hamilton. The interchange of teachers works to the advantage of both Hamilton and the University, thus giving Hamilton the advantage of University instruction with little increase of expense. The University has had a considerable increase of endowment, having in the past year and a half received bequests to the amount of $64,000.

The curators have authorized the committee composed of President Jenkins and Professor Willis, to raise a contingent fund of $12,000 to be used in providing needed improvements. They hope to secure this amount by Jan. 1.

To the Churches of Christ in Kansas.

In a few words I wish to speak to all of Kansas regarding our coming state convention and work. I am sure that all our brethren in this state are pleased to congratulate those who are at the head of the various interests of the church, for the very excellent program arranged for our convention to be held at Newton, Oct. 5-8. Every department is provided with subjects for discussion of vital importance to their own peculiar necessities. It is a most practical program and will be well supported by our brethren and sisters over the state who are intensely interested in, and consecrated to, our Father's business in Kansas and the whole world. And with our own state people will appear our brethren who represent us in the interests larger than those of a single state. A. M. McLain, B. B. Tyler, W. H. Waggoner, G. W. Muckley, W. F. Richardson, George L. Snively and W. E. M. Hackleman will be a great blessing to us all.

In order, therefore, that the greatest amount of good may be received from this convention by the congregations in the different parts of the state as a whole, it will be necessary that each and every church be represented there. It is a matter of such importance that no congregation ought to let it pass without having a representation in the convention.

If only one from a church can go, that one should be there through the entire convention and go prepared to bring away from the sessions a report to the local interests of the church he represents. Every congregation in the state should select some person, and pay his expenses if necessary, not to go to Newton to play, visit, or go shopping, but to represent it in the convention and to bring home a report of its doings. Have your delegate there and have him there to work. This convention may mean very much to the state, or it may mean but little, just as the churches in the state will.

Every department in every church in the state should pay its apportionment to Kansas missions. It takes thought, time and money to carry forward the various organized interests in the local church; the state is but a larger church with the same organized interests. The state in evangelistic work, Sunday-school work, C. E. work, C. W. B. M. work, etc., as do the local interests, requires thought, time and money. As a minister and his people in any locality are going into new parts of the city or community and into new homes to seek and to save the lost by means of the different organized departments of the congregation, so also is the state to go into new cities, towns, and localities for the same purpose and by means of the same organized departments.

In order, therefore, to do this, every department in the local work should be interested in the larger work of the same society in the state, and support it by paying its apportionment. The larger work for God cannot be done without this support.

Dedication at Oakland, Ky.

On Lord's day, August 30, I dedicated the new house of worship at Oakland, Bracken County, Ky. The building is a neat little frame structure with seating capacity for three hundred persons and is very neatly and tastily furnished. The building only cost $1,000, but is plenty large and is in perfect keeping with the community. This building is the out-growth of a meeting held a little over one year ago by Harlan C. Runyan in an old tobacco barn. There was no church in the community, and the place and people were considered pretty rough. But Bro. Runyan went there and asked for the use of an old barn; he cleaned away the tobacco stalks, turned a wagon-bed upside down for a rostrum, hung lanterns on the ends of tobacco sticks and seated some of the people in tiers, for the barn was full of people, but it didn't matter, for by his simple and loving presentation of the Story of the Cross, he soon had them all in tears, and many of them "sitting with Christ Jesus in heavenly places." Forty-five took their stand for Christ. Bro. Runyan, who is the efficient minister at Latonia, gives one Lord's day in each month to this place and there are additions at nearly every service. With upwards of half a hundred members, a nice new house, and with the efficient leadership of this untiring worker, we may hope, and have a right to expect, great things for the future. There were about 1,500 persons present on the day of dedication and more than enough money raised to meet all outstanding obligations.

Growth of Disciples in New York.

In recent years sentiment has undergone considerable revision relative to the possibilities of the work of the Disciples in the populous east, and especially our great eastern cities. The facts contained in this note are given with the hope that they may serve as a partial refutation to the charge that the east is too conservative for our plea, and that we cannot accomplish results here as readily as anywhere. It is doubtful if any similar group of churches in our brotherhood have made more commendable progress or increased at a more rapid ratio than the churches composing the Disciples' Union of Greater New York and vicinity.

No field known to the writer yields more encouraging results for the effort expended than this. Statistics recently gathered from our six churches, with regular pastors comprising our union, reveal the following net gains during the twelve months from Sept. 1, 1902, to Sept. 1, 1903:

First Church, W. 56th St. Manhattan, 88 or 23 per cent; Second Church, 169th St., Bronx, 22 or 14 per cent; Lennox Avenue Union, 119th St., Manhattan, 81 or 34 per cent; Sterling Place, Brooklyn, 42 or 16 per cent; Green Point, Brooklyn, 60 or 50 per cent; East Orange, N. J., 13 or 28 per cent; a total gain of 306 or 27 1-2 per cent.

A forward movement will be undertaken in our mission at Kensington, Brooklyn, with the assistance of the various boards under the auspices of the Disciples' Union.

New Pastor at Liberty, Mo.

On Thursday evening, Sept. 17, the church at Liberty, Mo., held a service in recognition of the opening of my pastorate with it. A. B. Jones presided in a happy manner. The principal address was delivered by Dr. T. P. Haley, of Kansas City. Dr. Haley spoke of the characteristics of the ideal preacher and church, and of the relationships that should exist between the pastor and his people. The address was impressive and helpful. The writer responded in a short address, in which he expressed some of the hopes which he entertains for the future of his work. The pastors of the other churches of the city were present, and expressed in fraternal terms a welcome to their new associate.

After this formal part of the program was completed, a social hour gave opportunity for personal introductions, cordial congratulations and good wishes. The evening was delightful and very helpful, and its impressive services will do much to assist in the establishment of those relations that should exist between preacher and people. My estimate of the value of such a service is well expressed by the following remark of a man who was present: He said, "How much better is such an opening of a preacher's work, than it is to allow him to sneak in as if he and the church feared that someone else might find out that he had come." The helpful formalities of church life should not be neglected.

The Federation of Churches and Christian Workers.

that there is a broad ground of agreement upon most of the essentials of our religion, upon this broad ground of agreement we unite our forces in a campaign of evangelization and moral reform. A second objection urged by some is, that by the terms of our agreement we are to counsel and agree together to plant churches in needy fields, and to prevent, if possible, the congestion of churches in other localities, and that where the overlapping is so great that all the churches cannot thrive in a given community that a weeding-out process may be indulged in. And it is claimed that here a double difficulty might arise: First, that we might be prevented from entering certain fields where we feel that we should be represented, and in the second place, we might be asked to move out of other places against our will. A few things may be said in reply, which, it seems to me, will ease this objection a little. In the first place, if we were in the federation we would also have a voice in the council. In the second place, no church is to be forced to do that which it is reluctant to do, as the council is only advisory in its powers, and in the third place, the system is sure to be self-corrective at this point, for the denominational churches are as likely to object to being weeded out as are we, and when friction arises the oil will be applied. But the main purpose here, and the great work to be accomplished is the carrying of the gospel to the unchurched masses, is the supplying the bread of life to the spiritually starving and dying, and the providing of spiritual homes for those who are rescued. And surely we should be willing to join in any movement which promises to hasten the salvation of the world, which makes more effective the plan of making Christ known to those who are living "without hope and without God in the world." Or else what becomes of all our rejoicing at the triumphs of the gospel in heathen lands?

When Brother McLean shows us on his map the great area where Protestantism prevails, how we rejoice, and when he tells of the seventy-five thousand missionaries of our Lord who are threading their way into every part of every continent, and every isle of the sea, there storming the strongholds of Satan, how we exult. And when we listen to the roll-call of faithful missionaries and martyrs, and of the thousands turned from darkness to light, and from idols to the service of the living God, in our rejoicing are we thinking only of our small part in what God has wrought? Surely not. What then becomes of our objection? Cannot we rejoice when others enter the needy fields at home?

This objection to federation is more easily found in dictionary definitions than in the living oracles, and in the Spirit of our Master.

The third and last objection which I notice is based on the claim that we have a peculiar message to the churches, that while with all others we preach the gospel to an unbelieving world that we have a protest to make against sectarianism, and a plea to make for the union of God's people, which must be delivered to those in the various religious bodies, and that by joining in this movement, we tie our hands and stifle our voices so that our message cannot be delivered. Here, it seems to me, it is a question of whether our message can be more effectively delivered from the outside or from the inside. It may be that when we have shown our goodwill towards others, and an equal desire with them for the salvation of souls and for the general cause of righteousness, that the conditions of such a fellowship of service would give the opportunity and grant a most favorable reception to our own message as we attempt to point out to them the more excellent way.

And now, in conclusion, allow me to call your attention to some of the favorable features or principles of the federation movement. The first I notice is the constant acknowledgement of the weakness and inefficiency, if not of the sin, of a divided Christianity. After almost a century of protest against the sin of division in the church, it is enough to cause a thrill in the heart of every loyal Disciple of Christ to hear the chorus of voices now raised in deploring the evil of a divided church.

This wail against sectarianism comes from the inside, from those advocating the federation movement, and those in sympathy with its main features, while outwardly professing not to disturb denominational lines. The whole spirit of the movement cries out against the multitude of existing denominations.

In an address delivered by Rev. Edward G. Selden, of the Reformed Church of Albany, and published by request of the executive council of church federation, he declares: "There has come to be a frank and intelligent recognition of the evils which now attend the excessive development of denominationalism and the undesirable multiplication of churches. The principle of individualism has been carried to its logical extreme. Anybody who had a mind of his own had been allowed to devise and execute a plan for a new sect."

The world has been diversified by seventeen kinds of Methodists, thirteen sorts of Baptists, twelve species of Lutherans, and as many divisions of Presbyterians, etc.

"We have indulged our tastes, and even our fancies, until the needs of the world cry out against our folly; and even on the mission field, where the gross superstitions of the heathen are beclouding the lives of millions, we divide and subdivide; and here in the home land the pressure of needs is too great to allow us comfort in a denominationalism which was once unchallenged"—and further concludes by saying, "We must cry out on the spirit of exclusiveness and away with all diverse practices," etc.

Again, I quote from a message sent by the International Committee to the city of Hartford, Conn. "It is certainly most propitious that when this need of co-operation is most keenly felt that the spirit of unity is so generally expressed. Sectarianism is on the wane, and the spirit of brotherhood is growing stronger every year." In conclusion, I quote from President Perry in an address on "Church Federation:" "Coincident with the rise of the spirit of unity, due to the recognition of essential oneness, there has come to the churches a new sense of the economic waste of division and of the practical necessity of co-operation—if the work of winning the world is ever to be accomplished. Rivalry, which simply meant competition, might be tolerated, but rivalry which involved a squandering of resources was not to be endured in an age like this." If this, and more like this which might be quoted, does not awaken an amen in the heart of every Disciple of Christ who has been protesting against a divided church and praying and pleading for the ultimate union of God's people, then I am not a good representative of that class.

The second favorable feature which I intend to notice is so closely related to the first, that it scarcely needs separate attention. It is this—that wherever the evil of division is deplored, the need of some new form of union is emphasized. Some of the advocates of church federation seem to "see men as trees walking," while others see clearly, and hear not even faintly the interceding prayer of Christ that his people might be one.

Prof. George Albert Coe, author of the "Religion of a Mature Mind," says: "In all departments of human life it is the intention of Jesus that his kingdom should become an external, visible fact as well as an internal and invisible disposition of heart. The vital principle of all the churches ultimately requires that they surrender their own individualisms in order to form a world wide fellowship."

The union for which Jesus prayed, that all his disciples might be one, is a visible union, for it is to be to all the world a manifestation of Christ. Such a union is bound to come through the very nature of the life-principle involved in Christian discipleship.

A few weeks ago, Dr. Hillis, successor to Henry Ward Beecher, speaking to young men in Plymouth Church said: "Young men, you stand at the threshold of a new era. The time is coming for which your fathers prayed, longed and died without seeing—the epoch of church unity. The young preachers of the country, of all denominations, are thinking of nothing but church unity, are talking of church unity, are preaching about church unity. It is the one theme of our pulpits from Boston to San Francisco."

Another writer, in an address endorsed by the federation movement, wisely says:

"The past twenty years have witnessed more genuine attempts to reunite the scattered flocks of Protestantism than all the centuries since the Reformation. This movement towards union," he adds, "is of vast significance, and is worthy of careful study." Thus do these leaders among these various denominations join in the plea for the union of the divided people of God.

Two good results I hasten to mention, which I feel sure are to follow the federation movement. The first is a better understanding of each other, brought about by an association and fellowship of service. The clearing away of prejudice caused by misunderstandings, and the consequent cessation of misrepresentations, founded on ignorance of each other's doctrines and practices. The second good result is sure to be a desire for a closer union. Already the great practical advantages of co-operation are being demonstrated. And if co-operation is effective and fellowship is sweet, based upon federation, what must the power be but irresistible and the fellowship heavenly, when founded on the perfect union for which the Savior prayed.

BE WARNED IN TIME.

Constipation needs a cure. A simple relief only is not sufficient, especially if the relief is brought about by the use of salts, aloes, or some similar purgative or cathartic. They temporarily relieve, but they weaken the bowels and make the condition worse. In constipation the bowels require strengthening, toning and something that will assist them to do their work naturally and healthfully—in short a tonic laxative of the highest order. That is what Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine is. It both relieves and permanently cures by removing the cause of the difficulty. It positively cures dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney and liver troubles, headache and all other diseases which grow out of sick and clogged bowels. Constipation often sows the seed of death. One small dose a day will cure any case, light or bad. It is not a patent medicine or liquor. The full list of ingredients goes with every package with explanation of their action. It costs nothing to try it. A free sample bottle for the asking. Write for the sample to-day. It will be sent gladly. Address, Vernal Remedy Co., 19 Seneca Building Buffalo, N. Y. All leading druggists sell it.

M. L. BUCKLEY.

Harrison, O., Sept. 17, 1903.

ARKANSAS.—Waldron, Sept. 18.—I preached here Sept. 6, and spent some time looking over the field and the country. Waldron is in a beautiful valley and in the center of the lumber industry. I also found that good farms could be had very cheap. Bro. W. A. Streater is taking advantage of the situation and trying to build for the Lord by having our people locate there, and get homes while they are yet cheap. Many brethren have secured homes through his agency. Among them are Brethren G. R. Young, a former Kansas preacher, and W. H. Bryan, formerly of Nevada, Mo. Waldron has about fifteen hundred population and is growing rapidly. The church has a splendid future. They have a beautiful location, and intend building a parsonage the coming year. Our meeting there was mutual and resulted in an invitation to the writer to become their pastor.—J. F. POWERS, Ottawa, Kans.

Elm Grove, Sept. 17.—Twelve days, 14 sermons and 18 additions by confession and baptism. The interest and the audience increased every night from the beginning; but for three nights the rains have prevented the people from assembling, and the meeting may be broken. We thank the Lord for what has been done, and pray him to bless these young disciples and the families to which they belong.—B. F. MANIRE.

Bald Knob, Sept. 15.—One by statement at Camden, last appointment. Fifty-two additions at Blackton in a meeting held by some one there recently.—JAMES H. BROOKS.

Siloam Springs, Sept. 14.—Two confessions last night. Big revival expected to begin end of this month. Prospects the brightest in history here.—PERCY G. CROSS.

COLORADO.—Salida, Sept. 14.—Two additions to the church here since last report: one on Sept 6 and one on Sept. 13. Our audiences are growing here, and the church is building up slowly.—G. W. COFFMAN.

ILLINOIS.—Bloomington, Sept. 16.—In a three weeks' meeting at Old Union, near White Hall, Ill., we pledged the members to greater consecration, united the church at Athensville with Union until this church is once more able to go alone, when they are to assist at Athensville. Five confessions were received and the church was thoroughly reorganized. We are now in a meeting at Manchester.—J. O. WALTON and wife, Evangelists.

INDIANA.—Hammond, Sept. 14.—One confession lately. Church mortgage just paid and to be burned. All departments moving. Mission work at Indiana Harbor begun.—C. J. SHARP.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—Wister, Sept. 14.—There will be a meeting of the members of the Christian Church living in and around Wister, held in the Pre-byterian Church of that place on Sunday, Sept. 27, at 11 o'clock a. m., to consider the advisability of forming an organization and building a house of worship. This move is one of the results of the debate between W. H. Winters, of the Christian Church, and I. W. Yandell, of the Free-will Baptist Church, in which it was generally conceded that the Baptist champion was badly defeated. Bro. Winters will preach at this meeting.

KANSAS.—South Haven, Sept. 18.—Last Lord's day I preached on Church Extension, raised our apportionment and took three confessions at Hunnewell. The church there is moving on very nicely.—J. M. MORRIS, pastor. Morrowville, Sept. 18.—Our revival at Low Center is progressing with increased interest. Thirty-six additions up to date.—EDWARD CLUTTER, Evangelist; I. T. EPLER, Singer.

Eureka, Sept. 15.—One added by baptism since last report. The young ladies of the church have raised $80 which will be used toward repairing the church.—G. F. BRADFORD.

KENTUCKY.—Lexington, Sept. 14.—The church at Sparta, Ky., closed a two weeks' meeting Sept. 11, I doing the preaching. Bro. L. A. Hopkins conducted the singing. Good interest prevailed throughout the entire meeting. There were 10 additions, seven by confession and baptism.—O. N. ROTH.

Lexington, Sept. 15.—A twelve days' meeting has just closed at Graefenberg, Ky., with 25 additions. W. A. Boggess and Fred Carter assisted Raymond Sherrer, the minister there. The former did the preaching and Fred Carter efficiently conducted the singing. The meeting was encouraging in every way. The faithful work of the members and of their minister, insures a promising future for Graefenberg church.

MICHIGAN.—Belding, Sept. 17.—Three more accessions last Lord's day, making 87 since July 12. The outlook is encouraging and we are preparing to build a good tabernacle.—W. H. KINDRED.

Saginaw, Sept. 14.—Our services in all departments are growing with enthusiasm for better work; three by confession at prayer-meeting Thursday evening. Half the working congregation attend prayer-meeting. The regular services yesterday were fine and gave us five young women by confession. We give to the ministry this week Bro. Albert C. Young, who leaves for Hiram College to begin his studies.—E. E. C.

MINNESOTA.—Rochester, Sept. 14.—One baptism at the service last night. Good interest. Work starting off well.—G. WASHINGTON WISE, Pastor.

MISSOURI.—Sheldon, Sept. 14.—Closed a four weeks' meeting here last night with ten additions: five took membership and five by baptism. Large audiences and good interest throughout, but most everybody seemed to belong to some church, or else "leaned" so much they could not be moved.—J. R. PARKER AND WIFE, Charleston, Ill.

Kirksville, Sept. 14.—I recently closed a meeting of ten days down in the Charitan hills, Linderville P. O., which resulted in two baptisms: some from the Baptists, Adventists and Methodists, some reclaimed, and an organization of 25 members, with Bro. Benj. R. Smith for leader and Bros. Edward Steel and J. C. Plumlee for deacons or helpers. These are all good people and we hope to hear a good report from them.—D. M. KINTER.

Windsor, Sept. 14.—Last Monday I closed a meeting at the Berry school-house near here. Eight were baptized as a result of the meeting.—W. T. HAMANN.

Lamar, Sept. 16.—Two baptisms last Lord's day at our regular services. Audiences better ever since our out-door union services on the public square.—C. W. CRUTCHER.

Centralia, Sept. 17.—I am in a short meeting at Antioch with two confessions to date and a very promising outlook for a good meeting. Young Brother Ferguson, of Columbia, has charge of this work.—GRANVILLE SNELL.

Dexter, Sept. 14.—Three additions to the church here Sept. 13; nine during the month.—ALBERT BUXTON.

Joplin, Sept. 15.—Twenty-three additions yesterday: 33 in all. Meeting eight days old.—W. A. MOORE.

Mexico, Sept. 16.—Have just closed a two weeks' meeting at Hickory Grove church in Calloway county with 27 additions: 26 baptisms, one of them from a Methodist church. But for the rain others would doubtless have been added to the church. W. H. Hook, of Mexico, preaches for this congregation and assisted two or three days in the meeting. Dr. O. B. Mayes, of Centralia, rendered valuable service by preaching two discourses during the progress of the revival. This is a country church with a live Sunday school and a splendid C. W. B. M.—A. W. KOKENDOFFER.

Lagonda, Sept. 15.—I have just closed a meeting here. The Lord did great things for us. We had 45 additions to the church, 36 of whom were baptized. The church was wonderfully built up.—J. M. RAMSEY.

Kirksville, Sept. 16.—There were 10 additions to the church here last Sunday.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

LaBelle, Sept. 15.—One addition by letter at Knox City last Sunday. One hundred and sixty dollars raised at one service at Sweet Oak to repair the church house.—J. H. JONES.

OHIO.—Deerfield, Sept. 14.—I resigned my work here about a month ago, preaching my farewell sermons Sept. 13. On the evening of Sept. 12 a reception was given at which I was presented with a handsome gold watch and chain. The program of the evening was unique—a rousing social time followed by a lively program and closing with a quiet and impressive devotional service. I go to Brooklyn, N. Y., to be associated with A. J. Elliott in the religious directorship of the Y. M. C. A. The work here is in excellent condition, also at mission point started recently at Mottown, Ohio. There were 70 present at the Sunday-school here last Sunday. I commence work in Brooklyn Sept. 15.—W. MCM. LOGAN.

OKLAHOMA.—Norman, Sept. 14.—We had four additions here yesterday; two by confession and two by statement. I also baptized a man from the country last night.—J. G. CREASON.

Ingleton, Sept. 14.—Bro. Newby, of Wichita, has just closed a meeting of twenty days, which resulted in an organization of fifty-nine members.—E. J. VAN BOSKIRK.

Mangum, Sept. 15.—Closed a four weeks' meeting here last night with 66 additions. A lot has been purchased and paid for at a cost of $600 and the building will now engage their attention. J. B. Faulkner is the pastor.—JNO. W. MARSHALL.

OREGON.—Portland, Sept. 11.—At a meeting recently held at Mossy Rock, Wash., there were four additions: one baptism (from the M. E.'s), two from the First Day Adventists and one by statement. Could we have held a few days longer, a number of others would have made confession. A subscription of about $500 was raised for a building which has possibly been increased by this time to $700. They will build this fall, if they can secure the material. Prospects excellent for a fine church organization.—BRUCE WOLVERTON.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—Sioux Falls, Sept. 18.—Our minister, E. A. Orr, has just closed his first year with the Christian church at this place. He was commended to us by the American Christian Missionary and the South Dakota Missionary Societies, and by their help he has been able to be with us this year. Our state convention was so well pleased with his work in the convention, especially with his Bible lectures, that it voted unanimously to stand by the Sioux Falls church in keeping Brother Orr in the state. The church has also extended to him a unanimous call to remain with us next year, and we are happy to record that he has expressed his decision to do so. The church here was never in a more prosperous condition than now. All departments of the church have been revived, strengthened and are now hopefully active. The membership is united and harmonious. The best of feeling prevails, and the pastor has the utmost confidence of all within and without the church. During the year, without any extra meetings, we have baptized twenty and received ten otherwise. This may seem small, but it is not small when you consider where we are located. We have raised more money for our various benevolences than ever before in our history. Still our finances were never in better shape. All signs point to a brighter future for the Sioux Falls church.—MABLE BURGESS, church clerk.

The Crises of the Christ. By G. Campbell Morgan, D.D. (Revell. $2 net.)

More nearly than any of his other works, this volume may be said to present Mr. Morgan's complete system of theology. Probably he will never feel called upon to write anything more systematically comprehensive or more technically theological. How Christocentric his system is, can be seen therefore from the fact that he has organized it about certain experiences in the earthly life of the Master. The "crises," which are treated in the several parts of this volume, are the Birth, the Baptism, the Temptation, the Transfiguration, the Crucifixion, the Resurrection and the Ascension. These topics are treated, not in the style and method of biography and not with the purpose of throwing light upon the personal qualities and experiences of Jesus, but with the emphasis upon the unfolding of his mission and the accomplishment of his redemptive work. This method differentiates the work equally from the numerous lives of Christ and from the comprehensive and systematic treatises on Christian doctrine, while it possesses elements common to both. Mr. Morgan's qualifications for the task are his painstaking and persistent study of the word, a genuine spiritual insight in interpretation and a high degree of evangelical faith and evangelistic zeal.

The Hand of God in American History.

The author of the volume bearing the above title is Robert Ellis Thompson, president of the Central High School, Philadelphia. The publisher is Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York. President Thompson characterizes his work as "A study of national politics." The book contains 235 pages. This is an interesting piece of work. The reading of it will add to the sum of knowledge possessed by "the average man." The tone of the writer is generally optimistic. His spirit is cheerful. He is a man of faith. He believes in a personal God interested in national affairs. These statements are true of the writer and of the book as a whole. There is one exception. Chapter XVI is entitled, "The Parting of the Ways." The author is an "anti-imperialist" of the most pronounced type. Through fifteen pages he wails. His voice is sad in the extreme. God, who has been with the American people from the beginning, apparently forsook them in 1898. Diety is dead. There is such a contrast between the tone and style of this chapter and the other chapters of the book as to suggest the thought that the writer of these pages is not the writer of the other, more than 200 pages. His facts are the veriest fiction. His logic is unreason. How a man can write so good a book and put in it such a chapter, surpasses my comprehension. It is a pleasure, with this single exception, to commend the volume entitled, "The Hand of God in American History." Buy it, read it, loan it to your friends. The American people ought to believe in a God who is interested in and who is directing the affairs of nations—of our nation in particular. Jehovah is as certainly our God as he was the God of the people of Israel in the olden time.

In the current Sunday-school lessons we are reading and thinking of "The Hand of God in Hebrew History." Has he no hand in American history? This is a good time to read Mr. Thompson's book.

The Master of Millions. By George C. Lorimer. (Revell. $1.50.)

Dr. Lorimer's new novel is a somewhat remarkable piece of work. It has not the clerical tone nor the direct religious purpose which a clergyman's novel might be expected to have.

The story is a long one—nearly six hundred pages and none that could easily have been left out—and it is crowded with incident and action. The characters do not soliloquize and the author does not talk much about them, but they do things and at times very startling things. The scenes of the drama are Edinburgh, the East End of London, some of the centers of financial activity and social life in London, Melbourne and some other more remote parts of Australia, and the high seas. The prologue introduces about a dozen characters in Edinburgh, chief of whom is a young man who is falsely accused of a robbery and who escapes from jail, flees to London where he has brief, but important relations with several other people, and on the next day sails for Australia. After a lapse of fifty years he returns to England an eccentric multi-millionaire desirous of discovering the best use to make of his money. The plot is ingenious and intricate, but the author handles it masterfully and avoids confusion. The striking feature of the story is the marvelous series of coincidences which bring together the dozen or twenty people who had figured in the prologue fifty years before. It may be doubted whether really great fiction can rely so largely upon chance meetings and unexpected identifications and the accidental finding of long-lost uncles, daughters and sweethearts. But the author shows a power which would readily enable him to dispense with these rather tawdry accessories of fiction; and so, since he could evidently do without them, he is quite welcome to use them. But if he writes another novel—and we hope he will—we suspect that he will make less use of the somewhat shop-worn devices. "The Master of Millions," besides being what might be called a rattling good story, points the finger of mental scorn at some usages of the modern business and social world, and tickles with the straw of delicate irony, some of the peccadilloes of amiable men. It does not, however, throw much light on the problem of wisely using several million pounds sterling.

The Christ in Modern English Literature. By George Hamilton Combs, author of "Some Latter Day Religions," "The New Socialism." Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis. $1.

No publishing house in the country has done itself more credit and the public greater service within recent years than has the Christian Publishing Company in the publication of this handsome volume from the pen of its gifted author. The subject is one that appeals at once to a thoughtful mind, and its treatment is such as to deepen his interest from beginning to end. Mr. Combs has a talent, almost unique, in literary criticism, and possesses the rare power of seizing the essential points in an author's work, and of estimating its value and classifying it. It is a pretty good education in modern English literature to read and study this volume from his pen.

As to the scope of the work, it deals with the literature of power rather than with that of knowledge, and the term "modern" is used to cover roughly the field lying between Robert Burns and to-day. The chapter titles, "The Scope and Significance of the Enquiry," "The New Feeling for Christ," "The Literature of Silence," "Voices of Revolt," "Il Pene-roso," "Poets of Paganism," "Redemptive Ideals," "The Plaint of the Pessimist," "Echoes of the Orient," "The Vision," "Faith's Chorus," "The Outlook," give the reader an idea of the scope of the work. In power of analysis, in the command of a rich vocabulary that lends itself to the expression of finest shades of thought, in the ability to condense much in little without the sacrifice of perspicuity, the author must be given high rank among modern men of letters. We need not say that the chord of faith sounds clear and resonant throughout the work. Mr. Combs has rendered a distinct service to the cause of our common Christianity in this superb little volume, and if it does not meet with a wide reading among the thoughtful men of our time, it will not be for any lack of merit in content or literary style. In future editions of the book, of which we hope there may be several, the author should supply an

Report of Indiana Fish and Game Commissioner for Indiana. Z. T. Sweeney, Commissioner. 1901-2.

The editor is indebted to Mr. Z. T. Sweeney, Commissioner of Fisheries and Game for the state of Indiana for a finely bound copy of his biennial report to Governor Durbin of that state. It is inscribed, on a fly-leaf, to the Editor of this paper, "In memory of happy days spent together in pursuing 'the contemplative man's recreation,' with the best wishes of the author." The report embraces over 600 pages with a large number of the very finest illustrations of game of various kinds, particularly of birds and fishes. It is evidently far out of the beaten track of such reports. It is packed full of the most valuable information to the people of the state, concerning the kinds and qualities as well as the economic value of the wild birds and fish within the several localities of the state. People are in the habit of regarding these official reports as rather dull reading, but the present volume is anything but that. The beautifully colored plates of fishes and birds and wild animals, alone make it a most interesting family volume. The report points out the defects in the present game laws, and offers suggestions which ought to be of interest to the people of all our states. There is a compilation of the game laws of the different states, lists of birds and fishes belonging especially to the state of Indiana, an account of the enemies of fish and birds, directions to the angler of how and when to fish, directions about camping out, etc. The whole work smells of the country, and has in it the music of running brooks, the notes of the wild bird, and wide vistas of country life. Mr. Sweeney has earned the gratitude of the people of his state by the painstaking and conscientious labor he has given to this work, and the faithful manner in which he has discharged his duty as an official of the state. We prize the work highly for its information and as a gift from our fellow sportsman in many a successful fishing expedition.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Quiet Hour

That was a wise prayer uttered by the psalmist: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer!" Not the words of the mouth alone, but the secret thoughts of the heart, should be acceptable, not to man alone, but to the all-seeing eye of God. It is like another prayer of one of the psalmists—

"Search me, O God, and know my heart:
Try me and know my thoughts:
And see if there be any way of wickedness in me,
And lead me in the way everlasting."

"The kingdom of God cometh not by observation." It doesn't advance with flying banners, beating drums and sounding trumpets. Its advent in the world, and in the soul of each individual is like the dawning of the morning, so quietly and unobtrusively does it make its way. We are often discouraged because we feel that we are not advancing rapidly enough in Christian character. We are like children who plant seeds and impatiently dig them up the same day to see if they have sprouted! "Consider the lily, how it grows." It is not by fretting and worrying that it grows, but by quietly drinking in the dews of heaven and the gentle sunlight, gathering its simple nutriment from the soil without any anxiety or labored effort. So must the soul unfold, under the genial influences of the truth and spirit of God, growing up into Him who is our living head, even Christ.

"I walked over a meadow, and the air was full of delicious fragrance. Yet I could see no flowers. There was tall grass waving on all sides, but the fragrance did not come from the grass. Then I parted the grass and looked beneath it, and there, close to the earth, hidden out of sight by the showy growths in the meadow, were multitudes of lowly little flowers. I had found the secret of the sweetness—it poured out from these humble, hiding flowers. This is a picture of what is true everywhere in life. Not from the great, the conspicuous, the famed in any community, comes the fragrance which most sweetens the air, but from lowly lives, hidden, obscure, unpraised, which give out the aroma of unselfishness, of kindness, of gentleness."

For The Name!

"Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The watchword of the church of old!
The standard of the strong and bold!
And they rejoice to suffer shame,
Those men of old, for that loved Name:
Its praise in peaceful hymns they sung,
Yet prisons with its glory rung,
And courts and councils wondering heard
Unlettered men proclaim the word.
Above all names they held the Name,
All other things as dross became;
The Name to them was first and last,
In life or death they held it fast.
They loved and served with one accord
The Name of Jesus Christ our Lord.
Oh, life that oriflamme again
Before the weary eyes of men!
Uplift it high, afar proclaim
The glory of that deathless Name;
Proclaim its mighty power to save,
Proclaim its conquest of the grave,
Proclaim its mercy to the lost,
Its peace for sad hearts tempest-tossed.
It is a trumpet, sounding long
A call for service, willing, strong,
For men to face the power of sin,
To wrestle with the world and win,
To suffer, if the need be, shame,
And count it honor, For the Name!

—J. Mervin Hull, in Ram's Horn.

Our Father in heaven, help us to aspire to holier living! Forbid that we should be content to remain on the low levels where we now are. Thou art beckoning us to nobler heights, and the footprints of Jesus mark the way of ascent. Give us grace and strength to follow Him in service here that we may reign with Him in glory hereafter. For His name's sake. Amen!

TESTIMONY OF THE BRETHREN

The purpose and spirit of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is such that it ought to find a place in every Christian home. Its loyal, liberal position commends itself to all progressive minds. ROBT. E. HIERONYMUS.

(President Eureka, Ill., College.)

I especially enjoy the spirit of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST which makes for unity among the brethren and co-operation with all the lovers of our common Lord.

Irrington, Ind.

A. R. BENTON.

I like the spirit of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST because it is freer than any other of our religious papers from unpleasant contentions. I fear every uncharitable word spoken or written in controversy has its drop of vitriolic poison which may more than destroy the little good that is done.

DANIEL TRUNDLE, pastor,

Springdale, Ark.

I cannot think of doing without THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I look for its weekly visits almost as one looks for one of the family coming home. It always contains the things that comfort and strengthen me in my lonely journey. That God may strengthen you in your good work, is my prayer.

Port Falls, Idaho. MRS. S. M. GIBBINS.

I have been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for twenty years. It takes me longer to read it than any of several religious papers that I read. It is full of meat. It has helped me in my sermons, in my pastoral work and in my religious life. It says to our people, to other religious bodies, and to the world what I want said; and says it in a spirit I would like to possess. I am proud to hand it to any one, no matter what may be his belief or culture. I do not know of any agency for good upon which God seems to have laid more heavy obligations and before which He has opened more glorious possibilities.

FRANK M. DOWLING, pastor,

Pasadena, Cal.

I must not only congratulate you but also thank you for the introduction into THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of the "Quiet Hour." I have long felt the need of something like this in our papers. Very little fault can be found with any of our papers as to the soundness of their position, but I am sure the manner of contending for sound doctrine might be improved upon. There should be a great many articles like those in the "Quiet Hour," which are purely devotional. There is one book in the New Testament which teaches us how to become Christians and twenty-one which teach us how to live as Christians. I hope that I may live to see the day when we shall not only "be as wise as serpents, but as harmless as doves"—when we shall reprove one another in the "spirit of gentleness."

They raised the schoolroom window—
My, but the sky is blue!
And there's a pigeon strutting,
With melancholy coo;
And over there a hillside
Where leafy, spreading trees
Wave arms in useless summons
With every passing breeze.

Off yonder is an orchard—
Don't you catch the perfume
And hear the teacher thank us
For that big bunch of bloom?
The buzzing sounds of study
And writing—can't you hear?
And see where all the bad boys
Have good seats at the rear?

Now, let your head drop slowly
And look away—away—
Straight through the open window,
Through all the miles of day,
Across the sighing meadow,
And down the merry brook,
Which babbles of its travels
Through tempting field and nook.

The old school bell! You hear it?
And don't it bring to you
The lazy early mornings
When flowers dripping dew
Smiled knowingly, and flaunted
Their banners in your way?—
It's all in this Fifth Reader
Which you have found to-day.

How the Ball Rolled.

By Mrs. M. H. Cochran.

"Oh, grandpa, here are your glasses!"

A breathless schoolboy came running into the arbor where the old gentleman was seated.

"Where did you find them, my boy?"

"Over on Ned Water's porch. You know you sat there talking with his father last night."

"Yes, I remember taking them out to look at a photograph he showed me. But I thought you started out early to have a game of ball before school?"

"I did, but Ned told me about the glasses"—

"And you gave up your game to come this way and bring them to me?"

"I knew you'd want them, grandpa. I didn't mind."

The affectionate assurance beamed in the frank eyes which met the faded ones turned on him in loving recognition of the little act of unselfishness.

"You've been setting a ball rolling this morning, I think, Harold."

"I don't know what you mean, sir. I told you I left the ball-game."

"Not that kind of a ball. But you are now due at school. I'll tell you later what I mean."

"I have a little more time. Please go on."

"When I was a boy," began his grandfather, "my mother used sometimes to say to me, 'Can't you set a ball rolling to-day?'"

"She didn't say it very often," went on the old gentleman, "for that would have made it seem hackneyed. When she did say it, it seemed to come fresh, and stirred me up to try and see how I could work it, and I always found fun in it sooner or later. This was the kind of ball she meant—she had talked it over with me long ago and didn't need to say anything more—to make a special point of doing a kind, helpful thing to some one, and set it rolling by asking the one receiving it to pass it along in the shape of kindness to some one else, the some one else to ask still another to have it passed on."

"That's jolly," said Harold, with a laugh. "It's like having other folks do your good things for you. Did you use to try it?"

"Yes, I did."

"And did your ball ever go very far?"

"Oh, I cannot say as to that. You can't keep track of it very far, you know. It is like a good many other things that we do for the love of what's right—we have to leave the results with the Lord, in full faith that he will bless our efforts."

"I'm going to try it," said Harold, "I shall begin this very morning."

"Then come to-night and tell me all about it."

Harold sought his grandfather with a face which showed that he had a story to tell.

"I went to school after I left you, sir," he began. "I had my dinner-basket with a good lunch and a bag of peanuts in it. Just as I passed the corner of the woods, I heard some shouting, and Jack Pierce came running along with his dog. Rover had started a chipmunk. I knew he couldn't catch it, but it's always sport to see him paw and howl when the chatting little rascal gets up a tree out of his way, so I waited to see. I put my basket behind a stump and went a few steps into the woods. Just as I came out I saw a boy stealing along toward my basket. I hid behind a tree and watched. I saw him open the basket and take out the nuts. Then I gave a whoop and jumped on him."

"You rascal!" I said. "So you want my nuts, do you?" I was just going to give him a shake when it flashed on me to think of your ball. My ball, I mean—the ball I was to set rolling. I thought this was a good chance, so I said:

"Billy, I don't believe you want to be a thief. I know you are not that kind of a boy. You just didn't think."

"He looked a great deal more astonished than he would if I'd thrashed him. He put back the nuts, saying:

"I'm sorry; I will think next time. You're real good to me."

"Well," I said, "if you think so, you do something good yourself to-day. Now, is that a promise, Billy?" "I will," he said. Then I gave him the nuts; he didn't want to take them, but I made him. Then, it is a little strange, grandpa, but I did see a little of the passing on. When I came home I went round by a way I don't often go, and soon I was passing Billy's house, and on the porch was his little lame sister—they're dreadfully poor—and, grandpa, I saw peanut shells on the steps. So you see, Billy had kept his promise by giving them to her."

Grandpa smiled one of his beautiful smiles.

"I don't believe that was all that followed the starting of your ball," he said.

"It was all I know anything about," said Harold.

"You forget, perhaps, that you had already set a ball rolling this morning in bringing me my glasses."

"Oh, grandpa, dear, that wasn't what you call doing a kindness. That was—why—I don't call it a duty, but just a little thing I did because I liked to."

Grandpa patted Harold's head as he went on:

"But, you see, I took it as an obligation laid on me to roll your ball on. So I had to keep it in mind."

"You, grandpa?" Harold looked highly amused as he listened with a look of great interest.

"I must go back a little," said his grandfather. "As I went into town on the trolley two or three weeks ago, I saw a forlorn-looking boy, evidently also on the way to the city, but not taking it as easy as I was taking it, he depending on his legs to get him there. An hour later he came to my office, asking me to take him as an office boy and errand runner. He begged so hard, telling such a pitiful story, that I agreed to try him."

"As the days went on I found him active, willing and bright about comprehending his duties, but notwithstanding all this, I began before long to realize that he had a fault so serious as to overbalance all his merits. He was tricky and deceitful. I had reason to know that he was dishonest in trifles and would do things behind my back that he would not do before my face. I knew the little rascal was very anxious to stay, so I felt sorry to think of turning him out. He gave me a great shock of astonishment by coming to me this morning with a confession of his misdoings, made of his own accord."

"Ho!" said Harold, in great surprise.

"Yes, he did. He told me of small trickery—things I knew he had done, but he didn't know I knew. Then he said, between catches of his breath: 'I—don't want to be a thief. I ain't—that kind of a boy. I—just—didn't think'—"

"Grandpa!" Harold exclaimed in astonishment, "what is the name of your boy?"

"William Hart."

"Not—Billy?"

"Yes, the same Billy, whose way your ball rolled this morning. I talked with him and he told me about some one who said he knew he didn't mean to be a thief. 'And I don't,' he repeated. And I promised him I'd do something good, so I—had to tell you."

"Grandpa, what did you say to him? Did you turn him away?"

"You seem to forget," again with the loving smile, "that you had already set a ball rolling my way. It was my bounden duty to send that ball rolling further. Poor Billy had given his honest shove in coming to me with his confession. So I forgave him and promised that he should remain on condition of his mending his ways. And with such a wise mentor as you, I have little doubt he will. It will, probably," grandfather spoke more soberly, "be a turning point in the boy's life. If so, your ball will keep on rolling, who can tell with what benefi-cent results. For if Billy should turn out a good boy and a good man, instead of a bad one—think of the difference it will make to all within his reach."

"Oh, it is so wide, so wide," said Harold, with a face of deep thought.

"Yes, we never can tell how wide our influence may be, or how far the effect of a kind action may reach."—N. Y. Observer.

Why the Leaves Turn Red.

"Ankis, why do the leaves turn red in the fall?" It was Fritzie that asked the question, one October afternoon, of his friend Ankis, the Indian, as they were walking through the woods.

"Haven't I ever told you?" answered Ankis in surprise. "It is one of the old legends of our tribe." And as they seated themselves under a maple tree that blazed with color, Ankis began: "Long, long ago there were a great many more trees than there are now, and a great many more birds, too. And the trees loved the birds, for the little feathered people sang from early dawn till late at night, and flashed their blue and yellow and brown wings everywhere through the green forest. And the trees said to one another: 'O, how dull it would be if we didn't have our birds!'"

"So the trees spread out their limbs like great, loving hands to hold up the tiny nests, and they covered the bird homes with thick foliage to hide them from the prowling squirrels until the fledgelings should have grown up and flown away."

"But one night in the month of the harvest moon, when the feathery thistle ships were no longer sailing the ocean of the air, a messenger came running down from the white country in the north, and whispered into the ears of the trees. He was a little Frost Boy, and his words were: 'Beware! The Chief of the Cold is coming. And he has with him a great snow army. And all their quivers are full of ice arrows.'"

"Then the trees made ready to meet the army of the Chief of the Cold, and wrapped their bark close round their bodies and the bodies of their frail bud children. Suddenly some one thought of the birds."

"Do they know the snow army is coming?" And the trees tried to warn their friends; but the trees cannot talk very loud, and the mother-birds were so busy teaching their children to fly and sing that they heard nothing of what the trees whispered.

"O, how can we make the birds hear?" the trees cried in agony.

"Then a maple tree said: 'I know. Let's light a fire signal as the Indians do, and when the birds see the flame they will come to ask what it means. Then we can tell them.'"

"And they did so. The next morning the fire signals had been set a-burning among all the leaves of the forest, and everywhere the trees were red and crimson and scarlet. Sure enough, the birds hastened to learn what it meant, and the birds told them that the Chief of the Cold was on his way. When the birds heard it, they swiftly rose on the wing and started for the southland."

Kola Plant CURES HAY-FEVER AND ASTHMA.

Free. The African Kola Plant is Nature's Positive Cure for Hay-fever and

The Kola Plant.

Asthma. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma in every form. Its cures are really marvelous.

Dr. J. R. Duncan, the oldest physician of Crawfordsville, Ind., writes Jan. 29th, I feel it my duty to tell all I can of the great virtue of Himalaya. Dr. W. H. Vail, a prominent physician of St. Louis, Mo., writes March 8th, that he used Himalaya on six different Hay-fever patients last fall with satisfactory results in every case. Mr. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes Jan. 31st, that Himalaya permanently cured him of Hay-Fever and Asthma and strongly recommends it to sufferers. Mrs. M. A. Scott, Crosby, Mich., writes March 6th, that Himalaya completely cured her after fifteen years persistent suffering of Hay-fever and Asthma. Mr. Alfred C. Lewis, editor of the Farmers' Magazine, Washington, D. C., was also cured, although he could not lie down for fear of choking, being always worse in Hay-fever season. Rev. J. L. Coombs, of Martinsburg, W. Va., wrote to the New York World, July 23d, that Himalaya cured him of Asthma of thirty years' standing.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalaya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should use it before the season of the attacks when practical, to give it time to act on the system. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to The Kola Importing Co., No. 1166 Broadway, New York.

the Frost Boy brings his warning to the trees, they light their fire signal of red leaves. Whenever you see those red leaves, Fritzie, watch carefully, and you will find the birds every night and morning flying southward to escape the ice arrows of the snow army."—*Herbert A. Living Up to Our Prayers.

At the morning meal, the head of the family repeated, as was his custom, "Lord, we thank thee for these blessings thou hast so provided," and then, as was also his custom, began to grumble about hard times, the poor quality of the food they were forced to eat, the way it was cooked, etc.

"Father," interrupted his little daughter, "do you s'pose God heard what you said awhile ago?"

"Certainly," with a confident air of a religious instructor.

"And did he hear what you said about potatoes and coffee?"

"Of course," not quite so confidently.

"Then, father, which one did God believe?"

So my dear young Christians, when you say in the meeting that you will "praise the Lord with all your heart," or that you are thankful to him for being so kind to you, and then complain of about everything that has fallen to your lot, which do you suppose God believes?—Ex.

An Incident.

Sitting back of me in a train the other day were a mother and her promising boy. The conductor had punched the mother's ticket, and, as a ticket had not been provided for the lad, the conductor, looking at the boy, politely said, "Is your boy under five, madam?"

"Yes," was the prompt reply.

The conductor moved on, and then I heard the youngster say, "Why, mamma, I am past six."

Instantly, with frowning face and a countenance blazing with wrath, the mother said: "Don't you ever contradict me again. I know what I am saying. If the conductor had heard you say that, he would have made me pay half-fare for you. Don't ever say again on the train that you are past six. If you do, I'll whip you when we get home." The boy was still and thoughtful for a moment. Then I heard him say, "But mamma, I am past six." A slap followed; the child cried; the mother looked like a tempest; and I fairly boiled with indignation.

It is just an incident on a railroad train, yet possibly one that will be more harmful to a boy morally than an ordinary railroad accident might have been to him physically. One such experience in a boy's life may mar his whole career. Then think of the mother's personal sins. She lied to the conductor; she lied to her own boy; she cheated the railroad; she abused her child. And all that to save one dollar and twenty-five cents, the price of a half-fare ticket from New York to Philadelphia. May God pity the boy and forgive the mother.—Christian Endeavor World.

Laid Up in His Head.

Daniel Webster once told a good story in a speech, and was asked where he got it.

"I had it laid up in my head for fourteen years, and never got a chance to use it until to-day," said he.

Some little boy or girl wants to know what good it will do to learn the "rule of three," or to commit a verse of the Bible. The answer is this: "Some time you will need that very thing. Perhaps it will be twenty years before you can make it fit in just the right place, but it will be just in place some time; then if you don't have it, you will be like the hunter who had no ball in his rifle when the bear met him."—Selected.

Facts About Wesley.

It is said that John Wesley preached, during his active life, over 42,000 times, an average of fifteen times per week.

He gave away during fifty years of his life, $150,000.

He published about two hundred volumes.

He never lost a night's sleep in his life before his seventieth year.

His favorite maxim was, "Always in haste, but never in a hurry."

He never worried. He said, "Ten thousand cares are no more weight to my mind than ten thousand hairs to my head."—The Gospel Messenger.

The effeminate youth is not admired by anybody, but the restraint of politeness keeps most of us from telling him so. The young woman of the following story was hindered by no such delicacy:

"Yes, my hands are soft," said young Dudley at a small party the other night, as he gazed at his useless appendages. Then he added, "Do you know how I do it? I always sleep with my gloves on."

"And do you sleep with your hat on too?" asked a pert young woman.—Exchange.

Two Ways of Helping.

There was nothing more beautiful in this world than to observe the tenderness of some girls toward their aged relatives. Dear grandmother cannot thread her needles so easily as she used to do, and is sensitive on the subject, and does not like to be too obviously helped.

Mattie, a kind-hearted girl without much tact, will exclaim: "Oh, Gran! What a perfect nonsense for you to fuss over that needle. You know that you can not find the hole where the thread should go in; your eyes are too old; I'll thread your needles."

The intention is most excellent, but the old lady is hurt and stifles a sigh.

Edith, in the same circumstances manages in another fashion. She simply threads a dozen needles and leaves them already for grandmother in her needlebook, saying pleasantly, "It saves so much time in these busy days to have one's needles all ready and waiting."—Exchange.

Mrs. C. "Do you believe that cures can be effected by the laying on of hands?"

Mrs. D. "Most certainly. I cured my boy of smoking cigarettes that way."

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

I said I would tell you something about our Soldiers' Reunion here in Plattsburg, but I have so many letters on hand, I haven't the heart to take up your room. However, I will touch upon the most noticeable and attractive feature, of the encampment; it wasn't the faces of the war-scarred veterans, or the feeling of patriotism and warm comradeship that existed in the daily papers (there is a great deal of patriotism in the daily papers.) When other people tell you about old soldiers' reunions, they may talk about these delightful things, but it's mostly talk, now believe me. The most prominent feature to my mind, of our big doings, was a little pasteboard barrel painted red, white and blue, so it would be American, and there was a string attached to the bottom. You rub your fingers with rosin and pull on the string. The string will do the rest. It makes a sound like a hen squaking,—like a hen of the size of a horse,—such as she would squak. The toy is called "chicken." Most everybody had one (except real old people) and we all made them "go" at once, and cared about the speaker in the bandstand, waving his hands, and being red in the face, and not being heard? Maybe he was denouncing secession or imperialism; we didn't care—we had our chicken.

Jean Chambers, Richwood, Ky.: "I liked Helen Ross's account of her show. It's lot of fun to be in one. When I was a real little girl I helped get up two entertainments, and they were fine!" (Wish I could have been there,—but probably I was too little to appreciate them, and might have cried and have had to be carried out.) "The boys and girls here are worse than where Gaston McElly lives; they won't even have parties. They don't do anything but 'just walk around.' I wished Gaston and some others like him lived here." (Well, you're there,—that's one good thing!) "I am glad Clarence Per Lee sent his story about the Evening Press Boys. I like stories better than letters, especially . . . I think we will have to get up a petition signed by all the Av. S. members, for the author of 'Pete' to write us another one." (Those dots back there mean that I left out some of this letter because I am so shrinking when anybody praises me.) "My report is not very 'fat.' I don't want to run any risk of your paying an extra two cents, and I don't want to pay it myself. It is a good thing, sure enough, to have cents convenient for S. S.—to say nothing of any easy conscience about the savages. Blue and old gold are my favorites for the Av. S. colors, and I hope they won." (They did.)

Alice Kindred, Belding, Mich. (Nobody can say that they have no kindred in the Advance Society); "I wrote you a letter when we lived at Eureka, Ill." (and a very good one it was), "and I was going to write again when we moved to Michigan; but I have been too busy playing." (Can you do it without your notes?) "We crossed Lake Michigan and didn't get drowned. I was not much afraid, for Grandpa Hieronymus and papa were with us." (Oh, you wasn't! well it sounded like you were relieved of unpleasant expectations—that triumphant remark about not getting drowned.) "They can both swim. At Chicago we visited the parks, but I liked Lincoln Park best." (Yes, I suppose the name brought before your mind the great and vital struggle of the past century.) "For there is where they have so many animals." (Oh, yes, I see, now.) "I liked the monkeys; mamma liked to look at the flowers best." (The reason is that mammas get tired of monkeys.) "George Erskine, we did not see Nose End, but we will watch for it when we go to the Detroit convention this month. Grandpa Hieronymus stayed with us awhile at Macatawa. We got tired wading in the sand." (Yes, that is strenuous exercise for grandpas.) "We went in the woods and up a great many steps to the Tabernacle, but we could not get inside for we could not climb the fence." (Now I don't exactly understand this adventure. I cannot believe that there was a pay-entertainment in that Tabernacle, and that it was your intention and also that of Grandpa Hieronymus to "slip under the tent" as it were. From what I have always heard of your grandfather, I believe him a gentleman who pays as he goes. Yet this fence was surely a very carefully built affair that it could not be climbed; it looks like they meant for it to keep people out. I hope your next visit will be to Missouri. Girls can climb fences in Missouri.) "We like to live in Michigan." (Accompanying this letter from Alice was a copy of it very evidently in an older and surer hand, with this at the top: "Copy of Alice's letter; her letter is not written plainly for a busy man." It is needless to say that I barely glanced at this "copy" then immediately cast it into the wastebasket which I keep for old people's letters. I was never too busy to read children's letters, and I enjoy them in all the native jungles of twisted, gnarled and sprouting lines and dashes. We hope to hear from Alice just as soon as she is not too busy playing, to write.)

Grace Read, Dermid, Ontario: "How did you all spend your vacation?" (I wish our members would answer this question in their next letters to me.) "I spent the most of mine picking raspberries and washing dishes. Our school has not begun yet." (In your vacation environments, I should certainly be eager for it to begin. I would not want to enjoy myself as you are doing the whole year. It would not be right simply to have fun in that way, and idle away my time. But I must apologize to my preacher-friends for using a word which has become their peculiar property—I mean "environment"—without which they can hardly work from one end of a sermon to the other.) "Our teacher has not come that we sent for." (Can't you get a telegram to her? I shall feel better when I know your vacation is over.) "I vote for white and old gold." (Blue and old gold have received the majority vote.) "I am reading Gulliver's Travels. I like it quite well."

Burleigh Cash, Hood River, Ore.: "School begins Monday. I will be

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial, postpaid. Call or write us about your case. We give advice free and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Prof. Wilson's 100-page Dictionary of Disease, Free. glad when it begins," (dishes?) "The strawberry business calls for a continuous round of work from spring to fall, cultivating, hoeing, picking, packing, toping and irrigating." (Topping is a new word to me, but no doubt means eating, as this is an important function connected with strawberries. Am I right? It isn't in my dictionary, but I think 'topping' must refer to eating as 'topper' does to one who gets too much.) "When we go to the top of Mount Hood, we will tell you all about the trip. In building a barn to-day, I 'hit the wrong nail,' sprained my wrist and had bad luck. I like blue and old gold. I will not get to go to the St. Louis Fair, but will think of you all having a nice time together. I must wait till 1905 for the Lewis and Clarke Fair in Portland. If you have to pay extra postage for this, let me know, and I will bonce your postmaster. I know how it is—paying postage I mean." (Pinches, don't it!)

The Chinese Story-Teller, or the Changed Story, by Wm. Remfry Hunt (Foreign Christian Missionary Society). Author of "Facts About China," with a foreword by W. P. Bentley, M. A. This is a handsome cloth bound volume with seventeen illustrations, and contains 167 pages. The price is 75 cents.

"This is an interior view of China and of Chinese life. It breathes the spirit of orientalism. It is a thrilling story of a heroic life. Evangelist Shi Kwei Piao, the Chinese story-teller, is a most interesting character, a genius in his way, an orator of native ability, and a shining illustration of the power of the gospel to redeem and purify human life. Mr. Shi was a Chinese story-teller, wandering from village to village, and a victim of the opium habit, who had experienced all the misery and wretchedness of that worst form of slavery. The gospel story touched his heart, aroused his better nature and led to a death-grapple with the opium habit in which, through prayer and struggle and conflict and defeats, he came at last to complete victory and to freedom, and is now a wise, able and consecrated preacher, laboring successfully in connection with our other missionaries in China. His picture, which is the frontispiece of the book, indicates a strong character. Incidental to the story of this remarkable life, there is much of Chinese history, customs and characteristics. The book is illustrated with pen drawings, is handsomely bound in yellow, and is one of the most valuable contributions to our foreign missionary literature. It is the latest book from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, and deserves a wide reading from the brethren in this country who wish to know how their brethren in China live and labor, and what is the outlook for their work. The author dedicates his work to 'Dr. W. T. Moore, M. A., LL. D., from whom I first learned to interpret the story of the Christ.'"

For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

The ordinary yellow laundry soap may do well enough for scrubbing and for the coarser work in the laundry, but to get a clear snow white in the linens and muslins, to save the costly embroideries and the sheer and delicate fabrics, to avoid the unpleasant odor that is often too perceptible in the towels and bed linen, use Ivory Soap, a pure soap made of only the cleanest, best materials.

About the Bible.

The Bible is the sheet anchor of our liberties.—General Grant.

My heart has deceived me a thousand times, but that book has never deceived me once.—D. L. Moody.

It is impossible to mentally or socially enslave a Bible-reading people. The principles of the Bible are the ground work of human freedom.—Horace Greely.

After having sought the truth with some diligence for half a century I am, at this day, hardly sure of anything but what I learn from the Bible.—John Wesley.

I am profitably engaged in reading the Bible. Take all this Book that you can upon reason, and the balance on faith, and you will live and die a better man.—Abraham Lincoln.

It is from hence our myriad evils spring—from our ignorance of the Scriptures. Hence grows this epidemic of heresies; hence our neglected lives, hence our unfruitful toil.—Chrysostom.

As bread is used by us with all our other food during our whole life, so ought the study of the Word of God to accompany all our other studies. That Word should be our ailment and guide to the end of our pilgrimage.—Jean Frederic Oberlin.

Every thinking man, when he thinks, realizes what a very large number of people tend to forget that the teachings of the Bible are so interwoven and entwined with our whole civic and social life that it would be literally—I do not mean figuratively, I mean literally—impossible for us to figure to ourselves what that life would be if these teachings were removed. . . . Almost every man who has by his life work added to the sum of human achievement of which the race is proud, of which our people are proud, almost every such man has based his life work largely upon the teachings of the Bible. . . . I plead for a closer and wider and deeper study of the Bible, so that our people may be in fact as well as in theory, "doers of the Word and not hearers only."—Theodore Roosevelt.

The time limit for the ratification of the Hay-Herran canal treaty expired at midnight Tuesday, Sept. 22. The rumors that Colombia would at the last moment take some step to prevent the treaty from failing persisted until within a few hours of that time. The most plausible suggestion was that, if Colombia could persuade the canal company to pay say $10,000,000 out of the $40,000,000 which it is to receive from the United States government, the treaty might be ratified without the demand for any increase in the amount to be paid by the United States to Colombia. The gist of the matter seems to be that Colombia wants more money than we are willing to pay. It seems natural, therefore, for her to try to make up the difference by levying on the company which will be the most immediate sufferer if the negotiations are entirely given up. Perhaps there was not time to properly develop this scheme. At any rate the time limit was reached before action was taken and the Hay-Herran treaty is dead. There are now four possible courses to pursue: to negotiate a new treaty with Colombia on the slender hope that terms can be found which the Colombian congress will accept and which our senate will not reject; to proceed to build the canal without a new treaty and with only the authority of the treaty entered into half a century ago, which expired by specific limitation about twenty-five years ago; to encourage the insurgents of the province of Panama in their rebellion and rely upon getting a concession from them when they have gained their independence; or to give up the Panama route and negotiate treaties with Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

The demand for an "elastic currency," which would automatically increase in volume in times of special need and contract when the exigency has passed, has given rise to many schemes for currency legislation and many devices of the Treasury Department. Secretary Shaw's latest project has been widely commended and almost as widely criticized. His plan is to deposit government funds which are now available to the amount of $40,000,000 in national banks, which shall be required to deposit approved bonds in the treasury as security. By accepting state, city and other approved bonds as security for deposits, more elasticity is given to the volume of circulating currency than is obtained by the issue of national bank notes which must be secured by government bonds. The device is a simple one, is popular with the banks, and, within certain limits, it works. There have been plenty of applications for deposits under the conditions laid down. In fact, it works almost too well, for the demand for bonds to be used in this way as security for deposits has sent up the price of government bonds so high that some of the banks show a tendency to call in their bank notes so that they may secure and sell the bonds which are now deposited as security for the issue. This will, of course, prevent the very result which the secretary desires to secure, namely, the expansion of the volume of currency, and he has threatened to head off this movement by making a black-list of banks which call in their notes and refusing to place deposits with them.

It must be evident, however, that this blacklist is a mere make-shift. If the expansion and contraction of the currency are to be effected automatically as business conditions may require—and that is the condition which elastic currency must meet—then the operation of the system must not be dependent upon black-lists or any similar device controlled arbitrarily by the Secretary of the Treasury or by any one else. The real trouble with the system is that it is entirely too dependent upon the action of the Secretary of the Treasury. There is nothing automatic about it. The theory of it is that the Secretary of the Treasury has at his disposal the entire surplus of the treasury, and may deposit it where he pleases. When in his judgment the business of the country demand an increase in the volume of currency, he can deposit as much as he thinks necessary with banks which offer approved security. As the banks receive the interest on the bonds which they deposit as security, just as if they held them in their own vaults, and pay no interest to the government on the cash which is deposited with them, though they receive interest for it when they lend it out to their patrons, it may readily be seen that the arrangement is a good thing for the banks, and that a demand for these deposits will not necessarily indicate a money famine through the country generally. The Secretary of the Treasury will have to be governed more by his judgment of the general conditions than by the offers of the banks to receive deposits. The great fault of Secretary Shaw's scheme is that it is autocratic where it should be automatic. It may possibly be the best way of meeting a present emergency, but it is no solution at all for the problem of providing an elastic currency.

Since the partial dissolution of the British cabinet, King Edward has been more than ever manifesting a disposition to take an active part in the conduct of the government of which he is the nominal head. His ambitions in this direction are not considered by sober-minded people to constitute any menace to the constitution, but they are certainly out of harmony with the precedents which have been established by British sovereigns during the past century. Since the resignation of Chamberlain and three other members of the cabinet, Mr. Balfour has been making an extended visit to the King at Balmoral for the purpose, undoubtedly, of canvassing the list of eligible names to fill the vacancies in the cabinet. That the King should do more than formally ratify the nominations of the Premier, is in itself a novelty. King Edward is disposed to exercise to the full his constitutional right to veto and he is said to be particularly anxious to secure a Secretary of War who will remedy the defects which were revealed by the South African war, and who will render impossible the repetition of such scandals as have been disturbing the peace of the government ever since. It is even said that the King wishes to succeed General Roberts as Commander-in-Chief of the army. This in itself would be no startling innovation, since this position had always been held by a member of the royal family until five years ago, when the old Duke of Cambridge was forced out of the office under the pressure of Liberal sentiment, which felt the need of army reforms and despaired of getting them under a Commander-in-Chief who was connected with the reigning house. The general conditions under Wolseley and Roberts have been no better than before, and the King has this justification for his desire to take the work into his own hands. Already during the few years of his reign, King Edward has taken a far more active part in the work of the government than Queen Victoria ever did. In particular he has taken an active interest in foreign affairs and his visits to the courts of Europe and to the President of France have had both the intention and the effect of diplomatic negotiations. None of the new members of the cabinet has yet been announced, but when they are chosen it is safe to say that they will owe their selection quite as much to the King as to the Premier.

Mayor Low has been renominated for Mayor of New York both by the New York Republican convention and by the Citizens' Politics. Union. The latter organization, which is a strictly non-partisan reform movement made possible the election of Mr. Low two years ago, and has been an important factor in the redemption of the city government since then. Strange to say, the Union was not at all unanimous in its support of Mr. Low this time, although no one denied that he has made a good Mayor, and that he has satisfactorily fulfilled the promise of reform. The chief criticisms upon Mr. Low were that he has no sense of humor and that he is "too cold." We are pretty well accustomed to the notion that the chief qualification of a politician is an ability to "jolly" his constituents. But Mr. Low was made mayor of New York on the distinct understanding that he was to conduct the city government on business principles. Those who admit that he has done this ought not to object to him, because he has, perhaps, brought from the university a certain academic frigidity of demeanor which contrasts harshly with the merry laugh of the "boys" who think that a glad hand is the chief thing in city politics, and brains and honor nothing at all. The greatest anomaly of the campaign is Mr. Jerome's opposition to Mayor Low. The ground of his opposition is the opinion that Mr. Low cannot be elected. He has not mentioned any good man whom he thinks could be elected, but his deportment is that of a man who has more or less definitely in mind the name of William Travers Jerome as a suitable candidate for mayor of Greater New York. The Tammany ticket, as now arranged, is headed by the name of William Ziegler, president of the Royal Baking Powder Company and backer of polar expeditions.

An authority who has given special study to the subject asserts that during the past five years there have been twenty times as many murders in Kentucky as in New York state, and thirty times as many legal executions in New York as in Kentucky. These figures may or may not be accurate, but there is no question but that the feud system in the mountain districts of Kentucky brings up the average of violent crimes in that state tremendously and reduces the percentage of legal punishments in proportion. A good deal of interest has been focused on Breathitt county recently by reason of the trial of Curtis Jett for two murders. Jett has served time in the penitentiary for a serious crime, but was pardoned by the governor a few years ago, the abuse of the pardoning power being one element in weakening the force of law in that state. The petition for Jett's pardon was presented to the governor by J. B. Marcum, an attorney. But Marcum had certain hereditary enemies and these feudists, pursuing the honorable methods of their class, hired an assassin to put him out of the way. The man whom they chose for this service and who consented to be used, was this same Jett whom Marcum had been instrumental in having pardoned. The verdict, after two trials, was imprisonment for life. But Jett had to answer for another crime committed about the same time—the murder of James Cockrill, a town marshall. For this crime Jett was last week sentenced to death.

A program of administrative reforms for Macedonia has been prepared by Bulgaria, and the Turkish authorities are said to be giving it favorable consideration. Only by the speedy adoption of some such agreement can war between Bulgaria and Turkey be averted and interest is now focused upon these negotiations. The terms suggested by Bulgaria are as follows: Turkey is to grant a general amnesty throughout Macedonia and is to stop the persecutions. A mixed commission is to be formed, at least half of the members of which are to be Bulgarians, nominated by the Bulgarian Exarch, to draw up the details of a system of administrative reforms and to provide for the execution of those reforms, which will include an extension of local autonomy, equality of Christians and Mohammedans before the courts, provisions for the protection of life and property, and reforms in taxation and the police service. This mixed commission is to be a permanent administrative council on Macedonian affairs with headquarters at Salonika. It is also provided that the villages which have been burned by Turkish troops shall be rebuilt at the Sultan's expense. These conditions have not yet been entirely accepted by Turkey, but they form a basis for negotiations. Even if Turkey should consent to them all, there would still be room for suspicion that she is not acting in good faith and that ways will be found of preventing the effective execution of the reforms. Turkey has often before now promised reforms and taken advantage of such negotiations to give time to re-inforce the agents who are doing her diabolical work. For our part, we see in these negotiations little hope for anything more than another installment of the temporizing and procrastinating that has constituted the whole substance of Turkish reforms up to the present time. The only thing that will do any good is something which Turkey will not grant except under compulsion—namely, a complete and permanent evacuation of the territory which now constitutes Turkey in Europe (with the exception, perhaps, of Constantinople and its environs) and the establishment of a state owing only nominal allegiance to the Sultan, and either independent in government like Bulgaria or under the protectorate of some strong power as Egypt is under the protectorate of Great Britain. And the only way to realize this program is to approach Turkey with an overwhelming naval and military force and take away from her, with such violence as may be necessary, the territory which only four centuries ago she took with violence from Christian Europe.

We fear that the people have not yet begun to appreciate the magnitude of the calamity which overtook the inhabitants of Jamaica a few weeks ago. There was but little loss of life, but the destruction of property was immense. Appeals for help have been made through our columns, but the returns so far have been very unsatisfactory. We call especial attention to the following statement from C. C. Smith and urge all our readers to send contributions for this object to the address given below:

"Up to Sept. 21 only $128 had been sent to Indianapolis for the Jamaica sufferers. This would be a sum amazing for its smallness were it not for the fact that the churches were asked to make a canvass, and to make a canvass of a church takes time. I now know of many churches that are raising money for the Jamaica relief fund, but have not yet sent it on.

"A case of suffering almost unparalleled among our people has been laid, through all our papers, before the members of the church. Surely our churches will not fail in this.

"Yet do all realize that relief must be sent immediately? The people must be fed now, and must have money with which to buy seeds in order that they may keep famine away at a later day. Hurry the canvass through in your churches and send the money on to Indianapolis that it may be sent on to Jamaica at once.

"The next word received from Indianapolis should be: The sums for the Jamaica relief fund are beginning to come in fast. Large sums and many of them should be sent. Every church should raise a fund. Individuals and societies should send gifts.

"Send all moneys for the Jamaica relief fund to Helen E. Moses, 152 E. Market St., Indianapolis, Ind."

What Profit is There in Prayer?

This question was asked by the skeptics and scoffers of Job's time. It has been raised by unbelievers in every age. We doubt if there is any more practical test of genuine faith than the use one makes of prayer. It is not uncommon to-day to hear men reasoning that since God knows all things there is no reason why we should make our requests unto Him. It has been even said by some that prayer is an indication of a lack of trust in God. The short answer to all this shallow philosophy and false logic is that Jesus constantly prayed to His Father and taught his disciples to pray. If the Son of God himself found relief from the strain of his earthly labors in prayer and felt the need of it that he might carry on his great work for humanity, and if knowing our human nature as he did, he taught and encouraged his disciples to pray, we can afford to dismiss all objections either to the philosophy or to the practical utility of prayer.

We spoke briefly last week of some of the benefits resulting from prayer, but the importance of the subject leads us to dwell on it at further length. It is to be feared that there is great neglect of private and family prayer. There is such an infinite loss involved in this neglect that we feel it laid upon us as a duty to urge upon our readers the importance of availing themselves daily of this inestimable privilege. We doubt if the value of prayer as a means of spiritual culture is properly appreciated by the great majority of professed Christians. It is deemed a rare privilege and a great means of social and intellectual culture to associate with the great and wise men of earth. There is something in such companionship that leads us to put forth the best that is in us and to restrain the evil. If this be the influence of the good and great of earth upon those who associate with them, who can doubt the purifying and ennobling influence of companionship and communion with God? When Moses communed with God in that intimate relation which is described as speaking with him face to face, he caught something of the glory of the divine presence in his countenance so that his face shone when he came down from the mountain. No one can spend a few moments each day in real communion with God without reflecting in his countenance and character somewhat of that light which never shone on sea or land.

It will be remembered that in Luke's report of the transfiguration scene that it was while our Lord was engaged in prayer that the fashion of his countenance was changed and even his raiment became white as light. Is there not a suggestion here which harmonizes with all our Christian experience, that it is through prayer that our lives and our characters are to be transfigured after the image of Christ?

It is not simply that in prayer we get things we ask for, but the very fact of feeling that he is near, that we are in his presence, that he knows our hearts and that there is fellowship between him and us, must have an exalting influence upon the soul. For this reason it is not always necessary that we be speaking to God when we are in the attitude of prayer. It must be remembered that it is in these moments of quietness that God speaks to us, and our ears, or our hearts rather, should be open to the faintest whispers of his love.

Prayer cultivates the spirit of submission to the will of God. He who prays at all must pray in the spirit of Jesus: "Not my will, Father, but thine be done." To expect God to answer every petition in the form in which we ask it, would be most unreasonable. He is too kind and gracious for that. He would not be a real father if he granted every request just as we expect it to be granted. We heard of a brother recently whose faith was wrecked because the prayers of the people of the United States and of the world for the life of President Garfield were not answered. And yet who can say that these prayers were not answered? In so far as they were real prayers they were offered subject to the divine will. No doubt he heard those prayers and no doubt he answered them in his own way, which we may be able to see after a while was the best way. There is no reason to doubt that every sincere, earnest prayer offered to God has its reward.

But it would be easy to fill a whole volume or many volumes with instances of specific answers to prayer. Perhaps every reader of this article could furnish instances in his own experience where God has heard and has answered his prayer in a way which left no doubt that it was in response to his request. All of us would have more such instances in our experience if we would put God to the test more frequently. Who of us cannot tell of burdens released, of strength furnished in weakness, of light shining in darkness to illumine our pathway, of temptations overcome, of conscience relieved from the sense of guilt through means of prayer?

Said Rev. R. J. Campbell in a recent sermon: "I have often said that if I can get a man to pray, not now and then, but as the habit of his life, I have been the means of saving him. He will be strong instead of weak; instead of leaning for help upon his fellows, he will be their benefactor and the ambassador of the Unseen. Get a man to pray, and you have made him strong, you have given him faith, you have made him climb; get a man to pray, and the Holy Spirit will shine through him, and the world will be better because he lives."

There is, then, much profit in prayer. It is perhaps the highest means of spiritual culture and development.

Nothing, we believe, would do more to open up larger streams of liberality and beneficence, bring renewed vigor to all our great enterprises, promote unity throughout the brotherhood and gird us for the mighty tasks to which God has called us, than constant, habitual, believing, fervent prayer.

The Missouri Convention.

It was the sixty-sixth annual convention of the Disciples of Christ in Missouri which convened at Columbia last week, from Monday afternoon until the following Thursday noon. It was not the largest convention in our history, but in some respects it was the best and, taken altogether, it is to be ranked as one of the most satisfactory of all our state conventions. In the first place, Columbia in itself, and leaving out of consideration its railroad facilities, is an ideal convention place for Missourians, being its educational center and one of the oldest and most beautiful towns in the state. Great changes have taken place in Columbia since the first convention which the editor remembers having attended there. Instead of the old brick church a new stone structure in the best style of church architecture, now stands on the same corner. Instead of the old university building, a large group of modern college buildings now occupy the campus and the blocks thereabouts. And out on the beautiful campus of Christian College, instead of the old cracked brick structure, is a modern, imposing, educational plant, unexcelled, if equalled, in the west. The town itself has made vast improvements in many ways, but the same small, dingy railway depot, with its narrow platform and utter lack of accommodations for the people who visit there, remains—an anachronism in a growing educational center, and a reproach to the railroad as well as to the people who tolerate it.

Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

The Christian women took the first session of the convention on Monday afternoon, Mrs. C. H. Winders leading the devotional exercises, and Dean W. J. Lhamon, of the Bible College, offering the address of welcome, as a substitute for his wife, who was on the program. We will leave the Corresponding Secretary to report the convention further than to say that we think it was one of the best in their history. As a part of the welcome to Columbia, ladies representing missionary organizations of the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches extended sisterly Christian greetings, bidding our workers God speed. If the Christian women could have their way they would make short work of our denominational fences, in so far, at least, as they are fences which hinder co-operation. We may also speak of the presence and able addresses of Mrs. Catherine Lindsay, of Springfield, Ill. Her address on Tuesday evening in the auditorium of Christian College was unsurpassed in its grasp of history and of God's purpose in history. The addresses on the following day of the president, Mrs. M. M. Goode, of St. Joseph, and of Mrs. W. T. Moore, president of Christian College, that of Mrs. Bettie G. Mackey, of Bowling Green, and of Miss Mattie Pounds, of Indianapolis, were all of them admirable, and well adapted to the purpose for which they were given. The appeal by Mrs. L. G. Bantz, Corresponding Secretary, on Tuesday evening, following the address of Mrs. Lindsay, was so strong and convincing as to evoke an enthusiasm of giving among the auxiliaries which resulted in pledges amounting to over a thousand dollars.

Missouri Christian Missionary Society.

This organization began its session Monday evening in the chapel of the State University with an exceedingly able address by Hon. William H. Wallace, of Kansas City, on "Jesus of Nazareth as a Man." Mr. Wallace is a lawyer of large experience and of great ability, and an orator of high rank. His eulogy on Jesus as a Teacher, as a Hero, as a Citizen and as a Philanthropist, brought rounds of enthusiastic applause from the great audience which listened to it for more than an hour with rapt attention. Mr. Wallace is a Presbyterian in faith, holding the orthodox view of Jesus, but dealt largely with Jesus as a man, that he might the better reach men.

The business session of the convention opened at the Christian church on Tuesday morning with a devotional study, led by Dr. W. T. Moore. Brother Moore conducted these devotional studies for a half hour each of the three mornings of the convention, and we may say here that they constituted one of the most delightful and profitable features of the convention. It was a happy thought to appoint him to this service, for which he is so well fitted by his ability, special talents and long experience. C. H. Winders, pastor of the church, presented Columbia's greetings, and Missouri's response was given by the president of the convention, D. W. Moore, of Springfield, in an able address. Following these addresses there came the reports of the State Bible-School Board and of the State Missionary Board, both of which showed the work in the state to be in a prosperous condition. We will present in another place some of the statistics from the past year's work as gleaned from the report of the State Board. An able and practical sermon by Howard T. Cree, of St. Louis, presenting the three great principles which controlled the life of Jesus, closed the morning session and put us in good condition for adjournment.

We cannot report here in detail the reports of the various committees which were made on Wednesday, which constituted, however, no unimportant part of the work of the convention. The discussion on the State of the Cause was very helpful, serving to impress some of the points contained in the report of the committee. The schools all reported encouraging progress, each of them, we believe, opening this year with larger enrollment than ever before. There was not time for a sufficient discussion of the educational problem. The situation in brief is that our colleges for girls—Christian College, William Woods College and the Camden Point Female Orphan School—are all prospering and meeting fully the expectations of their founders. Young women are coming from other states to enjoy the superior advantages which we are offering in these schools. Christian University at Canton and the Bible College of Missouri at Columbia, are the only schools now in the state, unless we count the new local school at Dexter, now presided over by our good brother, Dr. Albert Buxton, which are making a speciality of preparing young men for the ministry. Here is our greatest need, and our greatest lack at present. These institutions need larger endowment to fit them for their work. The Bible College needs a building and Christian University has one in process of erection, and these institutions make urgent appeals to their friends to come to their assistance in their time of need. The report of the committee on Students' Aid Fund was followed by a discussion which led to a spontaneous movement under the enthusiastic leadership of President J. B. Jones, of William Woods College, to increase the fund, resulting in pledges running through five years of fifteen hundred dollars. The interest of world-wide missions was ably presented by A. McLean, of Cincinnati, that of Church Extension by G. W. Muckley, of Kansas City, and that of Benevolence by F. G. Tyrrell, of St. Louis, taking the place of George L. Snively, the National Secretary. These interests are all on the increase. The address on Wednesday evening on "Missouri's Claim Upon the Disciples of Christ," by W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, was a strong and convincing appeal for state missions, as the basis of all our wider interests. It ought to bear fruit in larger and more offerings for state missions in November next.

Closing Session.

The forenoon session of Thursday closed the convention. An unusually large proportion of the delegates remained until the close. The devotional study by Brother Moore was largely attended, and was a very tender, impressive service. A few committees that had not made reports reported, and at the Y. P. S. C. E. hour at 10 o'clock there was an address by J. M. Rudy, of Sedalia, on "The Greatest Problem of the Church," which awakened great enthusiasm and received high praise. This was followed by a Question Box in reference to Christian Endeavor, conducted by R. H. Waggener, of Kansas City, which was cut short by the arrival of the hour for the consecration sermon, which was delivered by Prof. D. R. Dungan, of Christian University, on the subject of "Love"—a fitting close of a great convention. When the benediction was pronounced by Vice-President E. M. Richmond, in the chair, and the delegates turned their faces homeward, it was with the feeling that we had enjoyed a great spiritual feast, and were better prepared for the work before us.

Convention Notes.

Among other courtesies extended to the convention by the University and the people of Columbia, was an invitation to visit the University grounds and buildings, and the provision of carriages on the part of many citizens at a certain hour in which to make such visit. One of the things admired by those who availed themselves of this invitation was the splendid Bible College lot overlooking the University campus and buildings, and waiting for the generosity of some man or men in the state who appreciate the strategic value of the situation, to erect upon it a suitable building.

It will be gratifying to the friends of the Missouri Bible College to know that the Trustees met during the convention and authorized the Executive Committee to secure plans for the new building, with which to go before the brotherhood of the state for the funds with which to erect it. As a bit of further good news we may state that one of our generous-hearted brethren in the state voluntarily offered his note for $5,000 to the endowment fund of the institution.

A large number of the delegates visited Christian College, passed through its long corridors, admired its splendidly equipped rooms and its beautiful campus, and thanked God for the enterprise and liberality which have provided this magnificent educational plant for the brotherhood of the state.

The whole convention was gratified also to hear the good reports from Christian University, Canton, and William Woods College, Fulton, the former increasing its enrollment over any previous enrollment for twenty years, and the latter overflowing with students. Camden Point Female Orphan School also made a good report, and its genial president, Brother Barnham, made many friends for the institution, by his generous spirit and Christian bearing.

The people of Columbia gave us a good hearing at each session. This is not always easy for the hosts of the convention to do, and the fact that the people of Columbia did it manifested their deep interest in the work of the convention.

It was a great pleasure to us all to see Brother Corwine, of New London, who has been west for his health during the summer, back again, mingling with his brethren and looking vigorous enough for many years of useful work.

Among other members of the old guard present, were T. P. Haley, W. T. Moore, E. J. Lampton, J. C. Reynolds, E. R. Childers, and D. R. Dungan, whose heads are indeed gray, but whose hearts remain young and fresh.

Our corresponding secretary, T. A. Abbott, was able to make the best report during his administration, and he has worked faithfully to make such report possible. He is looking forward hopefully to a more general and liberal response to the appeal for state missions, November next.

President D. W. Moore and vice-president E. M. Richmond had no difficulty in keeping the convention headed in the right way, though it was difficult to stop it sometimes when it got to going well in a given direction.

The following is a summary of the work done and workmen employed during the past year:

Editor's Easy Chair.

It is an interesting spectacle to see the whole people girding themselves for their autumn and winter work. The public schools have opened their doors, and troops of boys and girls in every city, town, village, hamlet and country district are wending their way to the "little red schoolhouse," or to the more pretentious buildings dedicated to learning. The larger boys and girls have spoken their "good-byes" to the "old folks at home" and have gone off to college, followed by the prayers of parents and the good wishes of friends. Some of these, about now, are feeling little spells of homesickness, but the habit of study and the forming of new friendships will soon take the sharp edge off that ailment. Ministers are rallying their flocks for an aggressive campaign, and the vacant pews of the summer vacationists are being once more filled. Business men are laying their plans for enlargement; laboring men with their dinner pails are in demand; busy housewives are putting their houses in order, and on every hand there are signs of activity and enterprise. The whole country is harnessing itself for its tasks. Even the politicians are busy hunting for issues and candidates. Trust magnates have all and more than they can do to keep the water in their stocks from being squeezed out. The world seems to be very busy, just now, making war, making peace, making money, making party issues, making preparation for the present life, and for the life hereafter. As for the editor, he has nothing to do—except to help all the others do their work and to see that they do it right!

About the busiest spot, however, in this whole wide world, just at present, is this goodly city of St. Louis, where for thirty years the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been lifting up the banner of religious reform. Next year the whole world is coming to see the greatest exposition of human progress in the history of the race, here in this city, and how we are straitened until the finishing touches are put upon the great Fair, and we have received, entertained and dismissed the millions of people who are to visit us! All through the streets of that "Ivory City," which has risen like magic in the broad domain of "Forest Park," may be heard the din of more than a score of arts and industries, blending their skill and energies in completing an enterprise, the magnitude of which is bewildering to the ordinary mind. The material greatness of the Exposition is already assured beyond reasonable doubt. But what shall be its moral and religious value? The World's Fair is both a peril and an opportunity to the church. No doubt there will be a flood of iniquity pouring into the city, while the world is coming and going. Something must be done to stay this tide of evil, and to disseminate the good seed of the kingdom of God. The Christian people of this country must do this work, and this is their opportunity. The states will spend millions upon millions to make an exhibit of their resources. What will the churches spend to make an exhibit of the unsearchable riches of Christ?

To bring the question a little nearer home, What will we, the Disciples of Christ, do towards neutralizing the concentrated powers of evil, in connection with the World's Fair, and to utilize this vast aggregation of humanity, for making known to the world the principles of religious reformation which we are pleading, and what has already been accomplished by us? Not to make the wisest use of the great opportunities which God's providence opens up for us is to be unfaithful stewards of a sacred trust. But it is going to require time, labor and money, and a very intense and practical type of religious zeal to use such an occasion as the Louisiana Purchase Exposition for the advancement of truth and salvation among men. Plans are already being formed for continuous evangelistic services in the vicinity of the Fair, through the co-operation of the American Christian Missionary Society with the St. Louis churches. In addition to this there should be a room fitted up somewhere on the grounds in which charts, maps, statistics, pictures of college and church buildings and of leading men, past and present, together with tracts, pamphlets, books, papers, setting forth the truth for this age as we present it. All this is practicable if the brethren enter into the matter heartily. Let us have an expression on this subject at the Detroit Convention if it be thought "germane" to its purpose.

These glorious autumn days seem filled with the very wine of life. How splendidly this Indian Summer sunshine is ripening the cornfields, preparing the fodder for the shock and the matured ears for the crib! The autumn artist has already begun his work of painting the forests in gorgeous colors. The maples and sumachs are aflame with their red robes, and soon their older and larger brothers and sisters of the woods will don their royal apparel for a brief pageantry of glory before they fall to the ground to carpet the earth. God is at work in his world, preparing it by the beautiful processes of nature, for the oncoming winter.

"Earth is full of heaven,
And every common bush afire with God;
But only those who see take off their shoes,
The rest sit round and gather blackberries!"

But to those whose eyes are opened, nature is not a screen to hide God, but a mirror to reflect Him.

Tennyson's "In Memoriam"

By W. J. Russell

The "In Memoriam" is the greatest of Tennyson's philosophical poems. It was written as a tribute to his friend, Arthur Henry Hallam, who died in 1833. These two young men formed an intimate acquaintance while students at Cambridge. Alluding to those college days with all their associations, Tennyson says:

"I past beside the reverend walls
In which of old I wore the gown,
I roved at random thro' the town,
And saw the tumult of the halls;

"And heard once more in college fanes
The storm their high-built organs make,
And thunder-music, rolling, shake
The prophets blazon'd on the panes;

"And caught once more the distant shout,
The measured pulse of racing oars
Among the willows; paced the shores
And many a bridge, and all about

"The same gray flats again, and felt
The same, but not the same; and last
Up that long walk of limes I past
To see the rooms in which he dwelt."

The acquaintance formed during these college days soon ripened into one of those rare friendships passing the love of woman, and this was strengthened by Arthur's love for the poet's sister. Arthur, after leaving Cambridge, began to study law in London, and it was while here that he went frequently to see his friends at Somerby Rectory in Lincolnshire. In one of the odes of "In Memoriam" we have allusions to these various circumstances:

"How often, hither wandering down,
My Arthur found your shadows fair,
And shook to all the liberal air
The dust and din and steam of town:

"He brought an eye for all he saw;
He mixt in all our simple sports;
They pleased him, fresh from brawling courts
And dusty purities of the law.

"O bliss, when all in circle drawn
About him, heart and ear were fed
To hear him, as he lay and read
The Tuscan poets on the lawn:

"Or in the all-golden afternoon
A guest, or happy sister, sung,
Or here she brought the harp and flung
A ballad to the brightening moon."

This mention of "happy sister" is not the only allusion to the tender relationship at which it hints. In the marriage-ode appended to the poem, there is a retrospective glance at the happiness experienced when "first he told me that he loved

A daughter of our house;"

and, in another ode, when picturing to himself what might have been the course of Arthur's life if Death had not snatched him prematurely away, the poet describes what seemed at one time the probable future:

"I see thee sitting crown'd with good,
A central warmth diffusing bliss
In glance and smile, and clasp and kiss,
On all the branches of thy blood;

"Thy blood, my friend, and partly mine;
For now the day was drawing on,
When thou should'st link thy life with one
Of mine own house, and boys of thine

"Had babbled 'Uncle' on my knee;
But that remorseless iron hour
Made cypress of her orange flower,
Despair of Hope, and earth of thee."

The grief caused by this "remorseless iron hour" threw the poet's life into shadow for many years. Referring to the suddenness of Hallam's death, he says:

"My blood an even tenor kept,
Till on mine ear this message falls,
That in Vienna's fatal walls
God's finger touched him and he slept."

And there is this reference to the place of his burial:

"The Danube to the Severn gave
The darkened heart that beat no more:
They laid him by the pleasant shore,
And in the hearing of the wave."

Deeply moving is the master singer's cry for his lost friend:

"I know transplanted human worth
Will bloom to profit elsewhere.

"For this alone on Death I wreak
The wrath that garners in my heart;
He puts our lives so far apart
We cannot hear each other speak."

Seventeen years passed after Hallam's death before "In Memoriam" was first published. But during those seventeen years the author had been touching and retouching the poem with the loving hand of the artist, seeking to make it worthier at once of Hallam and of himself. "In it," says Mr. Steadman, "are concentrated his wisest reflections upon life, death and immortality, the worlds within and without, while the whole song is so largely uttered, and so pervaded with the singer's manner, that any isolated line is recognized at once. This work stands by itself: none can essay another upon its model, without yielding every claim to personality and at the risk of an inferiority that would be appalling. The strength of Tennyson's intellect has full sweep in this elegiac poem—the great threnody of our language, by virtue of unique conception and power."

The poet, at the very beginning, recalls a creed which he had held for law—that out of the troubles of life men may rise to something better than they were before the day of trouble came. But now he finds the creed hard to hold. He compares himself to a lover who has hastened to his love's home to find her away. A deep feeling of loneliness comes over his soul. There is a struggle between doubt and belief. But in the end faith wins, and the poet finds rest and joy in the truths of Christianity. The Gospels are the record of

"The sinless years
That breathed the Syrian blue."

To him the miracles are no myths: Christ is "the life indeed," who brought back Lazarus from "his charnel-cave." Yes, Christ is to him the "Word made flesh," who

"wrought
With human hands the creed of creeds
In loveliness of perfect deeds,
More strong than all poetic thought."

With triumphant faith he bows reverently before the "strong Son of God, immortal Love."

"Thine are these orbs of light and shade;
Thou madest Life in man and brute;
Thou madest Death; and lo, Thy foot
Is on the skull which Thou hast made.

"Thou wilt not leave us in the dust;
Thou madest man, he knows not why,
He thinks he was not made to die;
And Thou hast made him: Thou art just.

"Thou seemest human and divine,
The highest, holiest manhood, Thou:
Our wills are ours, we know not how;
Our wills are ours, to make them Thine."

And thus in this spirit of resignation the poet does not despair. Memory clings to the past and recalls the years of sweetest friendship. Sorrow may come, but death cannot sever such loving hearts.

"I hold it true, whate'er befall;
I feel it, when I sorrow most;
'Tis better to have loved and lost
Than never to have loved at all."

The poet knows he will not lose his friends; love is eternal and will bloom in the home eternal, when the veil is swept away, for

"There no shade can last
In that deep dawn behind the tomb,
But clear from marge to marge shall bloom
The eternal landscape of the past."

Great Words.

By Charles Blanchard.

The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.—
Job 1:21.

Great words are few! Great words these!

Let Him do with me as He please!

Let loose the whirlwind! Let the world

Grow dark at mid-day; houses be hurled

From their foundations; children dead—

These are the greatest words man ever said.

These are the words of faith and not of fate:

These are the words of love and not of hate;

These are the simple phrases, such As they have learned, who suffer much:

Whose hopes have crumbled into dust,

Whose hearts have tendered into trust!

Lord touch me very gently—only make Me know, in love, the way I take!

Try me, that I may come forth as gold

From the hot furnace. Let me behold Thy face in righteousness and peace—

Out of the whirlwind bring release.

What Distinguishes Congregationalism

By A. H. Bradford

[This is the first of a series of articles furnished by leading men in the various evangelical bodies, setting forth the chief things for which these bodies stand, respectively.—EDITOR.]

It is difficult to write concerning the distinguishing characteristics of any one denomination in our time, because all denominations have been growing together in a most wonderful way. No Christian communion now stands for exactly the same principles which brought it into being. While we are making plans for the realization of Christian unity, that unity is coming as the result of a slow but sure process of growth.

Congregationalism stands for Puritanism in its simplest form and in its logical development.

The Congregational polity is far more extensive than is indicated by the Congregational denomination. All Baptists are Congregationalists; so are the so-called Liberal churches, the Disciples of Christ, the Free churches of Norway and Sweden, and many other similar bodies. All these various denominations equally with ourselves represent the principles of independency and voluntary co-operation.

But the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST desires me to write of that for which Congregationalism as a denomination stands. (I may add in passing that we never speak of our church, but rather of our churches.) Our doctrinal position is better defined by the word evangelical than by the term Calvinistic, although there are still those who insist that we hold the Calvinistic system of theological thought. We take our place beside all the great churches in recognition of the value of the historic creeds, and in co-operation for the advancement of the kingdom of God.

The Puritan community in Holland are called the Dutch Reformed; exactly the same class of people, theologically, in Scotland are known as Presbyterian, while those standing for the same truths in England are Congregational. In brief, then, the ancestral home of the Reformed Church is Holland; of the Presbyterian Church, Scotland, and of the Congregational churches is England.

A minister in the Reformed Church was once asked as to the difference between the Congregational and Presbyterian polity. He shrewdly replied, "In Presbyterianism some one else minds your business; in Congregationalism you mind your own business."

Historically, our people have been distinguished by four principles:

First. The Church is composed only of those who give credible evidence of possessing the life of Christ, or, in more technical terms, it is a society of redeemed souls. The theory that the Church and State are co-terminous, that membership in one implies membership in the other was finally repudiated in the Puritan Revolution. All who have experienced the new birth, according to the Congregational theory, are entitled to membership in the Church and have equal rights and privileges. We strongly hold to the equality of all believers in the spiritual brotherhood. A Congregational church is as near a perfect democracy as has ever been realized in this world.

Second. Congregationalism implies the right of private judgment in regard to all spiritual matters. Our fundamental doctrine is the sovereignty of God. The sole ruler of the conscience is the Almighty. The famous saying of Sir Hafray Vane is in point, "The Province of the Magistrate is this world and man's body, not his conscience and the concerns of eternity." Calvinism has always taught that it is the right of the individual to come into the immediate presence of God and receive light and guidance from him alone. Our only authority is that which comes from above. No council and no body of men has any right to insist that we shall confess our faith in terms other than those which appeal to us as true and right. This is a common-place to-day, but it is a principle for which Barrowe, Greenwood and Penry laid down their lives. We have no "standard" except the Bible as interpreted to each soul by the Spirit of God, and each individual determines for himself what that teaching is. He may not demand fellowship, and will not receive it, if his belief is not harmonious with that of his brethren; but he has a right to exercise his own powers and to be protected in their use. This is the principle for which the great leaders of Puritanism have always stood. By Puritanism I mean, of course, the most radical type as represented by earlier and later Separatists—like Cromwell and Milton, like John Robinson and William Bradford, like Edwards and Dwight, like Bushnell and Beecher.

Third. Congregationalism recognizes no human authority above the church in the community. Each church is entirely independent. It forms its own confession of faith; determines its own methods of procedure; engages in such forms of activity as please it best. But at the same time it emphasizes the importance of fellowship. Fellowship implies advice and co-operation, but never compulsion. We meet with one another, so far as possible work together, but we are not willing to receive dictation concerning any subject. In the administration of missionary affairs, for instance, we confer and we work together, and the history of our missions shows that fellowship and co-operation are quite as efficient as force and authority. Congregation-alism has been called "a rope of sand." If by that is meant that it possesses no ability to compel obedience, that is a true characterization; but if the saying means that there is a failure on the part of our churches to fraternize in service, then no saying was ever more absurd. Our offerings for benevolences, which are quite as generous as those of stronger forms of polity, are a sufficient refutation of such an insinuation.

The Presbyterians acknowledge the dictation of the General Assembly, the Methodists bow to the supremacy of the General Conference, the Episcopalians accept the ordering of their House of Bishops. With a Congregationalist, the local church is the final human authority; but he firmly believes in the continuous leadership of the Holy Spirit.

When it is remembered that thousands of churches which do not bear the name have the polity of Congregationalism, it will be seen that this "rope of sand" is binding in loving fellowship a large part of the Christian world.

Fourth. Another principle upon which strong emphasis has always been placed among Congregationalists is the priesthood of the entire body of Christian believers. Episcopalians and Roman Catholics emphasize the Apostolic Succession and limit that to those who have been ordained by the laying on of hands of those who have been episcopally ordained. We believe in the Apostolic Succession, but insist that that Succession includes all who in the spirit of the apostles have sought to advance the kingdom of God on earth. Does the priest who stands in a sacred position have rights and duties which do not belong to others? Congregationalists answer this with an unequivocal, no. They hold that every individual may come into the immediate presence of God, and that the power of the poorest slave and the humblest child, will as surely be heard at the throne of grace as that of any bishop, cardinal or pope. We repudiate the priesthood of any special class. We believe that priesthood is the prerogative of all who have entered into the life of Christ. Sacerdotalism may not be a burning question in our country in these days, but it is a vital issue in England, and also wherever the Roman Catholic communion holds sway. Roman Catholics and High Church Anglicans teach that a peculiar sanctity surrounds the priest. We believe that holy character is the only badge of priesthood; that no one person is more sacred than another, and that the spirit of love and service are essential to acceptance with God.

If I now turn from the distinguishing principles of Congregationalism and speak of the denomination historically, I may add that, naturally, it has

Washington Letter By F. D. Power

For three months the National Capital has been quiet enough. The summer exodus was unusual. Hardly a pastor remained, but the church advertisements showed in most cases strange names and the announcement of only the morning service. Our own churches were open as usual at all the regular hours, and our motto "All services all summer" was strictly adhered to. The Vermont Avenue Church had the services of an excellent assistant pastor in Prof. Philip Johnson, of Bethany, and men like Prof. McGarvey, Sumner T. Martin, Frank Garrett and M. E. Harlan dropped in and helped us greatly by their sermons.

Open-air services are a great feature of our Washington summer. Two or three gospel wagons are operating, the Salvation Army, and any number of itinerant proclaimers, white and colored, male and female. Mostly the work is done at a congested point near Pennsylvania Avenue and Seventh Street, where a Missouri philanthropist, named Cogswell, built some years ago a wierd drinking fountain, not unlike a Buddhist shrine except for the lack of the sitting Buddha under the canopy, a fountain which has been dry ever since it was erected, and which is used as a lounging place for working men. Here an eccentric old gentleman has preached for many summers from a series of quaint looking charts with white crosses and ships and other symbols. It is a favorite spot for the out-of-doors evangelist of every description. He will take his stand sometimes without the sign of an auditor, and take off his hat and begin to sing, and perhaps will speak five minutes before a single listener gets in close range. Then the artisans over on the street corner or hanging about the Buddhist shrine will turn toward him, and two or three colored men, passers by, will stroll within ten feet of him; then a stranger or two in the city will be attracted by the novelty; then a few well-dressed strollers, seeing the little gathering, pause near by; then a curious body who would like to know what the speaker's theology may be, will enter the circle; these in turn are hemmed in by all sorts and conditions, and so in ten minutes after he unlimbers his guns he has an audience of a hundred souls.

Sometimes it is a colored preacher who exhorts near the Buddhist temple of the lamented Cogswell. His hearers are all white men, and he passes the hat and finds it copper-bottomed when it is returned to him. Often it is a woman who is the evangelist. She speaks from the rear end of a small wagon and addresses a procession for an hour or more. Still another peripatetic pulpit is filled by an aged man who is accompanied by two elderly women. Their vehicle is black-covered and decorated with extraordinary white-painted signs, which at a distance appear to be the signs of the zodiac, but on a nearer approach are seen to be passages of Scripture somewhat jumbled together with crosses and other symbols. The preaching is of a red-hot, old-fashioned order. Now and then a wide-awake young man in a sulky, with a pretty, clipperish, Reliance-built, Lou Dillon sort of animal attached to it, dashes upon the scene, hangs from the rear of his "fix" a big, black-painted placard, bearing white-painted warnings to sinners, of sizeable letters, stays fifteen minutes preaching his silent sermon, and then hurries to the next corner without saying a word. Occasionally on the square is seen a wagon with a whole family of evangelists, the father preaches, and the mother and children make the music, and it is marvelously sweet. Now the sound of the drum is heard coming down the avenue, and that useful institution, the Salvation Army, wheels into place near the unspeakable Cogswell monstrosity, and the sweet singing is led by a fine cornet, and the fervid talks of the army "ladies" attract scores of loungers and passers by, and the Buddhist shrine becomes a center of wholesome Christian services. Finally, the big gospel wagon of the Central Union Mission rolls into one corner of the square, filled with workers, and gathers its crowd, and the singing and exhorting are heard for blocks away. I have preached many times from this wagon, and sometimes to five hundred men or more standing through the whole service. Not infrequently half a dozen of these agencies are running at the same time, and this square might well be called "Gospel Place."

Who shall question the value of this open-air work? Where was the greatest of all sermons preached but from the side of the Horns of Hattin under the cloudless Syrian sky? What temple covered the multitude that hung upon Paul's sermon to the Athenians on "the unknown God," or Peter's great effort on Pentecost? Do we value as we should God's great out-of-doors as a preaching place? My best sermon this summer I preached the other day in the woods near Washington, to a great gathering of farmers sitting in the glare of gasoline torches under the oaks, when two young men came out to confess Christ. I should like to start in the woods that way in June and work until September. It has been my privilege to preach to twenty thousand people this summer. I have been eight weeks out of my pulpit here. First came the Denver Christian Endeavor Convention where I conducted one service which brought down the tent, and presided at two other meetings and preached for B. B. Tyler in the beautiful South Broadway Church. Another Sunday was spent with the splendid people in Colorado Springs, to whom L. E. Brown ministers. I never saw people go to church as they do in Colorado Springs. Then a third Sunday was given to Colorado City, where A. N. Glover is rendering such excellent service. My next found me at Delavan, Wisconsin, near Chicago, where I preached for the Chautauqua. Another Sunday was given to the Chautauqua at Mechanicsburg, Ill. I met people here who heard me twenty years ago at Harristown and Illiopolis near by. It hardly seems possible. I must have been "the boy preacher" then. Here I enjoyed some of the "kid preachers:" Eunifer and Clements, and Hale and Age, and Dunlap and Engle, and the veteran G. T. Bridges. Bethany Beach claimed another Lord's day. My seventh was delightfully spent with one of my first churches: Olive Branch, James City County, Va. It is one of the historic churches of the Old Dominion near Old Jamestown and Williamsburg, and had as its last pastor the beloved Charles P. Williamson. My last Lord's day away found me with the Beaver Creek saints in the feast of the dedication. What a happy summer, worth remembering in heaven!

Something has been doing all summer in this corner of the vineyard. W. L. Harris has been engaged in a tent meeting, and added eleven to the Whitney Avenue Church. Our latest work in this vicinity was a meeting at Vienna, Va., by Joseph T. Watson, with seventeen additions. In 1894, I did some preaching there, and a few members of the Vermont Avenue congregation organized a mission church. It had varied fortunes. Our brother, Philemon Vawter, one of the veterans, ministered to them for a time and died there. Later they became disorganized. Some few faithful ones held on, however, and watched their opportunity to revive the work. Brother Watson, a native of the valley of Virginia, and a recent graduate of Milligan College, came to them, and his excellent preaching and fine character as a minister of the gospel, won the people. The little band now numbers about forty souls, and will proceed at once to build about one mile north Vienna, of which is eighteen miles from the city. The church will be known as Antioch, Fairfax Co., and will be the only church of Disciples of Christ in northern Virginia. J. L. Wilmoth and C. C. Dyer were chosen elders, J. W. Jones, Orion Jarrett, Asa Dyer, and G. W. Bryant, deacons, and Joel Grayson, clerk.

Four were added to the Vermont Avenue Church Sunday, Sept. 13, and four Sunday, Sept. 20. The state missionary society meets with us Oct. 7-9. All will be welcome. Sunday, Sept. 27, the pastor observed the 28th anniversary of his pastorate.

England at Play By William Durban

It is with nations as it is with individuals. Relaxation and recreation cannot be dispensed with if work is to be efficiently done. But here in Old England we do not go in for vacations at such protracted length as do our American cousins: Our people take briefer spells of absence. We never shut down our churches unless repairs are needed. There is a simple reason for the difference. Our climate is delightfully mild. I have heard many Americans praise the pleasures of the English summer. Of course every land has certain meteorological drawbacks. But there is no question about the charms of this little island from the end of May to the end of August. Therefore there is no need for closing churches at all on account of heat, and schools only close for a month, that children and teachers may enjoy an interval of rest from brain work.

The British Archipelago.

The British Isles have about 10,000 miles of coast. This statement will astonish some readers who have not paid minute attention to this particular geographical topic. But few people even here in England seem to be aware that there are nearly 2,000 islands in this cluster called the British Isles. Immense numbers of fragments dot the sea on the north and west. Of course many are mere scraps of rock, but there are hundreds more of islets of respectable magnitude in this wonderful archipelago than is generally understood.

If England Declines.

A new idea has occurred to certain students of current affairs. They have most convinced themselves of the doctrine of England's decline and fall. In their view poor old John Bull is decadent, tottering and dwindling to the mere phantom of his former sturdy self. Indeed the pet scientific hobby of a certain school of German philosophers is the discussion of the speedier method of constructing an aggrandized German empire out of the ruins of the British Empire. But what will England become when her greatness is departed? Well, they say that this island or group of islands will do for a sweetly pretty beer garden, where foreigners can come to revel in holiday pleasures. Even should this hypothesis be materialized in the future, the prospect is by no means appalling. If all the world should come to regard our land as its choicest play-ground, then all the world would of course be contributing to its maintenance and John Bull would get a nice livelihood when his coal and his iron are exhausted. It is comforting to have such compensations in store. Some old and outworn nations have no such excellent resource. John Bull may therefore be very happy in contemplation of the nice old-age pension which is promised him.

Our Glorious Riviera.

Well, all the thousands of the people who can break loose from shop, factory and counting-house are rusticated in sweet valleys, bathing on the seashore, shooting on the moors, fishing in the lakes, or climbing the mountains. But the glory of the United Kingdom is its Riviera. No land on earth has such a coast. We shall always be a nation of sailors. Once a year all the population pants for the marine ozone and all who can indulge in the luxury make for the margin of the ocean, with the exception of a minority who prefer the hills, the woods and the lakes. Britannia is recreated by her annual dip in the briny deep. Of course of the wealthier section thousands choose the continent.

"Way Down East."

Americans visiting England should, if possible, see something of the holiday life of this people. I will mention some of the points of greatest interest and the chief beauty. The "Queen of Watering Places" is Scarborough, on the Yorkshire coast. Close by is the glorious Flamborough Head, and very near also is historic Whitby, which affords a delightful opportunity for the study of Saxon relics. Holy Idland and Lindisfarne lie on the shore of the Northumberland, a little more to the north, and here the memories of Cuthbert and the venerable Bede are redolent. On the mid-east coast of Norfolk is lovely old Cromer, one of my favorite spots. The south of England is perhaps most popular, for along the stretch of 600 miles lie Brighton, Portsmouth, Bournemouth, Southampton, Hayling Island, the Isle of Wight, Weymouth, Torquay, Plymouth, Dartmouth, Falmouth, Penzance, Land's End, the Lizard, and the fairy Isles of Scilly, with many a lovely resort besides, for I have not mentioned Hastings, Worthing, Eastbourne, Littlehampton, Christchurch, Poole, Exmouth and Bude. Nor have I included that wonderful southeastern section of England called Kent, with the shore on which over a thousand years ago Augustine brought hither the Roman type of Christianity. Ramsgate, Margate, Deal, Dover, Hythe and Folkestone call up in my mind memories of purest holiday delight, as well as of seasons of blessed gospel labor in friendly churches.

But the west coast is the land of wild romance. Wales bears the palm for exquisite beauty. Here the mountains bathe their feet in the ocean. A holiday anywhere in dear old Cambria is incomparable. Swansea, Tenby, Haverfordwets, Pembroke, Aberystwith, Barmouth, Dolgelly, Criccieth, Carnarvon, Conway, Llandudno, Penmaenmawr and Rhyl are spots on the Welsh coasts where at this moment many thousands are luxuriating. And higher up the English coast on the protracted English line of sand and shingle we have abundant choice between Southport, Blackpool, Morecambe, and the sweet villages along the Solway Frith, where England and Scotland join in the melting beauties of the Cheviot Hills beloved of Burns and Scott.

Eden Memories.

In this article I have not space to write of Scotland and Ireland. Each is a perfect summer paradise. No countries on earth are richer in beauty-spots. And nowhere can finer holidays be enjoyed. In a few weeks wanderings will be over and the nation will be toiling on. But for multitudes the delight of an innocent and healthful interlude will be perennial. The memory of one who has communed with nature in her loveliest scenes and most chanting moods is like a jar of rose leaves. The fragrant recollections of such episodes crowd out many a sordid association. My regret is that the children of poverty are denied these joys. The time will surely come when society will be ashamed to permit the weak, helpless, sweated and unfortunate to languish during all their poor lives without ever looking on the broad, smiling face of ocean or on the fresh and verdant expanse of moorland and heath. But there is much for Christianity in its social mission to clear away before such a blessed consummation can be attained.

BREAK THE FAST

The Morning Meal Should not be Missed.

After a night's fast the stomach should have some food for breakfast to sustain mind and body during the morning. It should not be a heavy meal, but wise selection will pay immensely.

A young Los Angeles woman says: "For years until I used Grape-Nuts I have never been able to eat breakfast, for eating in the morning was always followed by terrific sick headaches and my stomach has always been delicate.

"Some time ago a friend urged me to try Grape-Nuts food and I began eating it every morning. As a result of its steady use I have gained 11 pounds and the headaches have disappeared entirely and my weak stomach has become normal and strong. All my food digests and I now perform my daily duties with a renewed cheerfulness and energy. Evidently I had been eating the wrong food, but Grape-Nuts soon put me right." Little Lessons in Living.

By S. John Duncan-Clark.

3. The Way to Harmony.

Every man who in any degree knows himself or his fellows, must realize that human life is fraught with unceasing discords. No life song was ever sung in the sweet cadence of unselfish deeds, but at some time the melody has been broken and the music jarred into torturing inharmonies. Maladjustment to environment is one of the most apparent, though the least serious, form of discord by which the chorus of human life is marred. The square peg in the round hole is a sad, but unnecessarily common feature of modern existence. There is, however, another phase of inharmony that is deeper rooted than this; indeed, unfitness to surroundings is merely the manifestation of the more subjective and causal discordant condition that exists to a greater or less extent in every human soul. The theological term is sin; and the condition, of which you are surely conscious in your own life, is simply one of inharmony with the Divine will. This is the rift in the lute that mars the melody of life, and gets ever wider so long as its existence is ignored and the remedy neglected. From this inharmony result all the sin and suffering, sickness and sighing that prevail among the children of men. By its elimination in the individual, and, through the aggregation of individuals, in society, the race may be freed from these hampering and unhealthy conditions, and made in its redemption a glorious symphony of song, in which the keynote will be the Divine will, and the dominant chord, brotherly love.

The process of elimination or the way to harmony is the truth at which we would hint in this lesson. It is a law of biology continually evidenced in the history of evolution, that once an organism has drifted out of the line of development, through a lack of harmonious adjustment to the conditions of growth and its changing environment, it can never regain the lost ground. This is also in measure true in the sphere of soul-life. The race, individually and collectively, has drifted from the line of spiritual progression toward the Divine ideal, into a condition of disharmony. No son of Adam, singly or in co-operation with his fellows, can ever by any process of mere self-recovery, return to oneness with God. This is necessarily true because the causal centre of discord is in the will of man, the essential agent in any recuperative work, which is thus rendered impotent for achievement. And all human history bears witness to this fact. But here the parallel with the illustration from biology ends. For the race there is a way by which restoration to harmony with the will of God is possible, but its origin is external to man. This way, in theological parlance, is called atonement. It is the process of return to oneness with the Divine.

In Jesus Christ God has incarnated His will in human life. He has given back to us what the race had lost. He has shown us the practicability of living in flesh and blood, not as a hermit, but as a man among men, a life in undeviating alignment with the mind of God. In the death of Christ, upon that cross fashioned by the counter-running of His Father's and His fellows' wills, He set free a dynamic that, wherever yielded, to swings the whole current of a man's life into line with the Divine intent. In Jesus Christ, God, the Master Musician, has touched the harp of human life, long mute to melody, the discordant toy of selfishness, the plaything of unbridled passion, and has keyed its untuned strings to the harmonies of love, in vibrant sympathy with the Divine music of the spheres. In Jesus Christ each of us may find for himself the lost chord that will attune our lives again to their rightful place in the great orchestra of the universe.

A Few Pictures from an Eastern Art Gallery.

By Adelaide Gail Frost.

I.

The earth is yellow, the air is yellow, the heavens are brazen overhead. Every leaf of every tree has a pathetic droop. Under one of the trees are a few curiously carved stones, broken images, here a fantastically-fashioned elephant's trunk, there one of the many arms of Shio with a few dashes of red paint on the brown stones, the only bright color in the dull picture. Now you descry a few brown figures huddled near, draped in dirty rags, on one face is a look of stolidity, on one of burning desire, on another of intense longing, the hand of one is outstretched with a broken cocoanut ready to fall before the broken stones. Such a picture of broken hopes, of broken prayers, a not uncommon one even to-day.

II.

A tamarind tree with fine lacelike leaves weaving its shadows upon the earth in airy patterns. White-robed children of India sitting there with bright, intelligent faces, uplifted to a fine, motherly presence. Hymn books lie there and open Bibles. You feel the hush of Lord's day, you see the light of Christianity. This is an uncommon picture.

III.

Something lies outside an open gate. What is it? A human form? There are no fingers on the outstretched hands, the face is swollen and terrible, the feet, oh, the dreadful sores that eat into the flesh! Marred image, how far have you come from the beautiful garden?

IV.

A tall, slender, young figure draped in pure white, a delicate, oval face with a long scar across the cheek, but on her lips are happy smiles, a little brown baby is creeping toward her in the bright, tropical sunshine. She is a glad mother, who before her husband's conversion to Christianity, was an abused child-wife.

V.

A group of small mud huts surrounding a court, the hand-mill, the terra cotta water-pots, the tiny outdoor fireplace with the smoke curling up from a smoldering fire. A woman stands by the fireplace with a wrathful, evil look on her face and with one hand she holds a long piece of iron like a poker in the coals; with the other she restrains a cowering, frightened girl, quite unclothed save for a piece of a torn skirt. Already the narrow brown back is feeling the hot iron, and you understand that the trembling lips must be framing wild entreaties. Near you see a broken water jar and that is all. The child-wife must fear her husband's mother. You are glad you do not see the red iron descend on the quivering flesh. An all too common picture!

IT'S A MISTAKE

To Attribute Coffee Ills to Poor Grades of Coffee.

Many people lay all the blame for the diseases caused by coffee upon the poorer grades of coffee, but this is an error, as the following proves: "I have used every kind of the best grade of tea and coffee that can be got from a first class grocer, but never found one that would not upset my nervous system, and it was not until I began to drink Postum Food Coffee in place of coffee and tea that I had relief from the terrific attacks of nervous sick headaches from which I had suffered for 20 years.

"I had tried all kinds of medicines, but none helped me.

"Soon after I stopped drinking coffee and began to drink Postum the headaches grew less and it was not long until I was entirely cured, and I have never had a return of this distressing trouble, for nowadays I never drink coffee, but stick to Postum.

"As soon as my wife saw what Postum had done for me she gave up coffee which she had drank all her life. This was six weeks ago and she is a changed woman, for her nervousness has all disappeared, her face has become smooth and her cheeks have a good rosy red color. She sleeps well, too, something she could never do while she drank coffee. We consider Postum a household necessity in my house and have induced many friends to try this wonderful food drink in place of coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Kentucky State Meeting.

The largest and in many respects the best state meeting Kentucky ever held was its sixty-third just closed at Paris, Bourbon county. There were eleven hundred delegates enrolled and at least three or four hundred other delegates on whom the enrollment committee failed to lay hands. The large auditorium, including the Sunday-school room and galleries of the splendid new stone church at Paris, was filled at most of the sessions and overflowed at all the night sessions. It was like a national convention in size, and from first to last the enthusiasm simply blazed. Delegates and visitors were present from ten different states. Contributing to the success of the convention were several important factors: There was the central location of Paris, its convenient railroad connections, its large, wealthy and hospitable congregation, its famous new church building which everybody wanted to see, and its hearty and pressing invitation to all to come and be its guests. Then there was the steady and growing interest in our missionary work and the cheering report of its progress, which we all wanted to hear. And last, but not least, there was the program of exercises to be given out at old Cane Ridge, seven miles from Paris, in celebration of the centennial of the forming of the first church under the great reformation inaugurated by Barton Warren Stone and his coadjutors, and the privilege of standing by the grave and monument of that great and good man.

I should greatly have feared to see so large a convention precipitated upon any other single congregation in Kentucky, but I had no fears for the Paris folks, and I took the same delight in seeing them "spread themselves" that the boy did the old hen when he gave her a setting of fifty eggs!

The Christian Endeavors, young men and women, headed by Reuben Hutchcraft, the president, met all the delegates at the trains, drove them to the church, took charge of their baggage, sent it and the delegates to their stopping-places, and did it so easily, quietly and accurately, that no one whose eyes and ears were not open could have suspected the magnitude of their task.

The Woman's Society, whose president I dare not name, sought out homes for delegates among the Parisians, and got them in abundance, not only among our own church people, but those of all the other churches, including the Catholic and Episcopal Churches, and even those of no church. In fact all Paris, and, indeed, all Bourbon county aided in entertaining the convention. The Mormons' society also served daily free dinners in the spacious dining-room of the church, to which the country churches largely contributed, Clintonville, Bethlehem, Antioch, Ruddell's Mills, Old Union, Mt. Carmel and others. Over two thousand people were fed (and fed as only old Bourbon can feed) during the three days that dinner was served in the church.

Such was the system of the officers of the church, headed by Bro. W. O. Hinton, that assignments went off like clock-work, and the thoroughness with which all were provided for and the docket cleared each day, showed that master heads and hands had charge of the business. Unfortunately, and to the regret of all, Bro. Carey E. Morgan, pastor of the church, was ill and away from home. But if he or any other preacher could have improved the methods of those in charge, or could have made our entertainment any more complete or delightful, I for one should like to have seen him try!

Preachers like to have heads to their sermons, and so I shall put my story into that form, especially as it falls into it naturally.

Let me then use four heads, and no tails, for I am admonished by Geo. W. Kemper, your regular Kentucky correspondent, that he will do up the tales of the convention next week!

FIRST. There was the C. W. B. M. day—Tuesday. Mrs. Harrison, the president, and Mrs. Yancey, the corresponding secretary, both witnesses of assemblies, gave the usual address and report, both of them cheering and inspiring.

To be strictly accurate, the C. W. B. M. session began the night previous, but it was my misfortune not to be present or to hear either Mrs. St. Clair, of Hamilton College, or R. E. Moss, of Maysville, whose addresses on "The Debt of Young Manhood," and "All Things Through Christ," were highly commended.

The C. W. B. M. reports showed agreeable gains, the sum raised by both senior and junior departments reaching nearly $11,000, and the membership running a little in excess of 5,000. The Morehead and Hazel Green schools, and the negro Bible-school of Louisville, are doing a great and growing work and reports from them were of great interest. Addresses by H. J. Derthick, of Berea, on "The Mountain Problem," by Miss Lillie Southgate, of Covington, on "The Consecrated Life," and by Prof. W. M. Forrest, of Calcutta, on "India," were most impressive and timely. No official changes of note were made in the state C. W. B. M. organization.

SECOND. There was Kentucky Missionary Society day—Wednesday. Geo. Gowan, of Louisville, president, gave a fine address on "Serving the Lord Christ," after Prof. M. G. Thompson in the absence of the pastor, had welcomed the convention.

H. W. Elliott, in giving his annual report of the board, cheered us by a gain of $1,000 over the receipts of the previous year, and an increase of 40 in the number of contributing churches.

Something over $7,000 were reported as direct receipts, while the indirect or the amounts raised by the 30 men in the field, swelled the sum to over $27,000. Counting in the south Kentucky society's report of $7,226.33, all Kentucky raised for state missions the past year, $34,727.84. Given the sums raised for the F. C. M. S., A. C. M. S., church extension, ministerial relief and C. W. B. M., Kentucky raised for work aside from state missions the past year $36,648.26, and for all organized mission work in and out of the state $71,376.10. Of the 30 men employed, 18 are stationed at special points. The number of additions reported are 2,198, sermons preached 4,678, places helped 251, preachers located 63, church officers appointed 112, churches organized 14, Sunday-schools started 42, prayer-meetings 31. An interesting part of the report was that regarding the 25 young men of the Bible College who volunteered to spend their vacation evangelizing in the mountains. Their success was marked, and going for their bare expenses they deserve our hearty praise. Of the 42 students from Kentucky University and the Bible College who spent their vacation in evangelistic efforts, including those who went to the mountains, a total report was given of 1,138 additions, 1,055 being by confession and baptism.

Ernest W. Elliott, of Eminence, spoke forcibly concerning "The Holy Spirit and Missions," while Harry D. Smith, of Hopkinsville, in a graceful paper, bore greetings from the south Kentucky convention.

The temperance committee were given an hour to press the claims of county local option, which was well filled with ringing addresses. A. B. Phillips, of Augusta, Ga., ably pressed the claims of Church Extension,

News From Many Fields

Kansas.

J. Ira Jones, our new evangelist, is storming the fort at Kinsley. This is a new field. The prospect is promising.

J. D. Forsythe and R. W. Shaffer are in a good meeting at Fredonia. Brother Forsythe can be had for other meetings at the close of this one. H. M. Shephard will sing for him. Brother Shaffer having other appointments.

J. E. Holley will begin a meeting at Mayetta right after the state convention. He is a strong evangelist.

If the churches wanting protracted meetings will write our office we may be of service to them. Make your preparations early for your meetings. Don't wait until a few days before you want to begin, and expect to get an evangelist on a week's notice.

Be sure to see that your railroad agent has received instructions in regard to the rate to the state convention, and also that he has coupon tickets over connecting lines to Newton. Some agents may have to send for them. They will do this if any considerable number is going from your town. We expect an unusually large attendance. B. B. Tyler will be on hand for his first address, as well as for the last one.

Let all Kansas take notice that the Santa Fe and Wabash railroads have been chosen as the official route to the National Convention at Detroit. Be sure your tickets read over these lines from your starting point. Of course, you will want to go with the crowd. Our delegation will leave Kansas City at seven o'clock P. M. Thursday, Oct. 15. We want to know how many are going, so as to be able to make proper arrangements for special car. Send your name to either Milton Brown, F. E. Malory, C. A. Finch, W. S. Lowe, at Topeka, or A. E. Dubble, Wichita. There ought to be one hundred and fifty persons go from Kansas to this great gathering. The rate is one fare, plus two dollars. W. S. LOWE.

Michigan.

The third district convention was held at Trowbridge church Sept. 13. This was the first time the Trowbridge church ever entertained our district convention. The local attendance was excellent. The entertainment was all that could be desired. The discussions were most helpful and inspiring. The church feels that it received a great spiritual uplift. Bro. H. H. Haley gave the opening address and it was one long to be remembered. Brother Konkle, of Bloomingdale, was present and aided in the discussions. It was a pleasure also to meet Miss Hattie Cooley, of Paw Paw, author of "An Honest Doubter," etc., who added much to the interest of the convention.

Beside these mentioned and others from outside the district, there was a goodly representation from the churches of the district. The convention voted to use the evangelists employed by the state board for evangelistic meetings, so far as possible, rather than to attempt to employ a district evangelist. Officers elected as follows: President, C. M. Keene; vice-president, H. Y. Finch; recording secretary, Mrs. A. M. Church; corresponding secretary, J. F. Green; Y. P. S. C. E. president, Miss Bessie Smith. The semi-annual convention will be held with the church at McCords the first week in April.

One of Michigan's pressing needs is more preachers. Many of our churches are without pastoral care or regular preaching. We need twenty-five preachers to-day to take charge of vacant churches in Michigan. These churches are not able to pay a large salary, but there are splendid openings for right men.

The next great missionary offering for Michigan Disciples is for Michigan missions. Do not forget that the first Lord's day in November is Michigan day. It is none too soon to begin to prepare for it. Write to W. Munro for literature, and begin at once to prepare for the greatest offering in the history of our state work. Michigan will make a record this year in missionary work unsurpassed in her history. God is opening doors of opportunity for us on every hand. Shall we enter in? Your answer will be given on Michigan day.

The revival campaign has opened in Michigan. F. T. Porter is in a meeting at Hartford, L. O. Dew is in a meeting at Wayland, C. M. Keene is in a meeting at Coats Grove.

On to Detroit! Oct. 16-21 is the date. This is Michigan's opportunity to catch the inspiration of one of our great national conventions. Your whole life will be richer if you attend this convention. You cannot afford to miss it. C. M. KEENE.

Cascade, Mich.

Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia.

I attended the Beaver Creek Church dedication Sept. 6. A grand day, followed by a meeting, which closed Sept. 22, with 21 added. Sept. 7 met in preachers' meeting in Washington, D. C. Plans were discussed for the new building for the Fifth Church. We hope it will be begun soon.

W. L. Harris, Whitney Avenue, was having a tent meeting not far from his church; 6 added the first week.

I preached Sept. 13 and 20 at the mission in Waynesboro, Pa., with increased attendance on the 20th. We have not a place where we can meet on Sunday nights; had but one service and Bible-school.

The program has been prepared, blanks sent out for reports and arrangements made for the entertainment of the next convention of our Christian Missionary Society of Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia, and Washington, D. C. It is our "silver jubilee." An important feature will be the address by Brother Power, giving the history of its twenty-five years of work. He was president most of that time. Each church should appoint delegates early, and send balance on apportionment. Some of us hope to attend the larger convention at Detroit.

J. A. HOPKINS.

Minnesota.

While Minnesota is a promising field, we have great difficulty in securing pastors for our weak churches. We have a number of calls where the church could support a pastor about half the time. Some of these churches are close enough to others, that it would seem possible for one man to serve both, but we haven't the man.

We would be pleased to open negotiations with any man who would be willing to fill such a place. Half a dozen good men are needed in Minnesota to-day. Some of the churches without pastors are able to pay moderate salaries. What we want is good, consecrated men who are willing to make some sacrifice and grow with the work.

Ours is a great state, both in size and quality. We are not "way out west" nor in a wild country as formerly. Our farming lands sell from fifteen to sixty-five dollars an acre. Our climate in summer makes our state the location of numberless summer resorts, and the winters here are not as severe as years ago.

Our preaching brethren should know that, if they come to Minnesota, they come to a thoroughly up-to-date state. They will find the people, who come from every state in the union, to be among the best in the country. Ask Bro. C. J. Tannar about this. Ask him about Minnesota as a field for earnest workers.

The state board is planning to do larger work this year than ever before. They cannot do much till a state evangelist is secured. It is impossible to say who this will be, but we hope to report soon. The churches should bear with us until we can secure him. All pastors making application for position, and all churches needing pastors, should correspond with this pastoral committee. Chairman, R. W. Abberly, 616 E. 16th St., Minneapolis, Minn. M. R. WATERS, Cor. Sec.

Nebraska.

J. H. Bicknell's meeting at Deweese closed on the 13th with eleven additions by baptism. One was a lady 71 years of age. Bro. Bicknell has resigned the Northside Church, Omaha, to take effect Oct. 1. We are sorry to have this move made just now, but Bro. B. desires to go into evangelistic work, for which he is well adapted. The church is seeking a fitting successor to take the work and go forward with the plans for a new house.

J. S. Miller, formerly in Southwest Nebraska, has returned and re-located at Edison and will preach there and at Stanford.

Printer Jessup, who had in charge the 1903 minutes, had a disastrous fire in his printshop and destroyed all the finished work. This will delay the issue of the minutes somewhat, though just how long is hard to tell. A couple of weeks, perhaps. They were coming along nicely, and it is a disappointment.

While telling bad news it will be well to record here the lapse from the faith of C. F. Martin, of Bartley. Bro. Martin came in under our meeting at Ainsworth last winter. He was then working in a store. Seemingly, he was in all earnest, and indicating a desire to preach, he was later called to Bartley and Indianola, where he seemed to be doing well. A short time ago he joined the M. E. Church without notice to our brethren, and asked for an assignment from that body. He went out from us because he was not of us. He came voluntarily, and was received in good faith. A short time ago he joined the M. E. Church without notice to our brethren, and asked for an assignment from that body. He went out from us because he was not of us. He came voluntarily, and was received in good faith. If he can stand it, we will try to do so.

H. J. Young reports for eight weeks' work at Blair six added by letter, one by statement, two by baptism. This is a good record. He has organized a C. E. Society.

A. L. Ogden is in a meeting five miles from Elm Creek. Good prospects.

One added by letter at Lincoln, First Church, on the 20th.

Eastside Church, Lincoln, cleared $500 from serving meals at the state fair. Much of this was put into repairs on the dining hall and for dishes.

The National Convention at Detroit claims attention from this time forward. The programs have been printed in the papers, and if you have not seen them look up the files of your papers. If you do not take any of the papers you ought to subscribe now. The Nebraska delegation will not be large enough to divide, so we will all go together. The fare is $22.40 from Lincoln the round trip, and preachers by using their half-fare permits to Chicago, can get there for $2 less. This is due to the one fare plus $2 given by the Western Association, while the Eastern gives one fare straight.

Bro. and Sister S. G. Willard left Chicago this week, and will be ready to go on to Detroit with the Nebraska delegation. We hope to have some of the California and Colorado delegation with us also. All roads lead through Nebraska. Let us go up to Detroit in a representative manner. A delegate or more from every live church would be about the right thing, then let everybody go that can besides.

If you have not taken the Church Extension offering this month, do so at once. This work is one of our necessary agencies for establishing the cause of Christ in new fields. We can not afford in Nebraska to be indifferent, since this fund has been a consistent and persistent friend to our congregations. Some have been builded in which the board put in nothing but a promise. They were never called upon to redeem it. The help was just as real, however, as Abraham's sacrifice was real and acceptable to God even though the knife did not fall upon the victim. We will want to build, are wanting to build more new houses. We should stand by this business proposition loyally. Lincoln, First Church, has just recently beautified its house inside. This house and property was obtained by the direct help of the Extension Board. Don't neglect this.

Lincoln. W. A. BALDWIN.

Virginia and North Carolina.

In passing through Newport News recently I enjoyed a few hours in the company of the "Power" that helps move the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and he seemed much more "Garrisoned" with strength than I had expected. If his people take care of him as well as his noble wife does, and he takes care of himself, he is good for many years yet as the exponent of sane Discipleship at the capital of the nation and through the columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. F. D. Power is pre-eminently "sane," and being sane he is "sound." We have so many leaders (or would-be leaders) who are surpassingly sound, but who lack sanity and go abroad like roaring lions seeking whom they may devour.

A few weeks' stay on the seaboard has carried me back to England, theologically. Old country conditions of fifty years ago in this respect are being reproduced largely, and we are going through the "converted Jew," the "pre-millennial," and the "sanctificationist" crazes, or they are going through us.

Some of the Disciple preachers are tainted with these pious fanaticisms, and many of our people are beginning to wonder where they are "at." Plymouth brethrenism, which is the power behind the throne of all these specious and superb speculations, has rent asunder many an old country congregation, and caused almost inconceivable bickerings among Christians, and I earnestly hope and pray that the American churches may be saved this scourge. "Brethrenism" has a most unbrotherly history. Division, demoralization, decay and death, invariably and inevitably follow in its train. I wish Brother Durban would devote an article to its exposure.

I have been "vacating" since April on the eastern coast, dividing my time between North Carolina and Virginia, steaming, sailing, rowing, yachting, canoeing, fishing, feasting, on waters fresh and salt, and I might add "swamping" and "dismal swamping."

In North Carolina I found religious conditions very peculiar and confusing. The "Disciples" and "Christians" being two distinct bodies, the latter being slightly the stronger, their nicknames respectively being "Campbellite" and "Okellyite," the Christians have an absolutely open membership for all who presumably and ostensibly possess or wish to possess "Christian character," with baptism or without baptism, with creeds or without creeds. What the Disciples have I need not state here, except that there is a strong foot-washing tendency among some of them. The Freewill Baptists have a membership of about double what the Disciples or the Christians have, and they are a very aggressive, though very unprogressive people. They insist upon "foot-washing" as a religious ordinance and make its practice a test of fellowship. The primitive Baptists practice this some, but are not "bigoted" about it. The Freewill Baptist churches are adorned with "dish pans" to keep before the minds of the people their religious duty.

Between the Christians and the Freewill the Disciples are being ground to powder, they are somewhere betwixt the "devil and the deep blue sea," and to the philosophic and comprehensive mind the "current reformation" is doing little and is destined to do less in the old north state. Brethren who know the situation here say that we are on the eve of a collapse or a revolution in our ranks. Most any change I think is better than none. Ignorance and selfishness are at the bottom of the situation in North Carolina.

I found conditions very different in Virginia. The "current restoration," while not setting the world on fire, is maintaining most serenely the even tenor of its way. It has been blessed largely with an intelligent and cultured ministry, and the churches, as far as

Get the Most Out of Your Food

You don't and can't if your stomach is weak. A weak stomach does not digest all that is ordinarily taken into it. It gets tired easily, and what it fails to digest is wasted.

Among the signs of a weak stomach are uneasiness after eating, fits of nervous headache, and disagreeable belching.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla at different times for stomach troubles, and a run down condition of the system, and have been greatly benefited by its use. I would not be without it in my family. I am troubled especially in summer with weak stomach and nausea and find Hood's Sarsaparilla invaluable." E. B. HICKMAN, W. Chester, Pa.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills

Strengthen and tone the stomach and the whole digestive system.

I have been able to observe them, are made up of some of the best material in the communities. The church life and thought is not strikingly modern, though it is markedly respectable. It does not seem much worried over the "higher criticism" or the "lower Campbellism." It does not seem to be reading many of the productions of present day Disciples. Hopson, Longan, and the "man in the book" man (I can't call his name) are among its favorites. The Tylers, Sweeneys, Caves, are among its pulpit stars.

In a quiet way, the C. W. B. M. auxiliaries are making no small headway, yet I cannot see that there is much "enthusiasm for humanity" existing, the negro problem casts a hue of doubt and despondency over the whole missionary propaganda—and no wonder! Indian Territory.

In our last notes we spoke of Wagoner as one of our good churches and one that will soon be known among our people as one of our most energetic and wide awake congregations. Since that time we have had a meeting held by our brother, A. Martin, of Muncie, Ind. To those who know Bro. Martin, I need not say the preaching was all that could be asked for. Bro. M. seems to have grown in power with his growth in years, for to me he seems a stronger preacher than he was when I heard him last; at least he is fine now, and did the church at Wagoner good. I have not heard the exact number of additions, but it was a good meeting.

We also spoke in our last notes of Bro. Walling as being pastor of the church at Muscogee. Since that time he has resigned, I am told. This is due to his feeble health. Bro. Walling is a fine preacher, and could have done well at M. had he not been crippled by the weakness of the flesh. We hope Muscogee will not be long without a pastor, for in this place they need a good man, as it is one of the best towns in the Indian Territory, and we have many good people here.

South of this on the M. K. & T. is Checotah. Here we have a house, and it is paid for, but no congregation to speak of. We are now doing something for them in aiding Bro. J. C. Howell, who is preaching for them two Sundays in the month, and we know the preaching is well done; and we hope they will soon get together and go to work in earnest, and I believe they will.

At Enfauila we have some people, but they are few and weak; hope during next year to be able to give this place some substantial encouragement.

Also at Crowder City we have a good many people, and with little effort I am told we could have a congregation at this place.

At South McAlester we have one of the best men and one of the good churches in the Territory. Bro. I. N. Teel, late of Kentucky, is pastor of this place. When Bro. Teel took hold of this work they had been without preaching for some months, and of course had run down very low; but having some very good people to work on, he took hold of the matter in a brave, and yet careful way, and I am sure they will soon be brought to the front.

Bro. J. C. Howell, former pastor of this church, and the editor of the Pioneer Christian, still lives here. This is also the home of Bro. T. R. Dean, our recording secretary and treasurer.

At Haileyville we are soon to have a house of worship. We have here a very few earnest and faithful people, but mostly sisters. This is the work of our brother, C. N. Martin, of Wapanucka.

At Hartshorne we have a good house of worship, but are doing but little to build up the cause of Christ. The same is true of Atoka and Durant. At all these places we ought to, and might, with proper energy and management, have good, strong congregations; and we believe this will be had during the coming year.

We have lately had a good meeting at Jesse, held by our brother, F. G. Roberts. The immediate results of this meeting were three additions. Bro. Roberts also held a meeting at Wapanucka. Here he organized a congregation of twenty people. In both of these places he found very bitter opposition to our people, but Bro. Roberts, by his kind and plain presentation of the truth broke down the most of it—or, at least, a great deal of it. Both of these places are the fields of our Bro. C. N. Martin. G. T. BLACK, Cor. Texas.

G. W. Terrell, late of Missouri, has located at and is starting off nicely at Hillsboro, one of our important Texas churches.

That East Texas veteran, our old man eloquent, Harry Hamilton, of Landady, has been holding some fine meetings. He does not report much. One of his meetings with 32 confessions and seven other additions closed last week seven miles south of Crockett.

A congregation of 50 members was enrolled on Sept. 15 at Mart. Bro. David Pennington, of Taylor, preceded the secretary there with a week's preaching and prepared the way for this work.

Sept. 20 was spent at Crockett, the county site of Houston county. We found here a good new building standing idle, because a bad man had been employed as minister several months ago and brought shame and discouragement upon the church. Money was pledged to support a minister and in a short time a good man will be working in this field. How important to be sure of the minister's character who is to represent the church of God in any community.

Bro. A. O. Kial, late of the Terrell Church, has been called to Augusta, his former home, to look after the financial interest of an estate in which he, by his wife, is interested. He is not the man to be idle. He will preach at Augusta and Grapeland and act as chairman of the East Texas board. He will be a God-send to our East Texas work.

The veteran evangelist, B. B. Sanders, is beginning a good meeting at Lafkin. Sanders never fails. This is a field that was captured by Bro. T. W. Caskey thirty years ago. He routed the enemy and we thought the community was won. Six years later S. R. Ezzell captured it again. Then a few years later D. A. Leak captured the same field again. Still a few years later the writer visited this field and, by the courtesy of the Baptists, was allowed to preach in their house of worship. We aim to hold our part of it this time. Our tactics are changed, but the old gospel will be preached and God's name honored by faithful work. J. C. MASON.

GOD'S COVENANT WITH DAVID.—
2 Sam. 7:1-16.

Read 2 Samuel 7-10. (Parallel passage 1 Chron. 17:20.)

Memory verses, 2 Sam. 7:8, 9.

Golden Text: "Thy throne shall be established forever."—2 Sam. 7:16.

David's Desire.

David had now come fully into his kingdom. He had extended his dominion over all Israel and Judah, had conquered the stronghold of Jerusalem and made it his capital, and had brought up the ark so that Jerusalem had become the religious headquarters as well as the political capital of the nation. He had built for himself a palace, a "house of cedar," by the friendly aid of Hiram, king of Tyre. There was comparative peace and prosperity at home, and, for the first time, the government of Israel gave promise of a reasonable degree of stability.

And now it came into David's heart to build a house for the Lord, which should contain the ark of the covenant and should be on a larger scale than the ark, a visible symbol of the presence of Jehovah. It was a laudable purpose, and when the prophet Nathan was called into counsel he gave it his hearty approbation.

The Building of the Temple Postponed.

But the divine wisdom did not agree with the plans of David and Nathan, and the prophet was instructed to tell the king that the time was not yet ripe for the building of a temple. David had been a man of war, and his reign, beginning as it did in small things and with civil discord and foreign oppression, could not be a time for the accomplishment of great works of peace. Jehovah did not wish David's thoughts and interests to be diverted from the work of conquest which yet awaited him. So his word was that the building of the temple should be reserved for the next reign.

The Promise to David.

In that connection and in recognition of David's fidelity, a promise of great significance was given. It was that the house of David should be established perpetually, and that the kingdom should have no end. This is one of those prophecies which, though their first reference is to the affairs of the temporal kingdom of Israel, nevertheless have a secondary messianic significance. The dynasty of David at Jerusalem was not destined to be perpetual. It reached its glory under David's immediate successor, and its total duration was much shorter than that of several royal houses which might be named. But through the line of David came the King of whom it can be said that "of the increase of his kingdom there shall be no end." The fall of the kingdom at Jerusalem and the apparent destruction of the Davidic line of kings was not in contradiction to the spirit of this prophecy, but was the condition of its largest fulfillment. As Israel came in later days to trust in political power more than in righteousness and obedience to Jehovah, it became necessary to take away her political independence in order that her real mission might not fail of accomplishment, and that the highest blessings which were to be given to her and through her might be possible.

The Wars of David.

When David had made his covenant with Jehovah, he turned his attention to the conquest of his warlike neighbors. Strong in the confidence of divine favor and assistance, he subdued the Philistines, smote the Moabites and extended his dominion over Syria. The Edomites brought tribute and the Ammonites were his servants. All of these conquests meant a vast influx of revenue into the royal treasury, for the taxes levied upon conquered peoples were heavy in those days, and the proceeds went into the hands of the king. So

David's wars, which prevented him from building the temple, enabled him to amass the riches for its erection and lay up gold and silver which were to make the temple the most gorgeous and expensive building that the world has ever seen.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly every body knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but, simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I got more and better charcoal in Stuart's absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Oct. 6.IV. LAYING UP TREASURES.—Matt.
6:19-24 Luke 12:16-21

Slowly and painfully the world understands and appropriates its Savior. The hardest problem before the church to-day is this one of laying up treasure on earth. The teachings of Jesus touching riches are sometimes willfully misunderstood. Men's hearts are set on riches, because of the power or the comfort they assure, and they juggle with the words of the Master and make them mean something different from their plain intent.

Whatever may be said by the commentator who would indulge men in their covetousness, Jesus unequivocally condemns and forbids the laying up of treasures on earth, and enjoins the laying up of treasures in heaven: "For where thy treasure is, there will thy heart be also." He does not want men's hearts corrupted, nor fixed on things vain and transitory. What then? Must men who are naturally thrifty, endowed with a genius for accumulation, go out of business? Must they hide their talent in a napkin?

By no means. But they must beware lest their hearts are set on riches. Let them engage in business, and let them accumulate a competence, even wealth, provided they make that business a means of service to the King, and of laying up treasures in heaven. Here is where many a disciple stumbles and fails. He gives full and free rein to his acquisitiveness; he adopts the cruel methods of the age in which he lives; he drives his business with relentless energy, bent on accumulation, thinking all the while that the right use of his wealth is all the Master demands. Ill-gotten gains can have but one right use,—their immediate return to those who have been despoiled. If by subterfuge and chicanery a man accumulates wealth, he may bestow it all to feed the poor but it profits him nothing.

The same principle holds whether a man makes much or little. It is not the amount, but the spirit that animates him. He who sets gain above godliness violates the precept of the Master. He who makes merchandise the end of business, and not manhood, denies his Lord. The time will come when in the strifes of trade, as well as in charity—mongering, "the strong will bear the infirmities of the weak;" when it will be considered as much beneath the dignity of a Christian to take wealth from others or from the common store by superior skill as by superior strength.

"Take heed and beware of covetousness; for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things that he possesseth." We are in the midst of congested fortunes. Men's hearts are so set on riches that when they fail to win them, they die by their own hands. It is a time for heart-searchings; for a fresh study and faithful application of the teachings of Christ. He does not put a premium upon idleness; he does not encourage prodigality or laziness; but he does rebuke covetousness.

The great lesson for us to learn is, 1. That wealth is not the end of life. 2. That business itself is to be a means of Christian service. 3. That having honestly and diligently prospered, in a greater or less degree, we are not to have our hearts set on riches, but on making riches serve God.

To-day I found a man who is working hard for a small salary, having voluntarily relinquished an interest in a very profitable business, simply because the managers published lying advertisements. The article sold was worth all they asked for it, but it would not and could not do all that they claimed for it. He did not prepare the advertisements; his work was in another department; but he was too conscientious to profit in any measure by lies.

PRAYER.

O God, men fear poverty and want. They are beset by temptations. Help them to look aloft; to lay up treasures in heaven. Amen.

GREAT MEN OF THE BIBLE.—II. JOSEPH
—Gen. 41:14-16; 42-46.

The career of Jacob's youngest son forms one of the most picturesque and romantic stories in ancient history. The youngest and favorite son of a wealthy cattle-owner; sold into slavery in a distant land through the treachery of his own brothers; loved and tempted by a wicked woman; falsely imprisoned on a serious charge—all this before he was thirty years old. Then the sudden transition from slavery and prison to the court of the Pharaohs as the king's favorite and deputy; the re-union with his father and brothers; the removal of the family to Egypt; the honorable old age in which he presided with patriarchal dignity over the growing community of his father's posterity which was soon to multiply into a great nation. Here is a story as strange as fiction, told in a style of Homeric strength and vividness.

But Joseph's story is the embodiment of many great truths as well as a succession of thrilling incidents. Let us note some of these principles:

The opposition of wicked men is not to be feared, even when they seem to have us completely in their power. No one could have been more helpless than Joseph in the hands of his jealous brothers with murder in their hearts. But their evil designs could not frustrate the purposes of God, and Joseph came safely through his troubles and dangers. "Every man is immortal until his work is done."

The way of violence is the worst road to success and the least liable to lead to that goal. Joseph's brothers wanted to supplant him in their father's affection and they chose murder as the means. The attempt failed. Jacob's heart never lost its love for the boy whom he supposed the wild beasts had devoured and the elder sons gained none of his favor.

The memory of a sin, especially of a hidden sin, is an uncomfortable companion. When Joseph, as Pharaoh's deputy, asked his brothers about their youngest brother, they, not knowing him, said: "We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the distress of his soul when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us." Even when a sin is not followed by a visible punishment, it brings its own punishment in the form of remorse. Hell can hold no hotter punishment than this—a consciousness of the loathsomeness of one's own sins. To try to cover up a sin is like trying to cover a red-hot iron with snow.

Purity means power. To every man comes sometime a parting of the ways, when he must follow either the promptings of his best ideals or the leadings of sensuous temptations. He cannot follow both. If he chooses the latter, he becomes henceforth a negligible factor in the universe of spiritual forces. He has enslaved the soul to the body. Joseph in Potiphar's house is the type of the young man beset, perhaps for the first time, by temptations which it seems even dangerous to try to resist. To have yielded would have changed the whole course of his future life, would have cost him his opportunity of becoming under Pharaoh the ruler of Egypt and the protector of his father's family.

When Joseph's fortunes were apparently at lowest ebb, he was on the eve of his great promotion. To be cast down for righteousness sake is no detriment to a man. Sometimes God lets his chosen servants be brought very low, that they may know how to have sympathy with the lowly.

How admirable is that scene where Joseph, as viceroy of Egypt, meets and recognizes his brothers but is not recognized by them. He has no bitter thoughts toward them for their great sin against him, but from the very fullness of his love and the overflow of his joy he turned quickly away from them and "sought

IS IT AN EPIDEMIC?

Vital Statistics Show an Alarming Increase in an Already Prevailing Disease—Are Any Exempt?

At no time in the history of disease has there been such an alarming increase in the number of cases of any particular malady as in that of kidney and bladder troubles now preying upon the people of this country.

To-day we see a relative, a friend or an acquaintance apparently well, and in a few days we may be grieved to learn of their serious illness or sudden death, caused by that fatal type of kidney trouble—Bright's disease.

Kidney trouble often becomes advanced into acute stages before the afflicted is aware of its presence; that is why we read of so many sudden deaths of prominent business and professional men, physicians and others. They have neglected to stop the leak in time.

While scientists are puzzling their brains to find out the cause, each individual can, by a little precaution, avoid the chances of contracting dreaded and dangerous kidney trouble, or eradicate it completely from their system if already afflicted. Many precious lives might have been, and many more can yet be saved, by paying attention to the kidneys.

It is the mission of the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to benefit its readers at every opportunity and therefore we advise all who have any symptoms of kidney or bladder trouble to write to-day to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a free sample bottle of Swamp-Root, the celebrated specific which is having such a great demand and remarkable success in the cure of the most distressing kidney and bladder troubles. With the sample bottle of Swamp-Root will also be sent free a pamphlet and treatise of valuable information.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

where to weep; and he entered into his chamber and wept there." Not in the exercise of his most arbitrary authority over the people of Egypt did Joseph appear more kingly than in that moment when love triumphed over hate. He could afford to forgive and forget the sin of his brothers; they could not forget it if they would.

If we abide by the principles taught in the Bible, our country will go on prospering and to prosper; but if we and our posterity neglect its instruction and authority, no man can tell how sudden a calamity may overwhelm us, and bury our glory in profound obscurity. —Daniel Webster.

Our Budget

—National Convention, Detroit, Oct. 16-22.
 —Detroit is the Jerusalem to which our tribes will go up in large numbers, in October, to our National feast.
 —Reports of successful state conventions which have reached us give evidence of a great National Convention.
 —Missouri, Indian Territory and Kentucky were in convention at the same time last week and exchanged fraternal greetings by wire.
 —There should be a great work wrought by the churches this autumn and winter. Attendance on the sessions of our National Conventions at Detroit will be a good and perhaps the best possible preparation for such a work.
 —A word to business men: Plan to go to Detroit. You are too busy, you say? What business is more pressing than the Lord's? "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." If you cannot go, see to it, at least that your preacher goes, if you have to pay his way.

—R. B. Havener begins a meeting at Gamma, Montgomery county, Mo., Friday, Sept. 25.
 —The new Christian Church at Whitehall, Ill., was dedicated Sunday, Sept. 27, by L. L. Carpenter.

—W. F. Haman, pastor at Windsor, Mo., has resigned; resignation to take effect on or before Jan. 1, 1904.

—Hiram Van Kirk, Mrs. T. D. Butler and W. B. Berry will represent California at the Detroit Convention.

—The church at Liberal, Kansas, wants a preacher. For particulars apply, with good references, to E. O. DeVass, Liberal, Kan.

—We hear that Frank Garrett, of Nankin, China, who is now spending his sabbatical year in this country, is attending Columbia University, New York.

—G. W. Coffman has resigned the pastorate at Salida, Colo. His work there has been quite successful. There have been four additions during the past month.

—The church at Webster City, Ia., is in need of a pastor. The church has 350 members and must have a strong, stalwart preacher. Address Dr. Elbert Storer.

—The meeting at Prairie Valley Church held by S. E. Hendrickson and R. B. Havener resulted in four additions and the raising of the amount necessary to build a new house of worship.

—The First Christian Church at Ft. Smith, Ark., laid the corner stone of its new building on Sunday, Sept. 27. The address of the occasion was delivered by Z. T. Sweeney. E. T. Edmonds is the pastor.

—The First Church, St. Louis, will rededicate its enlarged building on Sunday, Oct. 4, and in that connection will hold a Harvest Home Jubilee and reunion of the former members of the congregation.

—The membership of our churches in California has increased over twelve per cent in the past twelve months, or one per cent a month for the entire period. How many other states can show an equal percentage of increase?

—L. E. Scott, formerly of St. Paul, Minn., has located at Greeley, Colo., where there is a large opening for a prosperous work. His pastorate has opened auspiciously with several additions, and the Sunday-school revival has been commenced.

—It is reported that Drake University has one hundred more students in attendance than it had at this time last year. All of our schools, so far as reports have been received, are opening up with bright prospects and increased attendance.

—J. F. Assiter, of Wellsville, Mo., writes that the ladies of the church recently paid a visit to the pastor's house to assist in celebrating his wedding anniversary, and incidentally left behind a beautiful dinner service and other mementoes.

—J. D. Hull has received a call from the Parkersburg (W. Va.) church for another year. During the past year over sixty have been added to the membership, the church debt reduced, missionary collections increased and current expenses met.

—A rally and conference of the Prohibitionists of Missouri, Kansas and neighboring states will be held in Kansas City, Wednesday, Oct. 7. Many prominent Prohibitionists will be present and the evening address will be delivered by the national chairman, O. W. Stewart.

—"I thank you for the article in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on 'The Ideal Church.' I wish to send a copy of the paper containing it to a number of persons whom I think it will do good, and will read it at our next prayer-meeting."

—E. L. Ely has resigned at Slater, Mo., and has accepted a call from the church at Atchison, Kan., where he will succeed W. S. Priest, who has recently gone to Columbus, O. We are sorry to lose Brother Ely from the state, but he is going to a good place and Kansas is getting a strong man.

—The Metropolitan Christian Church, of Chicago, of which Charles Reign Scoville is pastor, has large plans for erecting a well-equipped building to do a many-sided institutional work. A recent issue of the Chicago Tribune gave a half page illustrated article on the church's plans and expectations.

—The Bible College of Missouri received a gift of $5,000 to its endowment fund during the state convention at Columbia. If more of our business men would attend the conventions and get their information and enthusiasm at first hand, the contributions to all of our enterprises would be greatly increased.

—The Coshocton (O.) Daily News brings a report of a strong sermon by C. A. MacDonald, pastor of the 11th Street Church of Christ, on "Why I Am What I Am." The final reason given is the all-inclusive one, that the religious people with whom he is connected is pleading for the restoration of apostolic Christianity.

—The Ohio federation of churches and Christian workers, proposes to inaugurate an aggressive campaign this fall. The field secretary, Rev. D. R. Miller, D. D., St. Mary's, Ohio, will gladly respond to all inquiries for information, and calls for assistance in the organization and work of local federations. It is desired that at the fall meetings of conferences and associations, and similar gatherings, the matter will be carefully considered; also that delegates be appointed to the annual meeting to be held in Dayton, Dec. 1, 1903. This will be a very important and interesting meeting; a strong program is preparing.

Funds are much needed to carry out the plans of the federation. Contributions, large or small, may be sent to the field secretary or to the treasurer, Rev. W. M. Bell, D. D., Dayton. Send to the field secretary for circulars, information and blank subscription cards.

—Eureka College opened Tuesday, Sept. 15, with an address in the college tabernacle by Judge Lawrence Y. Sherman, ex-Speaker of the House of Representatives. His subject was "Individual Capital." Judge Sherman is deeply interested in educational problems. The friends of Eureka College will be pleased to know it is entering upon one of the best years of its history.

—R. B. Neal, of Grayson, Ky., writes that he knows of three mountain preachers, two of them "Mormon fighters," who ought to go to the Detroit Convention, but cannot afford it. We suggest that since attendance upon our national conventions is quite as much a matter of fellowship as of business, it would be highly appropriate to show our fellowship by helping those to go who are not able to do so.

—Many of our readers may not know that Miss Mattie W. Burgess, our Missouri missionary to India, has been recalled to headquarters at Indianapolis to assist Mrs. Helen E. Moses, whose illness compels her partial retirement from work for the present. Miss Burgess by her devotion to the cause and by her experience in the foreign field will be in condition to render great service to the Christian Women's Board of Missions in her present position.

—Please notice the "Suggestions for Detroit" from the chairman of the committee in that city which will be found elsewhere. We trust our readers will give these suggestions their very serious and earnest attention. It cannot be too deeply impressed upon the people that the value of the Detroit convention to the interests of the kingdom of God depends upon the state of mind and heart which the people who make up that convention will carry thither.

—The departure of Walter Scott Priest from Atchison, Kan., is felt as a great personal loss by the members of that church and by the people of the city generally. He was the organizer of the church, and after a few years' absence returned five years ago for a second pastorate. The church has grown and prospered in every way under his ministry. We have received from a prominent member of the congregation a tribute to Brother Priest's character and work, which only lack of space prevents us from publishing.

—The latest report from the office of the Foreign Society brings the gratifying news that the $200,000 mark has been passed and the money is still coming in. It is now believed the receipts will reach $205,000 or $210,000. This good news will send a thrill of joy around the world. It will reach the missionaries on the field. We suggest that the preachers mention this bit of good news to the churches next Sunday morning and that they make special mention of this great victory in their prayers in the Sunday morning service.

—T. C. Jackson, pastor of the church at Atlanta, Ind., received a hearty call to the church at Camp Point, Ill., and was desirous to accept it, but the church which he has been serving for some time at Atlanta, vetoed the arrangement, and has called him for another year from next January. While this is a disappointment to the church at Camp Point, it affords additional proof of Brother Jackson's fitness for the position to which they had called him. Men of single-hearted devotion to the cause of Christ are in demand.

—A note from Miss Mattie W. Burgess, now at the C. W. B. M. headquarters, Indianapolis, Ind., informs us that a telegram has been received at that office from Monterey, Mexico, bringing the sad intelligence of the death of Brother Alderman, Wednesday morning last. She writes: "As yellow fever is epidemic and the town was in quarantine, we presume that our good missionary has died of the fever." This is a sad loss to the mission at Monterey, and a great bereavement to the family of the devoted missionary. To the widowed wife and children the deepest sympathies of the whole brotherhood will be extended.

—"Virginia Christian College is opening most favorably. Within the first few days 83 have enrolled; we believe there will be a hundred the first month. Nearly all of them are from abroad and of college age. The interest has steadily widened and deepened. The school is near the center of the state. Lynchburg is a railroad center, and while there are few members of the church in or about Lynchburg, it is the center of four of five groups of Disciples in the state. Thus it is located not only to have the encouragement of these groups but also to be a center for evangelization. Teachers, students, trustees, all are encouraged to pray and work for great things." J. Hopwood.

—The Oklahoma convention was held at Oklahoma City, beginning Sept. 15. The annual address of the president, Dick T. Morgan, who has occupied that position continually since the organization of the society twelve years ago, was delivered on the first night of the convention and was a presentation of the wonderful growth of our cause in Oklahoma. We have now over 300 churches in that territory, a membership of 15,000, and a quarter of a million dollars invested in church property. The Home Board and the Church Extension Board have both contributed much to the progress of the work, but its greatest success has been due to the fact that the people of that territory have been willing to help themselves.

—During the third week of September two annuity gifts were received by the Board of Church Extension: $100 from a brother in North Carolina, and $800 from a brother in Ohio.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST office has been favored the past week with calls from Bros. D. R. Dungan, Z. T. Sweeney and Dr. S. R. Woods. Brother Dungan was making a brief visit in the city on his way from the convention at Columbia; Brother Sweeney was on his way to Ft. Smith, Ark., where he was to deliver an address on the laying of the corner stone of a new church building; and Dr. Woods, after spending the summer in Missouri, with his wife, is about to return to his Florida home at Bowling Green. Brother Woods is in his 76th year and says that while he is ready to be called hence, any time, he never loved life more, nor was happier at the outlook before him. Such is the triumph of faith.

—In referring recently to the ninetieth birthday of the Christian Observer, we stated that it claimed to be the oldest religious paper in the world. This claim is disputed by the Herald of Gospel Liberty. We have received the following note setting forth the claims of this paper to the distinction: "The first number of the Herald of Gospel Liberty was published at Portsmouth, N. H., Sept. 1, 1808, and is five years and four days older than the Christian Observer. The Herald of Gospel Liberty has been continuously published in New England and Ohio since 1808, and is the oldest newspaper in the world. It is now published in Dayton, O., and is the official paper of the religious body called Christians. N. DEL McREYNOLDS."

Bellefontaine, O.

—The Bellaire, O., Church has much to rejoice over in the growth and prosperity of the past year under the ministry of Sumner T. Martin, who began his second year last Sunday. He preached 106 sermons, made about 1,500 calls, baptized 224, had 108 others added, married 24 couples and had 33 funerals. The church and Sunday-school gave $613 for foreign missions, (Miss Mary Kelly is the church's living link missionary) $336 for home missions, $138 75 for Marietta Church, $108 for Ohio missions, about $50 for Church Extension, and something for ministerial relief. Including the C. W. B. M. offerings, fully $2,000 was raised for missions, charity and education; perhaps double as much as in any other year. Over 400 persons have weekly pledges, Sunday-school enrollment over 500 and Christian Endeavor and Junior Christian Endeavor flourishing. The church has just been repainted and frescoed. The church has about 600 members.

—"The heart given to our Father, the hand given to our brother, the life given to both, will win the world for Christ." These words so full of meaning to every earnest Christian were accepted by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in convention in Columbia this week, as their motto for the coming year. These women offered a prize (a C. W. B. M. gold pin), to the lady sending the most appropriate motto. I feel sure the people of Columbia and Christian College will rejoice to know that one of their old girls was the winner of the prize. Mollie Church Young, the fortunate lady, is a daughter of Bro. Samuel Church, the first pastor of the Christian Church in St. Louis. Her lovely Christian mother, Julia Lenoir Church, is still living with her daughter in Lebanon, Mo. It is indeed fitting and appropriate that this honor should have been conferred upon her in this, the home of her childhood and maidenhood, and in the church of her spiritual birth. It was with feelings of profound pleasure that I was permitted to be present in the convention that honored my friend.

Helps to Faith.

This volume, by J. H. Garrison, just issued by the Christian Publishing Company, is an effort to carry the argument in favor of Christianity further back than it is usually carried, so as to meet every man on his own ground where he is, and to lead him thence, step by step, to the acceptance of Jesus Christ as affording the only revelation of God and the only religion which can fully satisfy the needs of men. Beginning with the foundational fact of human nature itself, with its religious instincts and religious needs, it aims to lead the sincere and honest searcher for truth from fact to fact until the mind is prepared to receive the Christ of the Bible as the fulfillment of the prophecies of man's inner being—its intuitions, its capacities, its needs—as well as the fulfillment of the prophecies written by holy men of old.

The work consists of two parts. Part I consists of a series of reasons, of foundation facts which underlie faith, embracing eighteen chapters. Part II treats of Some Obstacles to Faith, embracing twelve chapters, the whole making a book of 245 pages.

It is the author's belief that it is a timely book, adapted to the religious needs of many, who, to-day, are disturbed in their inherited beliefs, and are seeking for some more substantial basis for their faith. It is his sincere, hope, too, that the book will in some humble measure meet the wants of this class of people and serve to lead many a doubting soul into the light and joy and strength of a clearer and stronger faith.

The work is bound in blue silk cloth and sells at the popular price of $1.

Baltimore Items.

In the quiet of my study, when all nature is at rest, the hour being late, even the voice of the children on the street is silenced; all is at rest, save my mind, and it seems to want to wander in the fields of the past, and that with an experience of my own, in the Master's cause in an eastern city.

One year ago last March 15, I preached my first sermon to what is now known as Riverside Park Christian Church, but then a crowd I had gathered in a city market hall, by going from door to door, and when I requested all who would unite with our move to come forward, only eight came. We had planned to build a church, start a Sunday-school and to have anyhow one hundred members in a year's time, and these eight were the beginning of this wild hope.

Now, a little history: Dr. Cook, a physician of the city, had a great deal of property in this section and wanted a church on this street to facilitate the sale of his property, and offered us $1,000 if we would build. This was the most liberal offer we had ever had in the east; it must be taken up, so we went to work. The above was our beginning. We had additions from the beginning, almost every service; sometimes as many as six or eight at a single service. Before the year ended we had nearly two hundred members, instead of the one hundred we dreamed of. We got in our house of worship, Sunday, Oct. 19. We have raised in the eighteen months over $5,000. I want to thank the brotherhood at large for their kindness in answering my appeals for help, and this is my principle reason for writing this reflection.

Our Sunday-school has numbered as high as 400. As to our congregations, we have just been run over all the time, and often turned away as many as we seated. From Oct. 19 to June 1 we had confessions every service save four, and turned people from the door unable to give them seats every night service save five or six.

We, by the help of God, have accomplished all these things. However, the first of July my health gave away and I have been in Virginia until last Saturday, when I returned. I pray God he may give me strength to continue my work as we must accomplish much this winter to make the work go on as it should.

While in Virginia I visited R. Lee Abbott at his home in Spencer; heard him preach a very fine sermon on Sunday. Brother Abbott is a brother to our B. A. Abbott at Harlem Avenue Church, this city. He is one of our coming young preachers.

We are planning a great convention, to be held in Brother Power's church at Washington on Oct. 7, 8, it being our state meeting.

W. S. Hoyer and J. S. Hopkins have commenced a work at Waynesboro, Pa. This is an important field and should be cultivated. It is my honest conviction that our national boards would do well to send a great deal more money to the east just now while the time is ripe. Will it pay? You have a practical illustration above.

Peter Ainslie is now constructing his new building, the Christian Temple, and will push it to completion. A fine man and a fine work.

News just reached me that Bro. B. A. Abbott has been called to 7th St. Church, Richmond, Va. Hands off!

Now that summer is gone and the time has again arrived for active work, I pray God that this may be the most prosperous year of His cause on earth.

I am glad to say our churches all have pastors; all seem very well equipped for the fall campaign. We are in hopes of making this the best year the church has had in its history in Baltimore. For years and years we only had one church in the city. The idea was to have only one church, and make it good and strong. Thank the good Lord this idea no longer exists. I am so glad it is gone, even if it did take a church row to bring it about.

I returned to my work on Sept. 13 after an absence of two months, occasioned by sickness. I sincerely hope I am able for a good year's work.

On yesterday we had a fine day, a large congregation both morning and night; at our night service we had two persons to confess the Lord. We had deep interest and a general revival all around.

I sincerely hope this is a start to give us another such year.

News has just reached me that my brother, J. Wm. Shelburne, of Virginia, is very much improved, after being delirious for forty-four days with typhoid fever.

The church in Maryland has had a prosperous year. Probably not as many confessions as last year, but a general growth all along the line.

J. O. SHELburne.

Conference of Bible-School Workers at Detroit.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, DEAR BROTHER:—The plan proposed by our Bible-school Board at our last state convention to so co-operate with the various other state boards as to create a general committee for the purpose of advancing the interest of Bible-school work, has received the hearty commendation not only of the Sunday-school workers of this state, but of the leading workers of other states. It is entirely practicable for our brotherhood to follow the excellent example of the Methodists and Presbyterians in employing a worker of eminent ability to organize and direct the energies of our host of Bible-school officers and teachers, provided the proper machinery can be set in motion.

We are very democratic in our church work, and a very great movement must come from the people. In this particular case there does not seem to be any competent body to call together those interested in Bible-school work and to perfect the organization of this committee. Cannot the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST suggest some method by which a call can be promulgated at Detroit for the gathering of the members of state Bible-school boards, state field workers, teachers and officers and others interested to a discussion upon the advisability of forming this new committee? I believe that it will only require a notice to bring together many of our most prominent Bible-school people, and I have no doubt that the advantages to be gained are so great that there will be an immediate response and a committee formed and the work inaugurated along the lines of greater things and more helpful things for our Bible-schools. How shall a meeting be called? Who shall call it?

The writer will be pleased to receive correspondence and suggestions as to how this work can be started. Address 1623 Washington Ave.

W. H. McCLAIN.

St. Louis.

[We see no difficulty about getting a meeting of those interested in the new movement for a national Bible-school superintendent to be supported by the various state Sunday-school boards. Let a notice be given by the president of the convention that at a certain hour and place, not interfering with the regular sessions of the convention, there will be a meeting of all Sunday-school workers and others interested in this movement. At that meeting let a large committee, representing the Bible-school work in the various states, be selected with power to choose a suitable person for this position and plan for his work and salary. This may require several weeks or months, but success or failure will depend upon how that committee does its work.—EDITOR.]

CALL FOR CONFERENCE.

Since the foregoing was written, the following notice has been received, and will answer the purpose of calling a meeting that can consider the question of national superintendent of Bible-schools:

On behalf of the committee appointed at

IS YOUR STOMACH ON A STRIKE?

There is Nothing to Prevent You Employing a Substitute to Do its Work.

There is such a thing as forbearance ceasing to be a virtue even in the case of one's stomach. There is no question but that some stomachs will stand a great deal more wear and tear and abuse than others, but they all have their limit and when that limit is reached, the stomach must be reckoned with as sure as fate. The best way and really the only effective way to treat your stomach when it rebels is to employ a substitute to do its work. This will give the weakened and worn-out organ an opportunity to rest and regain its strength and health.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets relieve the stomach of its work by taking up the work and doing it just as one set or shift of workmen relieves another. They actually digest the food in just the same manner and just the same time as the digestive fluids of a sound stomach do. In fact, when dissolved in the stomach, they are digestive fluids for they contain exactly the same constituents and elements as the gastric juice and other digestive fluids of the stomach. No matter what the condition of the stomach is, their work is just the same. They work in their own natural way without regard to surrounding conditions.

The stomach being thus relieved by Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, is restored and renewed by Nature and the rest of the human body does not suffer in the least by reason of its failure to perform its work.

A Wisconsin man says: "I suffered the pangs of dyspepsia for 10 years. I tried every known remedy with indifferent results until I was told of the remarkable cures of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I bought a box, began taking them and forgot I had a stomach. Three boxes cured me completely. I have had no trouble whatever for a year and have an appetite like a harvest hand and can eat anything that is set before me without fear of bad results."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50c. a box. The druggist never fails to have them in stock because the demand for them is so great and so pronounced that he cannot afford to be without them. People who could not get them of one druggist would go to another and would get in the habit of buying their other drugs there as well as their Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Minneapolis Convention to consider greater things for our Bible-schools, a meeting is hereby called of all interested in Bible-school work to be held at such time during our general convention at Detroit as may hereafter be agreed upon, due notice to be given in the Detroit papers and from the convention platform.

It is proposed to consider the following suggestions:

1st. The establishment of a permanent committee on Bible-school work empowered to formulate a general plan for teacher training, plans for the enlargement of work in individual schools, to arrange for a complete normal course of Bible study, and the issuing of diplomas to those who have completed the course.

2nd. To devise a plan by which this committee can be made effective, and to comprehend the leading Bible-school agencies in each state.

3d. To empower this committee to elect its own officers, appoint the necessary committees for the advancement of its work, and to employ the foremost Sunday-school man among us to execute the plans of the committee.

4th. To empower this committee to raise the funds necessary to carry out this purpose.

Detroit Suggestions.

In three weeks more we shall be in our great convention in Detroit. It is our earnest hope and prayer that we may have a convention where the spirit of devotion, prayer and work may prevail. That we who assemble there may be seized with a passion for the salvation of the world, as never before. That the advancement of the cause of Christ may be the one absorbing topic. To this end, on behalf of the local committee, and the Detroit brotherhood, I want to make the following requests:

- 1st: That every Disciple of Christ, wherever he may be, will pray earnestly every day until the convention is over, for the blessings of God to the above end.
- 2nd: That every gathering of Disciples, wherever assembled, shall remember us in their united prayers to the end above mentioned.
- 3rd: That every church that has not arranged to send their pastor or some other delegate, do so at once.
- 4th: That every Disciple will, if he cannot come, urge some other Disciple to come.
- 5th: Let every one, everywhere, pray without ceasing that God be in us all, and so direct our deliberations that through our united efforts the greatest possible good may be done.

Indiana to Detroit.

The Pennsylvania and the Wabash roads have been selected as the most available for a solid delegation from Indiana to the Detroit convention. All trains from Southern and Western Indiana reach Indianapolis in time for the 11:35 (noon) northbound train from Indianapolis via Logansport, and the Continental Limited over the Wabash to Detroit. Parties from points on the Vandalia can join the main party at Logansport. From the northwestern part of the state and from Eastern Indiana connection is made at Fort Wayne, while those from the Chicago-Detroit division join us at Montpelier. All north and south lines crossing the Wabash make connections with the Continental Limited, and as many sections will be run as are necessary to carry the delegation in first-class vestibuled through coaches. Breakfast at home, hand lunch and supper at Detroit. Returning leave Detroit 7:40 A. M., hand lunch and supper at home. The delegation from Indiana will be a record-breaker, as the expense is so small. For further information write the district passenger agent of either of the above lines at Indianapolis, or the undersigned, Since writing our last we have learned that Bro. G. T. Meeker would remain at Winters, though he had received a call from the Hallister Church. We do not know whom the Hallister Church will call now.

Several churches are in correspondence with ministers and we hope to soon be able to chronicle the location of several more men in our midst.

Bros. Gallahorn and Carroll had a fairly successful meeting at Fortuna with some ten additions, and are now busy at Hydesville where they had three confessions a week ago. Notwithstanding there are three churches in Hydesville, these are the first conversions in the town in about five years, and it is about three years since our people ceased to meet. The work of reviving the dead churches progresses and is quite as important as planting new churches. It is preliminary to the latter. From Hydesville they go to College City.

Mrs. Clara Hazelrigg is to come to the coast Jan. 1, for a series of meetings. She will begin at Stockton in January and then to Napa in February. We expect other meeting to follow throughout the year.

Bro. S. S. Murphy, of Vallejo, is doing a good work, winning in a hard field. So many obstacles to overcome and so many coming and going. It is very essential that they get a property of their own to give this work permanency, and we are glad to note that they are now working heroically to that end.

Bro. Murphy will likely hold a meeting at Rutherford in October, assisted by Bro. Pierce, the new pastor at Rutherford, and Bro. Nesbit, the "sweet singer" of Napa. Rutherford is one of our mission points and is sure to develop into a self-supporting church in the near future. It is located in one of the best villages, as far as climate and soil are concerned, to be found in this wonderful state.

Napa is making decided advancement under the untiring efforts of Bro. S. A. Nesbit. He is busy now, being on the go much of the time as a member of the State S. S. Association, yet he finds time to run a little printing-press and do much to advertise the church and its services. He is succeeding in setting the whole church at work, a thing most essential to decided growth.

The time draws near for our National Convention. "On to Detroit," should be the cry. Would that our 91 churches in Northern California might each have a delegate there to bring back the good things to those who can not go. Those who do go will not need to feel ashamed of California headquarters at Detroit this year.

Yes, and here comes "California Day" creeping on us, first Sunday in November. What are you going to do? Will we be ready for it? Will we make it a day to be worthy of the blessings we enjoy and in keeping with the needs of the field? We shall see. Prepare for surprises.

An Electric Belt Free

Send Your Application At Once To
The Physician's Institute.

They Will Send You Absolutely Free One of Their 100 Gauge Supreme Electric Belts, the Belt Which Has Made so Many Wonderful Cures—You Needn't Send Even a Postage Stamp, Just Your Name and Address.

Seven years ago the State of Illinois granted to the Physicians' Institute of Chicago a charter.

There was need of something above the ordinary method of treatment for chronic diseases, something more than any one specialist or any number of specialists acting independently could do, so the State itself, under the powers granted it by its general laws, gave the power to the Physicians' Institute to furnish to the sick such help as would make them well and strong.

Ever since its establishment this Institute has endeavored in every possible way to carry out the original purposes of its establishment under the beneficent laws of the State.

Three years ago, the Physicians' Institute, realizing the value of electricity in the treatment of certain phases of disease, created under the superintendence of its staff of specialists an electric belt, and this belt has been proved to be of great value as a curative agent. From time to time it has been improved until it reached that stage of perfection which warranted its present name of "Supreme."

This belt is the most effective of all agents in the cure of rheumatism, lumbago, lame back, nervous exhaustion, weakened or lost vital functions, varicocele, kidney disorders and many other complaints.

This "Supreme Electric Belt" is made in one grade only—100 gauge—there is no better electric belt made and no better belt can be made. Whenever in the opinion of our staff of specialists the wonderful curative and revitalizing forces of electricity will cure you we send you, free of all cost, one of these Supreme Electric Belts. It is not sent on trial, it is yours to keep forever without the payment of one cent.

Write to-day in confidence, telling all about your case, and give waist measure, and the belt will be sent you absolutely free at once. Address PHYSICIANS' INSTITUTE, 1974 Unity Building, Chicago, Ill.

Missouri C. W. B. M. Convention.

The joint missionary and C. W. B. M. conventions convened at Columbia on Sept. 21. With perfect September weather, hospitable, wide-open homes, a large and enthusiastic gathering whose sole desire was one, and that the advancement of the kingdom of our dear Lord. With a decided progress in all lines over any previous year, we can safely say that this, the 66th year of the co-operative effort and the 24th year of the C. W. B. M. work in Missouri, was far and away the best convention ever held in our state. Others may have been some larger and at others more money may have been raised, but the deep interest manifested by all in every part of the state, and the sweet spirit of oneness with Christ, which is felt more year by year, tends to an uplift and inspiration which indeed makes us feel we have been with Jesus and have absorbed in a measure his deep love for each other and the world.

The C. W. B. M. reports show a decided increase over last year from the rank and file, though the whole sum may not quite equal last year's because of the large gifts of our dear Mattie Burgess. The secretary reported 181 auxiliaries, with 22 organized and 17 disbanded; 3,886 members, an increase of 328; 1,163 Tidings, an increase of 137; 30 life memberships, wholly or partly paid. Total to national treasury, $6,364.29, an increase of $750.82; the treasurer, Mrs. J. P. Pinkerton, reported offering for state work, $1,099.91, an increase of $34.85.

Miss Mollie Hughes, for Y. P. department, reports 110 societies reported during the year with a membership of 2,522; conversions, 188; builder subscriptions, 397; Little Light Bearers total contributions, $814.74. Kansas City First Church Juniors is the banner society for largest offering, $61.75 and the certificate was awarded to them, the presentation speech being made by Miss Mattie Pounds, of Indiana, national superintendent of the Y. P. department, whose happily chosen words were a fitting close to her splendid address on, "Is it Well with the Child?" The Kansas City First Church auxiliary carried off the banner for the largest offering $326.78. The Central Church (St. Louis) auxiliary made the largest offering per capita, the average being above $7 per member.

The convention was blessed in the presence of Miss Mattie Pounds, whose address for the Junior interests was highly appreciated, and Mrs. Catherine Lindsay, of Illinois, whose address before a large audience in Christian College auditorium on "Missionary Social Union," awakened deep interest and provoked many questions on this step for Christian union taken by the women of the missionary societies of our own sister churches.

The reports of the various committees showed a careful consideration of the needs at present time. One recommendation of the Ways and Means Committee deserves special mention. In effect, it is, that we set our mark at $2,500 in special offerings to be paid before Sept. 1, 1904, to be apportioned as follows: In India at Deoghur station, $500 to be used for teachers and native helpers at the discretion of national board, which is to be divided into 20 shares of $25 each. To Mexico, $1,400 for the Alderman family, who are from Missouri and who are holding up the "banner" in our stead, at Monterey. To home field, $600 for Mattie Burgess' salary as assistant to our national secretary, Mrs. H. E. Moses. After Mrs. Lindsay's address on Tuesday evening, the state secretary called for pledges on these special objects, and auxiliaries responded generously, two pledging $100, for two of Brother Alderman's children (each child of all missionaries for all churches is allowed $100 per year for support and education) many pledging $50 for a month of Brother Alderman or Mattie Burgess, others $25 for a half month, or a share in the Deoghur work. In all $1,121 were pledged inside of twenty minutes. The general tone of the convention was very hopeful for the future outlook. Officers elected as follows: President, Mrs. M. M. Goode, St. Joseph; vice president, Mrs. S. E. Lampton, Bowling Green; recording secretary, Mrs. H. A. Denton, Warrensburg; corresponding

An important work is being done in Lyman county, mostly at Oacoma, the county-seat. Having obtained six weeks' leave I held a meeting at Oacoma and succeeded in establishing a Christian Church there of 51 members and raising about $800 on a $1,500 building. The building is now enclosed and nearly ready to be plastered.

The membership during my absence holds well-attended services in the line of Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor, prayer-meeting and social services each Lord's day.

One fortunate feature of the Oacoma work is that the elders, I. N. Auld and Charley Christofson are apt to teach.

The moral reformation that is causing a marked change in Lyman county, in connection with the plea for primitive Christianity, unity and loyalty to Christ is a matter of no little comment in this part of South Dakota.

My two years of pleasant and successful work at Armour will close in November. Then for a time I shall give my entire time to the work in Lyman county.

Indiana.

The district conventions, beginning with No. 1 and held in order to No. 8, which closed Sept. 24, have set a new mark, and as the conventions have advanced one after another, each has seemed to outrank its predecessors in attendance, interest and enthusiasm. The November offering for state missions is being emphasized as never before, and the preachers and delegates from churches are speaking as one man in support of this great work which lies at the foundation of all of our missionary enterprises.

Our assemblies during the season just closed have prospered as never before. There has been nothing but praise for both the management and the programs in our assemblies the past season, and the promise for next year is better than ever before.

The death of Bro. E. F. Mahan, pastor of the Shelbyville church, is a distinct loss to the state. Brother Mahan had thoroughly equipped himself at Kentucky University, at Indiana University and at Yale for a successful life work in the Master's service. Through his inspiration the congregation had just completed a splendid house of worship, and his ministry was at the full tide of blessing to the whole community. Brother Mahan was sweet-spirited and in full sympathy in every enterprise of the church, at home and abroad. Fraternal by nature, the Christ that dwelt in him made his life beautiful. A soldier has fallen at his post; a good man, beloved by the brotherhood, has gone to his reward.

The evangelistic season has opened early this year. For some years Indiana has been forging ahead in evangelistic work. Last February, in one week, in Indiana one thousand were baptized into Christ. And co-operatively the work has prospered amazingly. This coming season promises to be a record breaker in large ingatherings. The state board is already overwhelmed with calls; but a liberal November offering, which is now promised by the preachers and churches all along the line, will enable the board to multiply the number of field workers and relieve the situation before the winter is over.

Lost Disciples.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.—I suppose, of course, you receive many encouraging words, but I wish to express my own appreciation of the paper you so ably edit. I like its Christian spirit, its charity, its liberality. I think you succeed in being liberal without sacrificing anything fundamental or essential, which is admirable. It is to be commended for its high intellectual standard and its spiritual tone. I shall take great pleasure in recommending it.

And I am glad to see the paper dealing with the practical problems which are before us for solution. About one of these, mentioned in a recent editorial, viz.: "Our Lost Disciples," I wish to have my little say. This problem is assuming proportions which make it important. It is not enough to work for large gains. We must also guard against losses. I find in this town a surprisingly large number of people who have belonged or do now belong to Christian churches in other places, but who can not be induced by any amount of urging, exhortation, persuasion or coaxing to place their membership with either of our churches here. It seems strange that so many of our brethren take advantage of a change of residence to either go into sectarian churches or to go to the world.

The causes for this are various. In some cases it is due to lack of proper instruction when they were in what they call the "home church." Some of them were converted to a preacher and not to Christ; and joined a man, not the church. They were attracted into the congregation by the personality of the man. Now, if this man had used his personality simply to gain a favorable hearing while he presented Christ and his gospel to them until they surrendered to the Savior and took up his cause, it would all be well. But too often the man has been content to merely hold them to himself. If all converts were personally and directly united to Christ these things would not happen. The minister should not be a link binding the member to Christ. The Christian should be the branch and Christ the vine—a personal union. Some are led away by the wealth, aristocracy or style of sectarian churches. Some are induced to forsake the faith for financial or professional considerations.

As for the remedy: We have been getting at this matter at the wrong end. We have been trying to handle these derelicts by working with them after they have come to our field from elsewhere, which I think others as well as I have found does not yield satisfactory results. The only way to deal effectually with this matter is: First, to give more careful, thorough and emphatic instruction to new members. The evangelist can never leave finished Christians behind him; the local minister must take the work up where he had to leave off—must water where he has planted. Second, the pastor must frequently instruct and caution his congregation on this point, both from the pulpit and in private, explaining and emphasizing the necessity of holding one's membership where one lives. This is necessary for the good of the cause in general and for the good of the individual. We must deal with this class before they move, not after.

Sometimes, too, there is a false conception of the reverence and allegiance due the "old home church, the old burying ground, etc.," as the one could not have as true reverence for the past and the things of former associations if they should remove their membership. And many ministers encourage this mistake.

This is one of the matters in which an ounce of preventative is worth a pound of cure, and all will save ministers in larger towns and cities no end of trouble.

WHY WILL YOU DOUBT?

When you are all bound up and are suffering from indigestion, lack of appetite, foul breath, headache, dyspepsia, catarrh of the stomach, kidney and liver complaints, you need a tonic laxative, something that will move the bowels quickly, easily and without leaving hurtful effects behind. Never use a purgative or cathartic. They weaken the bowels and system, and make the disease worse. Use instead Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine. It tones, builds up, gives new strength and vigor, not alone to the bowels, but to the whole being. Only one small dose a day will cure any case, from the lightest to the worst. That means cure, not simply relief only. The most obstinate cases yield gently and easily and the cure is permanent. Vernal Saw Palmetto Wine is not a wine or patent medicine. A list of ingredients is in every package with explanation of their action. Write us for a free sample bottle. It will be sent gladly. Address, Vernal Remedy Co., 19 Seneca Building, Buffalo, N. Y.

SABBATH OR LORD'S DAY

DUNGAN, author of "On the Rock," "Moses, the Man of God," etc. It is a powerful argument against Adventism, and the observance of the Sabbath, or seventh day of the week, as the day of rest and worship. Prohibition Rally.

At a meeting of the secretaries of the various mission boards Dec. 12, at Cincinnati and myself, it was agreed that one speech on Christian citizenship should be delivered Saturday night, Oct. 17, and that as many prohibition rallies as possible be held in the city from 6:30 to 7:30 P. M. same evening.

But after long correspondence and much discussion, it has become a developed fact that neither out-door meetings nor five different indoor meetings can be held with any practical results. Hence we have finally decided to hold two sessions in a separate building on Saturday, Oct. 17, as announced in the program.

After all, it will not conflict materially with any other sessions. Let everybody get ready to be present.

W. H. BOLES, Chairman.

HOW TO BE CURED.

WITHOUT PAIN.

Don't wait until you are a helpless invalid, for a seemingly simple case of hemorrhoids, or piles, may, if neglected, rapidly lead to worse. The unnatural formations become tumorous and permanent, and the inflammation grows until abscesses form; the disease burrows into the tissues, forming tubular growth which discharge pus; cancerous conditions, and general gangrenous degeneration appear.

What is needed at the start, or at any stage, is something to soothe this inflammation, reduce the swelling and distension, and at the same time restore the diseased parts to normal condition. These three things are accomplished perfectly by the Pyramid Pile Cure. It checks all progress of the disease, and rapidly returns the affected parts to health, besides relieving at once the pain and fearful irritation.

"I began using Pyramid Pile Cure, and in order to make sure of a cure bought five packages; for the past six weeks I have not been troubled in the least, and I had been bothered for thirty-five years, and had spent more than fifty dollars for different remedies; this is the first permanent help I have had, and no one could feel more grateful that I do." L. M. Williams, Conneaut, Ohio.

Pyramid Pile Cure is sold by druggists generally for fifty cents a package, and we urge all sufferers to write Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich., for their valuable little book describing the cause and cure of piles.

Harrison, O., Sept. 23, 1903.

ILLINOIS.—Watseka, Sept. 22.—Two excellent young ladies have recently expressed their faith in Jesus Christ and rejoiced our hearts. Detroit is being much talked of these days. Every church should see to it that a representative is in attendance.—B. S. FERRALL.

Abingdon, Sept. 26.—Brother D. J. Elsea, our pastor, has just closed a successful meeting at Pretty Prairie, near this city. He had 30 additions, all but three or four being by confession. All except one or two will unite with the church here, making about 130 additions within fourteen months.—J. W. LOMAX.

Rockford, Sept. 24.—The Central Christian Church here had its annual membership meeting Sept. 23. O. F. Jordan was called by an absolutely unanimous vote to a fourth year of service with the church. The treasurer's report showed the church in a flourishing condition and that the church would close the year without a deficit. The pastor's report showed 35 additions for the past year; 22 of them by baptism. During his three years' pastorate, there have been 92 added to the church and a stone house of worship secured. Three years ago the brethren were meeting in a hall.—O. F. JORDAN.

Cisne, Sept. 21.—A young man confessed Christ and was baptized at Jeffersonville yesterday. The church at Jeffersonville responded with a good offering to Church Extension. The church here recently purchased a fine organ, insured their building, put in a brick walk 12x16 feet, put up new steps and gave their first offering for Church Extension, nearly $9. They also gave $33 in cash and pledges to the Benevolent Association.—O. WILKINSON.

Benton, Sept. 18.—Twenty two additions in the meeting here. R. A. Omer did the preaching.—W. J. BURNER.

INDIANA.—Indianapolis, Sept. 21.—Two added at North Park Church yesterday, one by confession and one by statement. Seven added since last report.—AUSTIN HUNTER.

Logansport, Sept. 21.—We have had five added to the church here in the past four weeks. All adults and excellent members. I spoke to the Commercial High School last Friday on "Success and Failure." Resigned here two weeks ago at the end of my second year—much opposition to it by the congregation—was asked to make it "dateless," so am still acting as pastor for the church. Just begun our second Sunday-school rally; it promises to be intensely interesting. Will dedicate church house at Gas City next Sunday and Mrs. Hootman will fill the pulpit here while I am away. Will hold our Cass county church rally here Oct. 1, 2. Speakers will be J. O. Rose, Brother Coyle, Milo Smith and J. H. O. Smith, of Valparaiso. Expect a grand time. A. M. HOOTMAN.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—Chickasha, Sept. 21.—Our great meeting which began Aug. 20 closed to-day with 62 additions; baptisms 38, balance by relation. Cost of meeting, tabernacle, preaching, etc., $300; collected for same $350. While we regard it as a success it did not measure up to our expectations. For three weeks we had model weather, fine audiences—reaching 2,000 Sunday night—with the finest of interest, but inclement weather drove us into the house and the interest waned. Brother Boen is a fine evangelist, an expert baptizer. He had the good will and co-operation of all the city churches and pastors. He bore away with him the good wishes of the whole city and the prayers of the church. This gives us about 400 members of the best element of the city.—J. SPRINGER.

IOWA.—Ames, Sept. 21.—Four additions to the church at the close of the Sunday morning discourse. Three other additions recently which were not reported, all by letter. Of the seven, five are young men and two young women. Excellent church workers.—F. D. TERRALL, pastor.

Sigourney, Sept. 21.—One added by baptism at this place and two at Lancaster, Ia., since my last report.—C. H. STRAWN.

Nora Springs, Sept. 23.—John Brown, an excellent young man who has been preaching some for the Baptist people, identified himself with our people here Sunday. Brother Brown expects to give his life to mission work.—G. A. HESS.

Creston, Sept. 19.—Three added last Sunday, two by statement and one by confession. Brother A. Martin begins a meeting here tomorrow.—R. H. INGRAM.

Webster City, Aug. 30.—We closed our work with the church here, having been with them but thirteen months. These were months of the most pleasant fellowship in the service of the Master, and nothing could have induced us to break the tie but the opportunity for further educational work. The church was harmonious and responded most heartily to every effort to promote the interest of the kingdom. During our labors together there were 86 accessions to the church, $365 were paid on the indebtedness, a new piano purchased and paid for, besides other improvements. The church paid its pastor promptly by the week and is now in the best financial condition in its history. The indebtedness on the building is only $1,600 with $200 on hand to apply on this. There is no more profitable or pleasant field for the energetic minister than this place. The church deserves the services of one of our best men. A pulpit supply committee is now at work; may the Lord bless their efforts in trying to secure a capable, earnest, Christ-like minister.—H. F. BURNS, University of Chicago.

KANSAS.—Wichita, Sept. 21.—Two confessions and two by letter at the St. Lawrence Avenue Church yesterday.—W. T. McLAIN.

Coffeyville, Sept. 21.—Two additions here yesterday, one by letter and one from M. E's.—ELLIS PURLEE.

South Haven, Sept. 23.—More than raised our apportionment for church extension at this place Lord's day morning. One more confession at Hunnewell at the evening service.—J. M. MORRIS.

KENTUCKY.—Elizabethtown, Sept. 23.—Charles Richard Vawter, after a most successful ministry here, has tendered his resignation and purposes going to Missouri. There have been 142 added to the membership in the last 14 months. A. C. W. B. M. and a Junior society have been organized. Churches in Missouri desiring the service of a good, strong minister, with a consecrated, helpful wife, should write to Brother Vawter.—C. H. SMITH.

Earlington, Sept. 21.—We began a meeting here yesterday. There were large audiences at both the services and two confessions at the evening meeting. Brethren, pray for us.—W. R. JINNETT.

MICHIGAN.—Saginaw, Sept. 21.—Services yesterday gave us five confessions and baptisms; one by letter. Enthusiasm for the Master is growing.—E. E. COWPERTHWAIT.

MINNESOTA.—Eagle Lake, Sept. 21.—Two baptisms since last report, and all branches of the work moving on excellently.—J. P. CHILDS, minister.

St. Paul, Sept. 26.—Our work is beginning pleasantly. Central is a mission under A. C. M. S., but has good prospects. Will have Rally Day and Roll Call, Oct. 4.—C. C. DAVIS.

MISSOURI.—St. Louis, Sept. 27.—Two additions Sept. 13. One by statement and one by confession. Two additions Sept. 20. One by statement from the Methodists, and one by letter. Two confessions to-day.—FRANK J. NICHOLS, Hamilton Ave.

New Hampton, Sept. 8.—I assisted Bro. E. S. Oatman in a short meeting recently at Mt. Olive, in Harrison Co., Mo. There were four additions: two baptisms, one from Baptists and one by statement.—J. T. ALSUP.

Kirksville, Sept. 22.—There were six additions to the church here last Sunday.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Joplin, Sept. 20.—Eighteen added in South Joplin to-day; 72 to date. Meeting only two weeks old. Five also at First Church to-day.—W. A. MOORE-BAKER-TURNER.

Cabool, Sept. 20.—Our meeting is one week old; good interest; one confession.—JOSEPH GAYLOR.

Appleton City, Sept. 21.—Two additions at Center yesterday, one reclaimed and one by statement.—FRANK JALAGEAS.

Pattonsburg, Sept. 21.—I have just closed a two weeks' meeting at Westboro, Atchison Co., Mo. I preach for them one-half time. It rained about one-half time during the meeting, but notwithstanding the rain, we had a fine meeting. There were 12 additions as follows: Eight by confession and baptism, one from Methodist and three by letter. Closed with fine interest.—ROBERT ADAMS.

Drexel, Sept. 22.—We closed a good meeting at Passaic, Mo., Aug. 19, with 11 additions. This was a very pleasant meeting. We organized the church there 11 years ago. They meet in a union house, and you know what that means. I found them earnest and zealous for the Master's work. May heaven's blessing rest with them. Then I went to Cleveland and held a two weeks' meeting, resulting in nine additions. This is a little working church. They have an excellent Bible-school and a good senior and junior Christian Endeavor Society. They are good workers. I am now in a meeting of one week at Richards, Mo. Five additions to date.—O. A. ISHMAEL.

Tipton, Sept. 26.—Closed a splendid meeting here last night. All the preachers of the town dismissed all services for four weeks and attended regularly and took part. The M. E. pastor made a speech in which he said that he had never heard better preaching, and concluded by taking a vote of thanks for the great good accomplished. The vast audience was on its feet in an instant. The feeling between the churches was not good; to-day it could not be better. The remuneration was all I could ask. I begin at the Central in Springfield, Mo., tomorrow. Correspondents address me there.—H. C. PATTERSON.

Maplewood, Sept. 27.—Our meeting is two weeks' old and continues with splendid interest and large congregations. Three fourths of the attendance not our members. There have been 26 added to our membership. Of these, 17 were confessions and baptisms, 5 by letter and 4 baptism believers from the denominations. Bro. O. E. Hamilton is doing the preaching, and Frank A. Wilkinson is conducting our singing. The church is delighted with the excellent work that our evangelists are doing.—G. A. HOFFMANN.

NEBRASKA.—Edgar, Sept. 22.—One more addition Lord's day evening, a Baptist minister, who comes to us highly recommended. The work here is in excellent condition. Pray for us.—E. W. YOCUM.

OHIO.—Columbus, Sept. 22.—I have been received most heartily and kindly by the Central Church, with larger audiences and one added by letter at the first service last Sunday morning and one confession in the evening.—W. S. PRIEST.

OKLAHOMA.—Norman, Sept. 22.—We had 6 additions to the church here last Sunday all by letter. Our work was never more promising than now.—J. G. CREASON.

Pond Creek, Sept. 24.—Four additions last Sunday. Ten the past three Lord's days: five by letter and five young men by confession. Crowded house every Sunday evening.—R. S. CAMPBELL.

Lahoma, Sept. 23.—There has been five additions recently to the church here: two by letter, two by statement and one by baptism. One young man, a druggist of Okeene, came thirty miles to obey the gospel. Brother Monroe, of El Reno, dedicated our church the first Sunday in September. We have now only 20 members. Brother Coats, of Iowa, will hold us a meeting commencing Oct. 9. We expect a good meeting. We had one addition by letter at Waukomit at our last appointment.—DAVID MARTIN, Pastor.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Claysville, Sept. 21.—Three confessions since last report; seven since meeting began. This makes 21 additions in 16 months. What Distinguishes Congregationalism.

always stood for education. If people have the right to decide their beliefs for themselves they will be anxious to secure such training as will enable them to make wise discriminations. Consequently we have always aimed to have an educated ministry, and an educated ministry has produced a thoughtful people. Many of the most prominent colleges and universities of this country, like Harvard, Yale, Dartmouth, Amherst, Williams and others, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, were founded by Congregationalists for the purpose of fitting men intelligently and rationally to preach the gospel. We have held, and still hold, an uneducated ministry to be a scourge of God. Education is now the monopoly of no denomination, but the time was when it was a distinguishing feature of our people.

Congregationalism of necessity has been tolerant, when it has been consistent. Oliver Cromwell protected Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, Unitarians and Quakers, and insisted that all were equally entitled to the protection of the government so long as they respected the rights and privileges of others. To be sure Roger Williams was driven out of the colony of Massachusetts Bay, but he was received with open arms by the colony at Plymouth. Toleration follows the recognition of the prerogative of private judgment. The right to have our own religious opinions implies that we will defend others in their rights to have theirs.

Brotherhood also has always distinguished Congregationalism. Where the polity is consistently followed distinctions of rank or caste, color or condition disappear. A Congregational church is simply a brotherhood of believers in Jesus Christ gathered in one place for the worship of God and the service of their fellow-men.

The editor of this paper wishes to know how the various denominations stand toward the unification of Christendom. Most denominations now recognize that the church should be composed only of those who have entered the Christian life. So far we are agreed. We could consistently unite with other Christians on the basis of an organized fellowship in all missionary and philanthropic work, but we could never give up the independence of the local church. That must be left to determine its own rules, articles of faith, forms of worship and everything that concerns its interior life. Moreover, we can never surrender our belief in the priesthood of all believers. These two truths we must always be left free to teach and practice, though we do not insist that they shall be accepted by others.

The differences between the denominations are growing dimmer because it is becoming increasingly evident that most religious truths which are vital and enduring are the common property of all Christian people. I prophesy that the day is not very far distant when independent churches of every variety will surrender their independence so far as is necessary for the best results in efforts to promote the missionary enterprise and municipal and civic righteousness, but that they will retain their autonomy in all that concerns individual faith and practice. Moreover, I predict that the more highly organized churches will yet yield to the local churches independence in all that concerns doctrine and ritual. Just what will be the common attitude concerning priesthood, I do not now care confidently to predict; but I do feel sure that our dread of sacerdotalism in all its forms will never grow less, and that all Christians will sometimes believe with us that the true Apostolic Succession is to be found in the "Historic Christian People."

Bird's-Eye View of Bethany.

See Picture on Cover.

The village of Bethany owes its name to Alexander Campbell. Previous to 1823, and during the early issues of the Christian Baptist of the same year, all letters and publications had to be carried to West Liberty, four miles distant. To avoid this inconvenience, Mr. Campbell induced the post office department to establish a post office at his own residence, which he henceforth "denominated Bethany." He was its first postmaster, and aided by his deputy, he filled this position uninterruptedly for thirty years. Viewed from the vantage ground of this "bird's-eye view," Bethany certainly possesses a panoramic beauty most pleasing to behold. The little village rests quietly amid the everlasting hills, dipping their feet, anon, in rivulet and stream. The beautiful "Buffalo," in the foreground, intersects the valley with "graceful curve." "Old Bethany," the mother of all our colleges, lifts herself, with stillness serene, midst the universal verdure of the hills. And we are deeply impressed with the singular appropriateness of the designation—Bethany. The mind at once reverts to the Bethany of sacred fame, surrounded by the Palestinian hills. The place of holy memories, hallowed with the most sacred associations of the Redeemer's life. Bethany! How befitting the appellation when applied to the "cradle" of the Restoration movement! How naturally would it suggest itself to Mr. Campbell's mind. For did not the great reformer supremely adore his divine Master and Model, the Christ, who so often amid his weariness and sorrow, betook himself to Bethany, where abode Mary and Martha, and Lazarus, whom he loved, and whence, having rested, he went forth to endure afflictions anew?

CHEAP LANDS

For Homeseekers and Colonies.

The country along the Cotton Belt Route in Southeast Missouri, Arkansas, Northwest Louisiana and Texas offers the greatest opportunities for Homeseekers. Mild climate, good water, cheap building material, abundance of fuel, and soil that will often in a single season yield enough to pay for the ground. Land can be bought as cheap as $2.50 an acre, prairie land at $4 and $5 per acre up, bottom land at $5 and $6 per acre up, improved on partly cleared land at $10 and $15 per acre up. Some fine propositions for colonies—tracts of 2,000 to 8,000 acres at $4 to $10 per acre—big money in this for a good organizer. Fruit and truck lands in the famous peach and tomato belt of East Texas at $10 to $20 per acre up. Write us for information about cheap rates, excursion dates, also literature descriptive of this great country and let us help you find a home that will cost you no more than the rent you pay every year.

The Quiet Hour

"The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear?
The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?"

The psalmist had come to a realization of his personal possession of God. He could say, He is "my light and my salvation." It takes real genuine faith to make this personal appropriation of God.

✧

A story was told, recently, of a lady in England entering the pew of a wealthy merchant who was a consecrated man. The hymn, "My God, the Spring of all my Joys," was given out. The merchant wrote on a slip of paper, "Can you say my?" and handed it to the lady. She was puzzled, at first, but as the meaning of the question entered her heart, she could not join in singing the song, but trembled like a leaf. She could not say, truthfully, "my God." Many years later a man sent for the merchant to visit him on his dying bed. When the merchant entered, the dying man said, "You saved my wife once, by asking her if she could say 'my,' and she has saved me. I could not die without thanking you for your great kindness." Reader, can you say with the psalmist, "The Lord is my light and my salvation?" Is He the strength of your life?

✧

There are a thousand things in earth and air and heaven which are ours if we appropriate them, but which we may never get the benefit of without such appropriation. What avails it to us that God has made the earth beautiful, if we have no eye to see its beauty? What does it avail if the soil about us be capable of producing all manner of fruits and cereals, if we do not appropriate this fertility and use it for this purpose? What does it avail us if God be rich in mercy and in treasures of knowledge and of wisdom, if we do not appropriate these blessings? Of what use is God Himself to us, if we cannot make Him our God, our refuge, our strength, our light and our salvation?

✧

If God be our light then we need not walk in darkness. The light of God shines within before it shines without. It illumines the heart before it illumines the face. It drives darkness and superstition from the mind before it lights the lamp of joy in the eye. He who is content to be taught of God, and to walk in the light of God, as that light shines in the face of Jesus Christ, shall not abide in darkness but shall have the light of life.

✧

If God be our salvation, let us trust Him more implicitly. If He is indeed our salvation, then He is the source of our highest joy and of our fondest and most enduring hope. He is able to save to the uttermost. No enemy can pluck us out of His omnipotent hand. He will save us from all the ills of life and from all the terrors of death. O let us trust Him, and find rest to our souls!

✧

If God be the strength of our life, of whom, indeed shall we be afraid? "If God be for us, who can be against us?" Weak and uncertain must that life be that does not find its strength in God. But how much all this accentuates the value of obedience to God, and of prayer! Let us do what He tells us, and seek daily counsel from Him.

✧

O God, even our God whom we may call Father, we thank Thee that we may claim Thee as our own God—our Light, our Life, our Joy, our Strength, our Salvation! Help us, we beseech Thee, to appropriate, by faith, all that Thou hast promised to be to us, in order that we may be what Thou wouldst have us be! We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen!

The Kentucky State Meeting.

and J. J. Haley gave a strong address on "The Great Commission."

A new departure was made by our state society in the choice of a president. Mr. Wm. W. Estill, a prominent citizen of Fayette county, a man of fine character and an old and esteemed classmate of the writer, but a layman, was chosen. The choice is fortunate, and it is hoped will bring the consecrated business men of our state more and more into our mission work. No other changes of importance in the officary of our state society were made.

THIRD. There was Kentucky State Sunday-school day—Thursday. C. W. Dick, of North Middletown, presided well and gave an admirable address. R. M. Hopkins, state Sunday-school evangelist, made a good report. Among other things given were, counties visited, 37; institutes held, 63; conventions attended, 25; schools organized, 10; churches, 1; Endeavor Societies, 8; protracted meetings assisted in, 3; additions, 151; county conventions organized, 7; district, 3, moneys received, $1,176.56; schools that observed Children's Day, 195; that observed Boys' and Girls' Rally Day, 55; given to Children's Day, $3,229.00; given to Rally Day $416.38. A strong effort will be made the coming year to push Rally Day and bring it up to Children's day. When that is done the problem of our state Sunday-school work will be solved.

C. H. G. Stoney, of Flemingsburg, conducted a profitable conference on district conventions, showing their needs and benefits. W. F. Smith admirably discussed "Teachers Meetings," in a speech that was requested for publication. Benj. L. Smith urged rally day, and A. McLean Missions in the Sunday-school, while R. E. Moss discussed the problem of the half-grown boy, and D. F. Stafford, of Louisville, had a symposium on "The Next Forward Step in the Sunday-School." At night Miss Nannie Lee Frayser delighted the great audience by a Bible story, which proved to be a new setting forth of the prodigal son, and H. D. C. MacLachlan, of Shelbyville, gave a magnificent address on "The New Chivalry." Pres. J. W. McGarvey every morning gave a Bible study on the book of Job. I never saw so large an attendance before at these morning lectures. He concluded the third and last by telling the story of Maria Young, an afflicted colored woman of Lexington, whose bright and cheerful spirit is known throughout the city and has a vast influence for good. I do wish Brother McGarvey would write out and print that story. It would be a classic of its kind, worthy to rank with Moses E. Lard's famous account of "Solomon's Confession."

C. H. G. Stoney becomes president of the Kentucky Sunday-school convention for the coming year. Winchester was decided on for the place of holding the next convention, and Sept. 19-22 as the time.

FOURTH. There was Cane Ridge Centennial Day—but as that is "another tale," and as I have already far exceeded all decent limits, that will have to be deferred. A hundred details crowd upon me, and if George Kemper, on whom tales devolve, omits too many, I may come again.

The Cane Ridge Church.

The story of the Cane Ridge Church possesses an interest which intensifies as the years pass, and the restoration movement, of which it is an essential part, grows apace. The building was erected in 1791, and is a well-preserved log structure 40x50 feet. Its original appearance is changed somewhat by the substitution of shingles for the old-fashioned clapboards, and the concealment of the logs beneath the modern weather-boarding. The church stands on a "ridge" of slight elevation, and in former years the ground hereabouts was quite thickly covered with "cane," hence the name "Cane Ridge."

Services have been held in the church continuously for one hundred and twelve years, there having been "no interregnum" since the pastorate of Robert W. Fenly, the Presbyterian minister, who immediately preceded Mr. Stone. The latter, with his entire congregation, seceded from the Presbyterian faith and communion in 1804. The present organization dates back to 1807, with B. W. Stone as pastor and W. Rogers as clerk. The membership has reached 300, and numbers at present about 75. Preaching services are held once in two weeks, and the membership of the Sunday-school is 30.

What stirring scenes, momentous in their signification, have been witnessed in and about this old building! Here occurred the great revival of 1801, when from twenty to thirty thousand people were drawn by the earnest, impassioned preaching of Stone and others, proclaiming a present salvation free to all, a doctrine startlingly new to the assembled multitude, whose religious thought was dominated by a rigid, fatalistic Calvinism.

Here, too, on June 28, 1804, Mr. Stone and other Presbyterian ministers made known to the world that they henceforth would take "the Bible alone as a rule of faith and practice, to the exclusion of all human creeds, confessions and disciplines, and the name 'Christian' to the exclusion of all sectarian or denominational designations or names."

□ Cane Ridge Church is without doubt the first since apostolic times, to take this stand. This was three years before Thomas Campbell sailed for America, and while his son Alexander, a youth of 16 summers, was assistant teacher in the little academy at Rich Hill, Ireland. Moreover, this Cane Ridge declaration antedated by five years the famous "Declaration and Address" issued from Washington, Pa., and signed by Thomas Campbell and General Acheson. Truly, B. Warren Stone was the "pioneer of pioneers."

The plain marble shaft which marks the resting place of Barton W. Stone, preacher, evangelist and reformer, may be seen in the unpretentious burying ground a few feet east of the Cane Ridge Church. Here the body of the great man peacefully reclines, in "God's acre," under the very shadow of the church he so much loved and so richly hallowed with his consecrated ministry and unremitting toil. This memorial of love was erected by the friends and admirers of Mr. Stone, in 1847, three years after his death, which occurred at his son-in-law's, Captain S. A. Bowen, Hannibal, Mo. The inscription reads as follows:

"The Church of Christ at Cane Ridge and other generous friends in Kentucky have caused this monument to be erected as a tribute to

BARTON W. STONE.

A minister of the gospel of Christ and the great reformer of the 19th century.

Born

Dec. 24, 1772,

Died

Nov. 9, 1844.

His remains lie here."

To this epitaph the following utterance of Elder Stone might fittingly be added as characteristic of his love for the Word of God:

"Let the people take the Bible as their only sure guide to heaven, for it is better to enter into life having one book, than having many to be cast into hell."

Family Circle

Gran'ma's.

Last time we went it didn't seem Like gran'ma's any more,
'Cause when we came up to the house
She wasn't in the door.

She always waited for us there
With arms all stretched out wide;
She'd kiss me first and then the rest,
While I stood by her side.

And gran'pa, close behind, would always Tell us, "Welcome home!"
But last time gran'pa looked so sad,
Just standing there alone.

I guess God wanted her up there,
So we'd be good, because
If she was there we'd go—He knew How sweet my gran'ma was.

The Member Was Not Dropped.

"I move we drop the following names from our roll," and the secretary read off five names, pausing a moment after each.

"I second the motion," came from somewhere in the rear of the room.

But at that moment a boy near the door rose impetuously. "Wait just a minute," said he; "We don't want to make any mistake. 'Suppose we drop the first four, as they have moved away, and hold on to Lem Briggs a while longer."

"He hasn't attended a meeting in over two months," objected the secretary; "and the last time he was spoken to by a lookout committee, he said he didn't know that he cared to come any more. We can't carry names that way."

"But I think there must be some mistake, or—or misunderstanding," insisted the boy near the door. "Lem Briggs isn't one to speak slightly of our meetings; I know him a little. He was in my class in school before he got a job in the factory. Sometimes I think we are not quite cordial enough. The mill-district fellows feel that we do not treat them as we do the rest of the town, and I—well, I believe they are half right. This ought not to be. In the society we should drop everything like that. I believe Lem Briggs is a fellow we ought to know better, to be proud of, to be glad to associate with, and I believe that if he can be brought into touch with us, he will help the society. He supports his mother and the children now, and he is working hard for an education. Even if it were different; if he were shiftless and weak, it would be our duty to try to lift him up. That's what our society is for; not to thrust out, but to draw in. That a fellow is obliged to live in a cheap place, and work, should not influence us, nor the fact that he has not had our advantages for an education. I move that we hold on to Lem Briggs a while longer, and that some of us go to him, not to warn him that he will be expelled if he does not attend, but to convince him that we really want him to come."

"I second the motion," came from the same voice in the back part of the room.

"And I move that our friend Bert be the one to see Lem Briggs," added the secretary.

time, for, hoping to be able to enter college in the fall, he was giving all his spare moments to a few special studies in which he felt himself deficient. But the next day he arranged to borrow a couple of hours from himself, and to make it up by extra hard study.

He did not know exactly where Lem lived, only that it was in one of the cheaper tenements of the mill district. From there he hoped to be directed to the mill in which Lem worked.

He was especially fortunate, for as he went down one of the narrow alleys, he met the object of his quest face to face. Lem was in his shirt-sleeves, his arms bare, and there were dark streaks upon his hands and face from the machines among which he had been working. In his hands he carried a case of bobbins. Evidently he was on his way from one mill building to another. When he saw Bert, he flushed slightly, and stood aside to let him pass. But Bert stopped also.

"Hello, Lem!" he exclaimed cordially; you're just the fellow I want to see. You remember those books on mathematics you wanted to buy from Phillips, and he asked too much? Well, I've got a set that I'm just through with, and some more on the same subject. If you can find use for them, you are welcome to the lot. They're likely to find their way into the waste-barrel if you don't. Come," frankly, as he noticed the embarrassment on Lem's face, "don't let your supersensitiveness come to the surface on account of such a trifle. Can't you accept a few old books from a friend?"

There was a momentary struggle on the mill-boy's face; then he, too, smiled frankly.

"Yes, I'll take them," he answered, simply, "an' much obliged."

"There's another thing I want to speak to you about," Bert went on. "We haven't seen you at our meetings for a long time. What's the matter? Don't say you can't spare the time," smiling warningly; "that's too old a story. Anybody can find time for a duty."

"Oh, it isn't that," returned Lem, deprecatingly. "I—I—are you sure your members really want me? Of course, they've asked me to come, an' have told me my name would be dropped from the roll if I didn't attend more regularly, but I have thought—"

"Look here, Lem Briggs," and Bert placed both his hands upon the other's shoulders, "don't let us have any more of that. You're too sensible. What's the use of one-half the world shrugging its shoulders, and the other turning its back? Why can't they go forward and make use of the good things that are ready, and help to create more? We're all workers in one way and another, and pretty much alike. You just come forward frankly, ready to do your part, and there will always be plenty to welcome you. We need just such strong, earnest workers as you. And as to wanting you," looking squarely into Lem's eyes, "I can speak for one. I do want you. Will you come?"

And Lem, his eyes also frank and direct, answered, "Yes."—Elizabeth Patterson, in Wellspring.

Looking for a Teacher.

Prof. Robert L. Garner, the African explorer, is frequently the target of wits, but, happily, he has an effective method of protecting himself against their assaults.

On one occasion, while breakfasting in the Queen's domains, an offensive little Englishman took a seat beside him, and began a bombardment of senseless affirmations.

"It's a cold day!" quoth the stranger.

"Yes," said the professor courteously.

"This is a large dining-room!" was the next original comment, and so during the entire meal.

Professor Garner is at all times the most approachable of men, but as the young blood was incapable of thrusting out the ghost of a peg on which to hang the conversation, Professor Garner contented himself with monosyllabic replies. Later, as he walked through the hotel lobby, crowded with guests and loungers, the man again approached him. Thrusting his hands deep into his trousers-pockets, and with his feet wide apart, he remarked, in a loud, sneering voice, "I know who you are!"

"Well, sir, having made no effort to conceal my identity, I am not surprised at your penetration!" returned the professor, crisply.

"Oh, you are the man who knows all about monkeys!" persisted the young fellow, impertinently.

"Not all about monkeys. There are several species I am not familiar with," returned Professor Garner, significantly.

"Say, professor," asked the young fellow, gibingly, "is it true that you can teach monkeys to talk?"

The exasperated explorer looked full into the impudent face, and inquired, seriously, "Yes; on rare occasions I have accomplished this difficult feat. Were you looking for a teacher?"—Woman's Home Companion.

The Judge's Fence.

It is a rule that a workman must follow his employer's orders, but no one has a right to make him do work discreditable to himself. Judge M——, a well-known judge living near Cincinnati, loved to tell this anecdote of a young man who understood the risk of doing a shabby job, even when directed to.

He had once occasion to send to the village after a carpenter, and a sturdy young fellow appeared with his tools.

"I want this fence mended to keep out the cattle. There are some unplanned boards—use them. It is out of sight from the house, so you need not take time to make a neat job. I will pay you a dollar and a half."

The judge went to dinner, and, coming out, found the man carefully planning each board. Supposing that he was trying to make a costly job of it, he ordered him to nail them on at once, just as they were, and continued his walk. When he returned, the boards were all planned and numbered, ready for nailing.

"I told you this fence was to be covered with vines," he said, angrily. "I do not care how it looks."

"I do," said the carpenter, gruffly, carefully measuring his work. When it was finished there was no part of the fence as thorough in finish.

"How much do you charge?" asked the judge.

"A dollar and a half," said the man, shouldering his tools, preparatory for leaving.

The judge stared. "Why did you spend all that labor on the job, if not for money?"

"For the job, sir."

"Nobody would have seen the poor work on it."

"But I should have known it was there. No; I'll take only a dollar and a half," and he took it and went away.

Ten years afterward, the judge had the contract to give for the building of several magnificent public buildings. There were many applicants among the master builders, but the face of one caught his eye.

"It was my man of the fence," he said, afterwards.

"I knew we should have only good, genuine work from him. I gave him the contract, and it made a rich man of him."

The above anecdote well illustrates the truth of the old adage that "Whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well." Failure to remember this has cost many a boy a good position in life.

"Young man," said the pompous individual, "I did not always have this carriage. When I first started in life I had to walk."

"You were lucky," chuckled the youth. "When I first started in life I couldn't walk."—Chicago News.

Two Ways of Giving.

A colored man was telling of his way of giving to the Lord. "Yes, sir," said he, "I gibbs de truck off o' one acre ebbery year to the Lawd."

"Which acre is it?" the friend asked.

"Well, dat is a different question. Truf is, the acre changes most ebbery season."

"How's that?"

"Why, in wet season, I gibbs de Lawd de low land, and in dry season I gibbs him de top acre of de whole plantation."

"In that case, the Lord's acre is the worst in the whole farm, for in wet seasons it would be quite flooded, and in dry times, parched."

"Jes' so. You don't allow I'se going to rob my family of de best acre I'se got, did ye?"

Is not that too much the fashion of our own offerings to the Lord—shreds of time, bits of talent, driblets of money, fringes of things? These magi teach us better. They give their best. It is not our poorest, but our best, that we should give the Lord.—Wayland Hoyt.

Father's Time.

"Oh, no, I cannot go with you after dinner to-night, because that is father's time, and we always have so much fun then."

That is what I heard a little maiden say to her school friend, who had invited her to go somewhere with her.

"Father's time." I wondered what that meant, and so I asked the little maiden, "What is 'father's time?'"

"Oh," said she, "'father's time' is right after dinner at night, an hour or so before we go to bed. Father makes lots of pleasure for us then, and it is the only time we can see him, except in the early morning, and that is for such a short while. Father never goes away at that time; neither do we; we give that hour to him, and he gives it to us. It is our 'together hour.' Oh, he is such a good, dear father!"

What a testimonial to the high standard of fatherhood was the speech of this little girl! Away all day, immersed in business cares, the father could give no time to his children except the hour before their bedtime. With what happy, light hearts those little ones kissed him good night when bedtime came, and with what smiling faces they went to sleep to dream beautiful dreams of father love!—Evangelist.

Eight Great Secrets of Success.

A man with a mania for answering advertisements has learned some interesting experiences. He learned that by sending $1 to a Yankee he could get a cure for drunkenness. And he did. It was to "take the pledge and keep it."

Then he sent fifty cents to find out how to raise turnips successfully. He found out: "Just take hold of the tops and lift."

Being young, he wished to marry, and sent thirty-four one-cent stamps to a Chicago firm for information as to how to make an impression. When the answer came it read, "Sit down on a pan of dough."

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

Olive Leavitt, Frankfort, S. D.: "I have just finished keeping the Advance Society rules for the 7th quarter. I read a chapter in the Bible every day."

Grace Adamson, Sedgwick, Kan.: "I have read the Av. S. letters since I can remember—papa says since I could read; I have concluded to be a member of the band if you will put my name on your roll." (It's there.) "I have the rules a little mixed. Will you tell what they are, as I want to begin the day school begins? I am fifteen." (Read at least 5 pages of history each week, and 30 lines of standard poetry; memorize a quotation from a good author, and keep an account of your work in a note book. Every day you must read at least one verse in the Bible—and send me a summary of your reading every 12 weeks. When you send your report you must state whose quotations you have memorized, and what history and poetry you have read. The history you are studying at school isn't fair. And you must state whether or not you read at least one Bible-verse each day—you don't have to tell what verses they are. Of course, the more work you do extra, the better for you.)

Maude Kelley, Saskatoon, Sask., Canada: "I am almost ashamed to write, for after all my resolutions I have missed one of the rules again, and in my last week, too! I will tell you how I came to do it. Mamma and I were cooking in the railroad-camp on the near railroad that is being built. I got along all right until I went to read my poetry, then found that I had left my book of poems at home. I could find no poetry, so had to let it go. I haven't any poetry here, so cannot keep the rules now." (Poetry is always scarce in railroad camps.) "I will have some as soon as possible." (Strange to think how people who live in the midst of poetry, with poetry staring at them from shelves and gaping at them from magazines, never think of improving themselves by reading it!) "We are in a pretty country—all hills and valleys. In the valleys are little round lakes surrounded by trees and covered by ducks. The ducks are not so wild up here, for they have not been shot at. They will let you come to the bank and watch them. Our pet in camp is a little black-and-white shepherd dog. He is an awful sharp dog." (I hope he will not stick you.) "We are teaching him all kinds of tricks. . . . This is later in the afternoon and it has started to rain, and our tent leaks a trifle. It is getting near bedtime, so I will have to stop." (Do move your cot under a dry place, and have your umbrella handy.)

May Speece, Bucklin, Mo.: "I neglected sending in my report because I have been visiting, but I never forgot one of the rules while I was away. I visited my aunt and cousins, who live in Marceline, three whole weeks. Saturday morning I drove from home to Bucklin, about 7 miles, and took train for Marceline. It was the last day of the street fair, so of course there was a large crowd." (How did you enjoy the Snake-eater? I suppose he was there.) "Not being acquainted with the place or people, I was feeling quite lost, when I happened to see Josie Lineberry. Then I was all right and had a fine time. There was a merry-go-round, a Ferris wheel, weak lemonade, cheap candy (I mean cheap in quality) and soda-pop. Four of us wanted to ride in the Ferris wheel, but Josie was afraid and wouldn't let us. She is a big coward, but don't tell her that I said so. (All right, I won't.) "I would never have told this, but I was talking to her over the 'phone to-day and she said she put something in her letter about me, so I have to get even. Well, we got away from Josie, and got on the wheel when she didn't know it. You see, one of the four was her brother, and two her cousins, and somehow she thinks she is my 'boss'. The first time I went around I felt like I wished I was off, but, after several times, I enjoyed it. Afterwards we rode the merry-go-round, but the day was very warm and the streets dusty, and I was glad at eleven to go home with my cousin. While in Marceline, some young people went fishing. We took our dinner and went in a big wagon. We had bread, pie and cake, and took lard and several skillets to cook the fish in, but I am sorry to say we brought back not only the skillets, but the lard. But we had some roasting ears; we made up a fire and cooked them. I might tell how we got those ears, but I'm afraid the owner of a certain corn-field in Yellow Creek bottom might read this. We enjoyed the trip, though we caught no fish. The boys had their shotguns, but the only thing they hit was a jay-bird, which they used for bait. I would like to visit Bertha Beesley's school. I am not going to teach this year. I think old gold and blue will be pretty society colors. My college colors were royal purple and old gold; my high school colors, pink and old gold. My favorite quotation is from Sumner: 'The true grandeur of humanity is in its moral elevation, sustained, enlightened and decorated by the intellect of man.' But I must not take up all our page. I am going to write every month after this." (A good resolution. Now let's hear what Josie Lineberry has to say.)

Evelyn Hord, Grayson, Mo.: "I wish to join the Av. S., and would have written sooner, but simply have not had time. I have kept the rules one quarter, and send my report. If I send postage, will you return my report after looking it over?" (I will, and I don't blame you for wanting to keep it, for it is very complete and neat, and shows much extra work.) "I did not find the rules very hard, for I was in the habit of reading and memorizing some Bible verses and poetry every day. I've only read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST this summer, so I have never read any of your stories. My sister Grace is a member of the Av. S., too. She and I keep house for our younger brothers. We are in the midst of putting up fruit. It keeps us pretty busy. I am anxious to know the society colors." (Old gold and blue.) "If I had written in time I should have voted for old gold and royal purple. My brother is ready to go to town, so I will let him mail this." (Evelyn tells why her brother was going to town, but I will not repeat it, as it might excite longings in other breasts. I hope the elephant was big and the trapeze swung high.)

A lady, who doesn't want her name given, Berrytown, Ill.: "I have been reading in close sympathy with the Av. S. ever since it was begun. It is a very important feature of our best paper, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Young minds by it are directed into the healthiest channels of culture and moral habits. It is a noble and glorious work. I pray our Father's blessings on the dear members of the Av. S." Plattsburg, Mo.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free.
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

Current Events

In despair of controlling the approaching municipal election by the usual means, Tammany is attempting a manœuvre which has been tried before with some success. The Citizens' Union, the sole object of which is to support the reform administration and fight Tammany, has nominated Seth Low to succeed himself as Mayor, E. M. Grout for Comptroller and C. V. Fornes for President of the Board of Aldermen. And now Tammany offers to Grout and Fornes the Democratic nomination for the offices to which they have been respectively nominated by the Citizens' Union. This remarkable procedure is not, indeed, without precedent, but such precedents as there are indicate that the election of Grout and Fornes on these terms would be equivalent to a Tammany victory. So great is the indignation of the Citizens' Union that it would doubtless recall its nomination if possible. Mr. Grout vehemently, though we cannot say strongly, defends his plan of appearing simultaneously as Tammany and anti-Tammany candidate. His arguments are very convincing in the other direction. He has already begun to assume an apologetic attitude toward Tammany, as evidenced by this sentence from a letter to Mr. Cutting: "This election cannot be won by calling Tammany Hall hard names, nor by harping upon the sins of men who two years ago were active in that organization, but are now gone." Mr. Grout cannot persuade the public that Mr. Croker as a scape-goat carried all of Tammany's sins into the wilderness when he moved to England. Tammany is still there, and it is the same old Tammany—a corporation of graft, a society for the promotion of municipal plunder, an institution whose perpetuity is not dependent upon the piratical genius of any leader, but which is capable of surviving many defeats and raising up leaders as it needs them. Reform movements are generally short-winded, but organized corruption is patient and knows how to wait for a storm of virtue to blow over. Tammany is assuming that its misdeeds of only two years ago have all been forgiven and forgotten, and that its nomination of two Citizens' Union candidates will prove it to be an association of high-minded reformers.

A good deal of unnecessary talk has been wasted on the case of Mr. Miller, who was discharged from the government printing office for no other specified reason than that he did not belong to the union, and was restored to his position by the President because non-membership in a union was not a valid or lawful ground for dismissal. In the first place a mistake was made in alleging non-membership in the union as the reason for dismissing him, for it has since appeared that there were other reasons quite ample to justify his dismissal. Moreover, while the President did exactly right in reinstating a man against whom no charge had been preferred except non-unionism, we are inclined to think that he has taken the matter altogether too seriously, and has been too anxious to defend his course. His request for a conference with John Mitchell, Samuel Gompers and some of the other labor leaders aroused an expectation that he would propose some sort of compromise. But in reality he had nothing to say except to reiterate the former decision and support it with argument. In truth the President's decision needs no defense. It is not an attack upon unionism, and the union leaders realize that it is not. Of course they would be overjoyed to have the federal government recognize them, but they have no reason to expect it and no reason to cherish feelings of animosity toward an administration which declines to do so. The fate of Mr. Miller personally is of no interest to the public. If he is an incompetent man, no one wants to see him restored to spite the union. The President has simply reiterated the principle which has always controlled the relation of the government to the unions, and individual cases will be left to the routine of the department for settlement. It is not a matter out of which the least political capital can legitimately be made.

The Miller Case.

There has been a slight rally from the general depression of the past few weeks, and there are reasons to believe that the stringency of the money market which has been rather exceptional even for this season of the year will be somewhat relaxed. For weeks there has been a constant downward tendency in the price of stocks on the exchange, the most notable item being the decline in United States steel. The common stock of that gi-gantic corporation sank as low as 15 (the par value being 100), although the company has never yet failed to pay its regular quarterly dividend of one and one-fourth per cent. At the present market price of steel stock and the present rate of dividend, the stock pays about 30 per cent annually on the investment—which is the best possible evidence that the financial world considers it shaky. Financiers profess to be greatly mystified at the marked decrease in values and explain it only on the hypothesis of what they call a "selling fever." This is really no explanation. A fever is an unhealthy condition, and we may be assured that there would not be a fever in the financial world if there were not some abnormal condition back of it. Perhaps the real cause is a growing opinion that corporations whose stock is mostly water and which have succeeded in floating bonds to an amount exceeding the actual value of their assets, cannot remain permanently on a dividend-paying basis. The paradox of the situation is that earnings are increasing while market-values are decreasing. The average price of sixty leading railway stocks at the end of September was $34 less than at the same time last year, while railway earnings for the month showed an increase of 8 per cent over the same month last year and 19 per cent over September, 1901.

The troubles of Wall Street, however, are not giving serious concern to the country at large. There has been no break in the prosperity of the middle states and the west, general business conditions continue good, and the shortage of money is not creating any considerable embarrassment.

That a man who practices blackmail upon a corporation does no harm to the people and that the manipulator of a corner confers a great benefit upon the producer by raising prices—these are two fallacies which are often repeated and both of which have recently been illustrated. Sam Parks, of New York, walking delegate and dealer in strikes, has been convicted by the courts of practicing blackmail by extorting money from corporations under threat of ordering a strike if it was not paid. The saner labor leaders have taken the attitude toward Parks which honorable men would be expected to take toward a convicted criminal, but many of the less intelligent look upon his crime with complaisance because its immediate victim was a corporation. But the corporations are not the only, or even the greatest, sufferers from such acts. Corporations have a way of passing on such blows and making the public ultimately bear the brunt of them. Moreover, every such act, if its perpetrator be a union man, casts a shadow over the union and does more harm to it than to the corporation.

An illustration of the other fallacy is found in the case of W. P. Brown and his corner in September cotton. There was a shortage in the supply available for September delivery and the corner was skillfully manipulated. When the shorts began to find that there was not enough cotton on the market to meet their contracts for September delivery to Mr. Brown and his collaborators, there was a wild scramble and the price shot up just as manipulators of the corner wished it to. And now we hear it said that, while it is hard on the shorts, it is a fine thing for the cotton raisers. In reality the producers will get very little benefit. The high price was an artificial and momentary phenomenon. Most of the cotton which was sold at the high figure passed out of the hands of the producer many days before. If the price were maintained for a month the producers would have time to benefit by it; but as it is, Brown is the winner (to the extent of $8,000,000, it is said) the shorts are the losers, and the country at large has very little interest in the matter one way or another.

Another financial bubble of glittering promise but insufficient substance, has burst. The Consolidated Lake Superior Company at Canadian Sault Ste. Marie has failed and the city is full of rioting employes who are threatening all sorts of vengeance and violence because they cannot collect the wages that are due them. The company was the creation of Francis H. Clergue, who persuaded capitalists to invest $30,000,000 in an attempt to establish the greatest mining and manufacturing plant in the world where it would have the advantage of cheap power from the falls of the Soo. The company was capitalized at $117,000,000, or about four times the actual investment. For a time it cut a large figure in the financial world. Then obligations began to mature and there were no funds to meet them. The crash was prompt and complete. The only question now is how to pacify the workmen who are terrorizing the city and demanding wages from an empty treasury.

Although Mr. Chamberlain and other members of the British cabinet resigned because they were in favor of a protective tariff and could not bring the cabinet as a whole to their way of thinking, it appears that there is less divergence of opinion between Mr. Balfour and Mr. Chamberlain than might have been inferred. On the evening of Oct. 1, Premier Balfour delivered a speech at Sheffield which is considered the opening gun of the campaign for fiscal reform. The great and sudden prominence of this question, said Mr. Balfour, cannot be accounted for by the advocacy of any one man, but is "a phenomenon unparalleled in the experience of any man I am now addressing." From all quarters simultaneously there has come a demand for tariff reform. Cobden was right in his day, and the reforms of 1846 were necessary then, but the developments of the last half century have "made free trade an empty name and a vain force." While Mr. Chamberlain emphasizes the necessity of a protective tariff as a means of binding the scattered members of the empire together in a commercial unity, Mr. Balfour's thought is rather of a tariff which can be used for purposes of retaliation against countries which levy a duty upon English products. He asks only that the government be given authority to make tariff regulations so that when it makes commercial treaties it will have some inducement to offer. As it is Great Britain offers the freedom of her trade to all alike and is dependent upon the neighbors, or generosity of her neighbors, for corresponding privileges in return. What the Premier asks is "that the people of this country should give to its government that freedom of negotiation of which we have been deprived, not by force of circumstances or by pressure of foreign powers, but by something I can only describe as our own pedantry and self-conceit." He does not hesitate to accept the responsibility for changing the ancient customs. When asked, "Do you desire to reverse and alter the fundamental fiscal tradition which has prevailed for two generations?" my answer is, 'Yes, I do.' He utterly throws to the wind the doctrine of taxation for revenue only and proclaims a policy of tariff for the protection of British industries. It will be a great fight, and Mr. Chamberlain's prediction is that the government will lose in the first skirmish and the Balfour cabinet will fail, but that a second election will bring back the conservative party into power with a full acceptance of its fiscal program.

Again we call attention to a statement of facts regarding the situation in Jamaica and the need of immediate relief. It is not a question simply of building churches and supporting preachers, but of feeding the hungry and clothing the naked. Many of those who lost everything in the recent tornado are our brethren, and those who are not our brethren in the faith are brothers in common humanity and are just as greatly in need of help. Read carefully the following statement of facts, and pay especial attention to the last paragraph:

Letters from the island of Jamaica bring tidings of suffering. The simple people look upon the storm as an expression of the wrath of God. They come to him confessing sins and praying for deliverance. One old deacon in his prayer said, after confessing sin: "But, Lord, we have little children to feed and no bread to give them." That is one of the saddest wails which can go up to God. Little children to feed and no bread to give them!

Letters come to G. D. Purdy (Brother Purdy is one of our missionaries on the island who, before the storm, had returned to the United States) telling of the efforts of the people to put up temporary shelter, and booths in which to worship. The missionaries there plead with him to get them aid so they can relieve the present state of suffering.

I read one letter from the island in which a native preacher tells of his visits to his flocks, and his story runs like this: "James —, house down, horse killed, bananas all down, yams down, cocoanut trees down, dishes broken, clothes gone, bedding gone and fifteen mouths to feed." And so he describes each man's losses, and each account ends with the number of mouths to feed; sometimes as low as five, and sometimes reaching fifteen.

Under date of Sept. 17, C. E. Randall, after speaking of the general situation, says: "Some of the American Relief Fund is being used to supply the most destitute—imported food stuffs being supplied. But the help is small. I saw a man and his wife to-day, the man a cripple, the wife sickly and all their provision gone. They applied for aid. One dollar was all that could be given them. You know something of how the people depend on their own provision. Well, the breadfruits—so helpful—are almost all blown down; fruit trees down or stripped, cocoanut trees down—in the parishes which have suffered most—from 10 to 60 per cent cocoa (chocolate) blown down, and bananas and plantains entirely gone. In some districts even ground provisions, yam, cocoa, etc., washed out. Many of the people have been living on the half-ripe fruits, etc., that were blown down. As these are getting used up they say, 'What to eat now we don't know.' I fear the little children and aged will fare badly. I saw some of the former to-day—little things from 6 to 10 years old—carrying stones on their heads to mend the road, trying in this way to earn a few pence to make a living. If some who want to help in this time of need and suffering, besides giving to restore the chapels, would give something especially so that each minister might have a fund to feed the hungry, it would be a Christ-like thing."

Each letter written to G. D. Purdy pleads with him to stay in America and plead for them—not to build homes or chapels, but to send them something to feed the hungry. Of course our missionaries will spend their last dollar to keep starvation from those committed to their care, but we all know how little these have for themselves. Are we willing that they make all the sacrifice? Are we willing that our missionaries should hear the cry of little children for bread and not be able to feed them? Of course we are not. At the New York convention, only 80 delegates present, Jamaica suffering was presented and a collection called for, and some of the people arose and came forward to meet the contribution boxes. Over $100 was realized. The addresses of this convention abounded in spirituality and were received joyfully.

All that is needed to have a grand relief fund for Jamaica—is to have the facts presented. Will the pastors of our churches see that this is done? Two hundred and fifty dollars has been sent to C. E. Randall, superintendent of our missions in Jamaica, but this is only the drop in the bucket. We must have thousands of dollars in this relief fund. And by each church in our land sending an offering this will be easily accomplished.

A Peril and an Opportunity.

In an Easy Chair paragraph last week we spoke of the World's Fair, next year, in this city, as both a peril and an opportunity. It is not meant, of course, that the Fair itself is a peril, but that it will be the occasion of a peril, in that it will draw together immense numbers of people, many of whom will gather here for base and unworthy purposes. The evil that is already in the city will be re-inforced by evil from abroad, and all the agencies of the devil for making money, at no matter what cost to character and to good morals, will be running on full time, day and night. This is the peril.

But the World's Fair is also a great opportunity. The very fact of the presence of evil in an aggravated and intense form, gives the church an opportunity of showing its ability to combat it. Jesus Christ came to "destroy the works of the devil." If the church of to-day does not have the same mission, it is not the church of Christ. It is the program of Jesus to "destroy the works of the devil" through the co-operation of those who have caught his aim and his spirit. It is a very feeble and emasculated type of Christianity that is ready to fold its hands and say, "We can do nothing to cope with these great powers of evil that will inundate the city during the World's Fair." Jesus Christ expects that his church, that is to say, his people in St. Louis and elsewhere, will see to it that the forces of truth and righteousness are brought to bear against the opposing forces of darkness.

There is a constant tendency in the church to overestimate the strength of wickedness and underestimate the essential power of truth and righteousness. What we need to realize is that in our efforts to overthrow the evil and to save men from the power of sin, we have pledged to us the divine power and all the resources of heaven. If the Church is weak, it is weak in its faith, that is, in the power to avail itself of the infinite resources that are put at its disposal in carrying forward the kingdom of God. The Church needs more courage in order to front the iniquities of our time, and to make an aggressive campaign against entrenched evils, under the leadership of our great Captain.

The gathering of multitudes of people from all parts of our own country and from other lands presents just such an opportunity as the Church might well covet for disseminating the great message which Christ has committed to it to carry to all the world. In any event, whether we covet such an opportunity or not, God has given it to us and we will be held responsible for a proper use of it. If evangelists with tongues of fire tell the story of the cross during the great exposition, many thousands will hear it, and many will be won to personal allegiance to Christ. The printing press, too, should supplement the work of evangelism, scattering tracts, leaflets, pamphlets, presenting the claims of Jesus Christ as supreme in their urgency and importance. This work will require organization, and as far as possible should have the united co-operation of all the followers of Christ.

Nor let any one suppose that this is a matter of local concern for the churches in St. Louis alone. Such a work as we have suggested will doubtless result in reaching and saving many a wayward boy and girl from elsewhere, who may be caught in the snare of Satan during their visit in the city. The problem is larger than the city, or even the nation. It is a world-wide problem. It would be entirely unfair and unreasonable to expect the churches in this city, unaided by their sister churches from abroad, to meet the demands of this great emergency that is upon us. The brethren here realize their responsibility and are facing the magnitude of the peril and of the opportunity which the World's Fair brings. But they realize their utter helplessness to cope with the situation adequately without the sympathy and support of the entire brotherhood. This is true, we are sure, of the churches which the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST represents, and we believe it is equally true of all other churches. The churches of the Reformation have a duty and a responsibility, in connection with this great gathering of the tribes and peoples of earth, which they must seek to meet with the faith and the courage worthy of the great cause which they represent.

Religion in the Home.

It is generally understood and appreciated by thoughtful people, that the Christian home lies at the foundation of all that is best in our civilization. In considering the forces which make for righteousness, which contribute to the strength and permanency of our government and our free institutions, and which build up the church and the kingdom of God, a leading place must be given to the home. But it is self-evident that the home is potent in promoting these high ends just in proportion as it is dominated by Christian principles and pervaded by the Christian atmosphere. It is for this reason that the men of clearest vision and of widest outlook, who have most at heart the future welfare of both church and state, are deeply concerned on the subject of religion in the home. This was one of the problems that received the most earnest consideration during the Religious Education Convention which convened in Chicago last spring. It is a subject of growing and of pressing importance.

There is a growing feeling, too, among the keenest and widest observers of the times, that the home is being imperiled in many ways and by diverse foes. The exactions of our industrial life, the massing of people in the cities and the crowding of them together in flats and tenements, the demands of fashionable society, the multiplication of clubs of various kinds—all these invade the quietness and sanctity of the home and tend to destroy family life as it was lived a generation or so ago. We need not speak here at length of the grosser evils of the saloon, the brothel and the gambling hell, as a trinity of diabolical agencies which tend to destroy all that is sweetest and purest and best in the home. When one stops to consider the number and magnitude of evil forces which are arrayed against the home and those influences for which the home stands, he may well tremble for the future of our Christian civilization.

But it will not do to stand idly by and contemplate with philosophic composure the ravages which these foes of domestic life are making in our homes. It is well to look the facts in the face, and then, if we are friends of humanity, and especially if we be followers of Jesus Christ, ask ourselves what can be done to neutralize these adverse influences and keep the fountain of life in our homes pure and sweet. The one thing that is immediately practicable on the part of all Christians is to devise some plan by which religion may have a chance to exert its sanctifying influence in our homes. It has been too generally crowded out by the demands of business or society, and we are suffering the inevitable consequences. Children are growing up in worldliness, and fall under the power of Satan, and either come to speedy ruin or live lives utterly devoid of the uplifting power of Christian faith. To neglect religion in the home is either to be blind to the inevitable relation between cause and effect, or to be wholly indifferent to the moral and spiritual welfare of one's own family.

So fixed and so general has become this habit of neglecting religion in the home, that it is going to require line upon line, precept upon precept, sermon upon sermon, exhortation upon exhortation, and editorial upon editorial, to bring about the needed reformation in this respect. But in view of the vast issues involved we have, after much careful thought, determined to make an effort to bring about a better state of things, as far as possible in our own brotherhood, and as far as the influence of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST may extend. We will need in this effort the earnest co-operation of all who sympathize with the end we have in view, and we are sure this includes all the godly men and women in our ranks. There is not going to be any sudden revolution in the habits of our home-life, but it is hoped that by calling repeated attention to this subject, many who have allowed the family altar to fall into decay will rear it again and kindle upon it once more the flame of pure devotion, and that their example will gradually become contagious, until the Christian home without its daily worship will be the exception and not the rule.

In other articles we shall give more specific suggestions on the subject herein treated, and outline our method of assisting the ministers and others interested in securing more religious instruction and religious worship in our homes. Meantime we commend this subject to the earnest consideration of the brethren and will be grateful for any suggestions which they may be able to make toward a consummation so devoutly to be wished for.

Editor's Easy Chair.

A dull, gray Sunday, skies veiled with clouds, with a few drops of rain on the side-walk, like the tears of angels shed for a sinning world. What is the effect of such a day on the religion of the average church member? There was a reduction of perhaps fifty per cent in the church attendance and of twenty-five in the Sunday-school. What is the spiritual significance of a fact like that? The more one ponders that question the more he will be impressed with the superficial character of much of our religious profession, and the feeble, precarious spiritual life of the average church member. You have noticed, frequently, a weak stream of water issuing from an almost dried-up fountain, moving hesitatingly in one direction, and, finding a small obstacle in its way, changing its course, following the path of least resistance in its devious way, until it is lost, getting nowhere and accomplishing nothing. How many people have a religious life like that—weak, hesitating, easily turned aside from its course, lacking volume, depth, momentum and definite destination! A rainy day, or even a day that threatens rain, a warm day, or a cold day, a Sunday caller, a slight headache, or any little obstacle of that kind is allowed to turn them away from the Lord's house, the Lord's table and the Lord's people! What does our divine Lord, who allowed not the bloody cross to swerve him from his purpose to honor God and save men, think of all this? No doubt his great heart is profoundly grieved at such religious indifference.

Physicians tell us that any one whose vitality is low, is an easy victim for the various germs of disease that may be floating around in the air or in the water. A healthy, robust physical life throws off these germs, but one with weak vital power becomes a ready prey for these prowling bacilli, that go noiselessly about, seeking whom they may devour. This is equally true in the spiritual realm. It is a case of "natural law in the spiritual world." Your strong, virile, believing, praying, active workers in the church are not afflicted with the new religious diseases that are becoming epidemic in the church. There are the bacteria of "Christian Science," "Theosophy," "Holiness" of the abnormal and injurious type, "Divine Healing," "Magnetic Healing," and we know not how many other fads that have attacked a large number of our church members. Their low state of spiritual vitality invites and welcomes these religious germs. Some of these modern substitutes for Christianity, perhaps all of them, contain some elements of Christ's teaching, which their advocates wholly neglected, as a part of Christianity, when they were nominal church members, but which they enthusiastically accept as "Christian Science," "Divine Healing," etc. The remedy for these religious ailments is a fuller, richer, profounder spiritual life in the church which will enable its members to resist all these bacterial foes.

One law of hygiene is to associate with healthy people. We know of some once popular health resorts which have lost much of their benefits from the fact that so many invalids resort thither. One who goes to these places must eat, walk and associate with sick people, which is a drawback. The same law holds in spiritual ailments, such as weak faith, lack of appetite for spiritual food, feeble circulation of religious ideas, worldly-mindedness, short-sightedness, etc. Segregation is not good for those thus afflicted. They should scatter and seek association with those who have strong faith and deep religious enthusiasm. Next week there will assemble in Detroit thousands of the most earnest, active consecrated Christian workers in all our ranks. They meet there to consider the great problem of extending Christ's kingdom in this and in all lands, and to hear reports of the progress of this good work. The air will be electric with religious enthusiasm. The germs of New Testament Christianity will be thick in all the air you breathe, in all the food you eat, and in all the water you drink. Go and catch it! Then go home and give it to your neighbors. Christianity is contagious when it is positive, aggressive and apostolic. Fortunately, the spurious, hybrid, emasculated type is not very self-propagating.

Here are a few simple rules for delegates, the propriety of which will be doubted only by those who most need them: Be satisfied with your portion, no matter what it is. It is only for a week. Plain living, high thinking and earnest praying make the best conventions. Don't grumble at the weather, the crowded street cars, or even at dull speeches, if there should be such, which is not likely. Keep sweet. Try to make everybody have a good time. Attend the sessions of the conventions. We have known delegates to stay out-doors visiting, during the convention hours, thinking to absorb through the brick walls the proceedings within. It has never proved successful. Listen attentively to the speakers, but do not applaud funeral notices, doxologies and benedictions! In other words, applaud discriminatingly. Stay until the close of the convention, even if you miss a $5 wedding fee. If you are assigned committee duty, give it your best thought and attention. Well-digested committee reports save much discussion. In speaking, "let your moderation be known to all men." The Easy Chair hopes for and expects a most religious, joyous and profitable convention.

Questions and Answers.

What proof have you from the Bible that the Hebrews were in bondage in Egypt only about 215 years, instead of 430 years (Ex. 12:40, 41), or in round numbers 400, as stated in Gen. 15:13? E. S. W.

The best chronological authorities, taking full account of all the biblical statements, make the period of 430 years to include all the time from the call of Abraham B. C. 2085, to the Exodus, B. C. 1625. Sir Robert Anderson, K. C. B., LL. D., author of "The Bible and Modern Criticism," gives the following interesting chronological table as based on the investigations of our greatest chronologist, Fynes Clinton:

B. C.
4141	Adam—the Creation—1656 years	} 2086 years
2485	Noah—the Flood—430
2085	Abraham—the Covenant—430 years	} 2086 yrs.
1625	Moses—the Law—1656
A. D. 32	Christ—the Crucifixion.

The author quoted above thinks that "to dismiss these results as accidental is absurd."

Please explain John 6:70, 71; also John 13:26, 27, which have bothered me much, and oblige one who loves the truth. A SISTER.

The first of these passages reports the words of Jesus: "Did not I choose you the twelve, and one of you is a devil?" The other is John's comment on Judas, after Jesus had given him the sop. "And after the sop then entered Satan into him." The word devil means adversary, and is once applied to Simon Peter when that disciple rebuked Jesus for his announcement of his approaching betrayal and death, saying, "This shall never be unto thee." Peter put himself athwart Christ's purposes, and the Master said, "Get thee behind me, Satan." It was in this sense, though to an even greater degree, that Judas became "a devil." The last passage means that the Satanic purpose of Judas was fully formed when Jesus marked him out as his betrayer, and he went to work at once to carry out his hellish plot. The passages teach that any of us may become Satanic by betraying Christ or obstructing the progress of his kingdom.

I see you are wisely laying great emphasis upon the proper use of wealth. As one called to teach and advise men having abundance of this world's goods, I would like to know what cause or causes you regard as in the greatest need of assistance just now. PREACHER.

Our colleges, and particularly our Bible Colleges, have the most urgent needs, at present. Rather, we should say the most urgent need of our churches and of the cause we plead, is a larger number of educated and Bible-trained minister of the Word. The schools that are doing and are proposing to do this work have the most urgent claims upon our liberality at the present time. In Missouri there are our Bible College at Columbia and Christian University. In Kentucky it is the Bible College of Kentucky University. The endowment of a McGarvey Bible Chair is a movement that deserves speedy success. Hiram, Bethany, Drake, Eureka College, Texas Christian University, and others all need and are worthy of increased endowment.

Notes and Comments.

The story has been often told of the cavalry officer who, with a small group of comrades, was being pursued by a large mounted force. Every moment might mean life or death. He felt his saddle girth loosening and, while his companions called to him to ride faster, he deliberately stopped to tighten the buckle of the girth. Young men, who are tempted by the great need to plunge into the work of the ministry unprepared, remember this. You will, in the long run, save time and save souls by getting ready before you begin. The hosts of sin are pressing hard, but if your saddle girth is loose, stop and tighten it.

The London socialist, Robert Blatchford, is waging a newspaper war on Christianity. His modestly expressed purpose is to "annihilate the whole Christian system and wipe out all its ideas and practices." We have heard of such attempts before. The most remarkable thing about them is the ease with which they and their propagandists are forgotten. The professional fighter of Christianity may gain a little cheap and temporary notoriety, but his path leads to the quickest and deepest oblivion. "He that falleth on this stone shall be broken in pieces, but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder."

The papers tell us that the price of coal is taking another rise, and the reason assigned is that the operators and miners have agreed upon a higher rate of wages, and of course the consumers must pay it. It works that way in a great many industries, but it doesn't work that way with publishers of religious literature. Paper goes up, ink goes up, type goes up, machinery goes up and so do wages; but the price of the religious journal and Sunday-school supplies must remain the same. But we have this compensation: Patrons of religious papers have consciences which are supposed to make them prompt in meeting their dues, and energetic in pushing the circulation of the papers whose increased cost is at the expense of the publishers. But is this always the case?

We hope none of our readers failed to read the article of Dr. Amory H. Bradford, which we published last week, on "What Distinguishes Congregationalism." It is confirmatory of his remark that all religious bodies are growing so much alike that it is difficult to tell what distinguishes them, that of the four principles which he mentions as distinguishing Congregationalism, every one of them is held and receives emphasis by the churches of our own reformatory movement. There is, no doubt, difference between us and Congregationalists in the implications involved in the truth that the church is composed only of redeemed souls, but we are glad that there is agreement at least in the principle. Differing from us a little more in form than do our Baptist brethren, there is no body of Christians in the world that is nearer to us in spirit than our Congregational brethren. We are glad to give them a hearing in our columns through one of the ablest of their representative men.

The Advance of Chicago has changed editors. Rev. J. A. Adams, D.D., who for many years has contributed articles to the paper as "Grapho," succeeds Rev. Henry T. Sell as editor. In his introductory article to the readers of the Advance, the new editor says:

To that class of minds which find pleasure in roaming around in the realms of speculation, an unsettled condition of religious belief may appeal with special interest. But for the men and women who take religion seriously, who are facing the practical problems of life with heroic determination, who are trying to transform the world and transfigure human character, who are endeavoring to save the young and convert the evil, to build up churches and to conduct great missionary enterprises, there must be firm foundations, and sure ways, an authority which speaks to their own hearts and to the hearts of those to whom they appeal. We cannot bind the world to God with a rope of sand; nor can we grasp the ends of the earth with the nerveless hand of merely speculative theories.

There can be no question but that the religious journal which is to serve this age must go before the world with a positive, affirmative gospel, and not merely with a set of negations. It must stand squarely on the great verities of religion and be able to discriminate between these and the changing forms of popular opinion. These pass away and the fashion thereof changeth, but the Word of the Lord abides forever.

It is now time for the matter of representation of the churches at our National Convention at Detroit to receive final consideration. It is the special motto of the Detroit brethren that "A representative from every church" be secured at the National Convention. This, of course, cannot absolutely be realized, but it is a good ideal toward which to struggle. There will be many preachers who will greatly desire to meet with their brethren at Detroit, who feel unable to bear the expense of the journey. It would be a very Christian act and a first-class investment, as well, for the churches to send their preachers when they are unable to pay their own way. They will get it back many fold. While we commend this matter to the churches, we have a word to say to the preachers: Let them emphasize the importance of the business men of the church attending these conventions, and try to secure one or more to go with them. All the indications point to a great convention, which it would be a calamity to miss. Plan to go, even at some sacrifice, and you will be more than compensated in the instruction and inspiration you will receive by coming in contact with the consecrated men and women who will be there, and who will speak upon the great subjects connected with the ongoing of the kingdom of God. A. E. Jennings, chairman of the committee, writes: "While we ask for 'A representative from every church,' we are barring none, but all will be welcome." Remember the time—Oct. 16-22.

Let Us Give Thanks.

We have already reported that the Foreign Missionary receipts have reached and passed the $200,000 mark. The following note from the Secretaries of the Home Society shows that it has made similar strides and has passed the $100,000 mark. Herein is reason for profound thanksgiving to our heavenly Father for the success he has granted to our efforts for the extension of his kingdom. We trust that the suggestion for public thanksgiving in the churches on Lord's day, Oct. 11, will be universally observed, and that the divine blessing be invoked upon our Detroit Convention:

"The receipts of the American Christian Missionary Society for the year closing Sept. 30, 1903, reached $102,246.10. We are going to the Detroit Convention with the best report in our history, not only in money raised, but in work accomplished. This is a cause for devout thanksgiving to God.

"We ask our brethren everywhere that on Lord's day, Oct. 11, thanksgiving be made in the churches to our Lord for his help in this great work."

BENJAMIN L. SMITH, } Secretaries.
GEORGE B. RANSHAW, }
Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O.

With such tokens of the divine blessing upon our labors in the year past, as the various reports to be made at Detroit will show, it would be strange if the Convention were not marked by deep enthusiasm and by plans for still greater expansion.

Child Labor and Pauperism

By Jane Addams

Hull House, Chicago.

Each age has its own peculiar industrial temptations. When we ask why it is that child labor has been given to us to discuss and to rectify rather than to the people who lived before us, we need only remember that for the first time in industrial history the labor of the little child has in many industries become as valuable as that of a man or woman. The old-fashioned weaver was obliged to possess skill and enough strength to pull his beam back and forth. With the invention of machinery the need of skill has been eliminated from many processes, and with the application of steam and electricity, strength has also been largely eliminated, so that a little child may mend the thread in a textile mill almost as well and, in some respects, better than a strong and clumsy adult. This is true of many other industries, until it has come about that we are tempted, as never before, to use the labor of little children and that the temptation to exploit premature labor is peculiar to this industrial epoch.

It is always difficult to see the wrong in a familiar thing, and it is a test of moral insight to be able to see that an affair of familiar intercourse and daily living may also be wrong. I have taken a Chicago street car on a winter's night in December at ten o'clock when dozens of little girls who have worked in the department stores all day are also boarding the cars. I know, as many others do, that these children will not get into their beds much before midnight, and that they will have to be up again early in the morning to go to their daily work. And yet I take my car almost placidly—I am happy to say not quite placidly—because I have seen it many times. Almost every day at six o'clock I see certain factories pouring out a stream of men and women and boys and girls. The boys and girls have a peculiar hue, a color so distinctive that anyone meeting them on the street, even on Sunday in their best clothes and mixed up with other children who go to school and play out of doors, can distinguish almost in an instant the children working in factories. There is also on their faces a something indescribable, a premature anxiety and sense of responsibility which we should declare pathetic if we were not used to it.

How far are we responsible when we allow custom to blind our eyes to the things that are wrong, and what excuses do we make for ourselves? The sentimental excuse is the one we use most frequently in the north. It is said that the labor of these little children is needed for the support of widowed mothers. Some of us are sure that the "widowed mother" argument has been seriously overworked. In every community there can only be a certain number of widowed mothers, unless some plague has carried off the men in the prime of life. Out of that number of widows, only another certain number will be absolutely impecunious, for if the community is prosperous, some of the workingmen, by benefit societies and insurance, will have made some little provision for their families. Out of that certain number of impecunious widows, only a few will have children between the ages of ten and fourteen, in which short space of time the temptation to the premature use of children's labor always lies.

In a certain manufacturing town it was discovered that 3,600 children on the school census roll were not to be found in the schools. We have a much larger number than that in Chicago; according to our school census we lose 11,000 between the first and second grades. In this particular manufacturing town it was suggested that the children be looked up and the number of those who were supporting widowed mothers be verified. Out of the 3,600 children, it was found that 1,100 were legitimately out of the public schools, i. e., that they have moved out of the district, that they were ill, that they were attending private institutions, or that they were legally at work. That left 2,500 to be accounted for, and out of those it was found that exactly 66 were the children of widows. Out of the 66 only 23 were in any real sense contributing to the support of their mothers.

What connection do we find between child labor and pauperism? One of the first causes of pauperism is non-employment. Those who are first to lose their places in an industrial crisis are those who have never had sufficient training, and who curiously lack strength and vigor. In our municipal lodging-house in Chicago, it is surprising to find how many tramps are tired to death with monotonous labor and begin to tramp in order to get away from it. This inordinate desire to get away from work seems to be connected with the fact that the men have started to work very early, before they had the physique to stand up to it, or the mental vigor and the moral stamina which makes a man stick to his work whether he likes it or not.

Another cause of pauperism is illness. A potent cause of disease is due to the breaking down of the organs which were subjected to abnormal uses before they were ready to bear it. I recall a tailor for whom the residents of Hull House tried to get medical assistance. He died at the age of thirty-three, and his death certificate bore the record of "premature senility" due to the fact that he had run a sewing machine since he was six years old. No horse trainer would permit his colts to be so broken down.

Then we have the pauperizing effect of child labor on the parents. Many of our European immigrants resent the monotonous petty work of the factory, but their children become adapted to it, and you get the curious result of the parent of the household being more or less dependent upon the earnings of the child.

The pauperization of society itself is another serious charge. When an industry depends upon the labor of boys and girls, it takes them at a time when they ought to be at school. The wages paid to them are wages of mere subsistence. In almost all factories the work at which the children are employed leads to no trade. By the time they are old enough to receive adult wages they are often sick of the whole business. Such an industry is parasitic on the future of the community. We recall that when the recruiting officers went into the factory regions of the north of England, they found the bulk of the people below the standard in stature required in the English army. They were found specially dwarfed in that part of the country where the third generation recorded in their frames the effects of child labor.

The gravest charge I have to bring against child labor is that it pauperizes the consumers. If I wear a garment which has been made in a sweat shop or a garment for which the maker has not been paid a living wage I am in debt to the woman who made my cloak. I am a pauper and I permit myself to accept charity from the poorest people of the community. All that can be said against the parasitic character of sweating industries can be said against the parasitic character of child labor, with this difference that the latter robs the assets of the community.

We may trace a connection between child labor and pauperism, not only for the child and his own family, bringing on premature old age and laying aside able-bodied men and women in the noon-tide of their years; but also the grievous charge is true that it pauperizes the community itself. I should also add that it debauches our moral sentiment, it confuses our sense of values, so that we learn to think that a bale of cheap cotton is more to be prized than a child properly nourished, educated and prepared to take his place in life. Let us stand up to the obligations of our own age. Let us watch that we do not discount the future and cripple the next generation because we were too indolent, I was going to say because we were too dull, to see all that it involves, when we use the labor of little children.

My Twenty-Eighth Anniversary

By F. D. Power

I have had so many of them that it is hard to find any new thing to say or even a fresh text from which to say it. I had thought of using Second Kings 10:36, "And the time that Jehu reigned over Israel in Samaria was twenty and eight years," but I was admonished that there was no likeness between Jehu and myself. The son of Jehoshaphat, son of Nimshi, he was anointed king by Elisha, and he slew the children of Ahab and destroyed the worshipers of Baal, but he is known in history chiefly for his fast driving. When the watchman on the tower of Jezreel saw him coming, he said: "The driving is like the driving of Jehu, the son of Nimshi, for he driveth furiously." So we call every cabby "Jehu."

When a college student in my nineteenth year, I was accustomed to ride horseback forty miles to preach each Sunday—as far as from Washington to Baltimore—often breaking the way through the snow a foot or more in depth. On one of these trips the pair of horses we were driving took fright and ran away, throwing my companion and myself to the pike with severe injuries; and in the "bogus program" at commencement my initials were made to spell out "Fast Driver Power." This was the only time I was ever compared with Jehu.

It could not be said, I am sure, that I have "reigned over Israel twenty and eight years." This I have never been able to do even in my own household. Rather have I been reigned over. After twenty-eight years, however, I would not pose as a much-abused man. It has been a gentle government.

Twenty-eight years is a happy period. Four sevens, four times the number of perfection, four times as good as seven years. It is a still higher and holier one to be allowed to preach it in Washington and to the people that gather in the Vermont Avenue Church. It never occurred to me when, a slender youth, crude and inexperienced, I spoke twenty-eight years ago in the little chapel to the thin and perspiring group of people that patiently and kindly greeted me, that I should be here to-day. For one year I had been called and at the end of one year I thought it likely I should move on. It is a long story of patience and long suffering, of gentleness and kindness, of steadfastness and heroic endeavor that need not be repeated to-day. It has but one element of sadness—only one—and that the missing faces now. And yet this, too, is a matter of rejoicing, of congratulation, when I think of their eternal victory. The preacher is nothing. As John said of himself, "I am a voice crying." The voice is but a passing voice. What the voice says is something. What the voice may produce in others; what the result may be in men, women and children fitted by the gospel message for the Father's business here and the Father's presence hereafter—this is everything.

I took the old word of Paul to the Corinthians in the Resurrection chapter, 1 Cor. 15:1-4. I showed what the gospel is and what the gospel does. It is a great lesson full of perennial interest and inspiration. The cross is the measure of God's love to us and the measure of the meaning of man's existence. In the love which it embodies, the righteousness which it exhibits, the truth which it proclaims, the reconciliation which it publishes, the healing which it brings—the cross, the crucified—this is the heart of the gospel, the crown of the gospel, the power of the gospel which attracts, quickens, saves, purifies, justifies, brings home to God. By nothing easier He sought us, by nothing less He saved us. No gospel is complete without the doctrine of the atonement. Redemption, reconciliation, propitiation are the great words of the New Testament. "Jesus and the Resurrection" is the great theme.

For eight and twenty years I have sought to preach this gospel here at the nation's capital. Poorly it has been done, but conscientiously and faithfully I have sought to make this my message. In all these years we have lived together without a ruffle, without a jar. Often I have felt I had fallen into ruts and under other leadership the work might make greater progress. Many times I have feared my voice had been dulled by long familiarity with its tones. I have had a patient people to deal with, true friends and brethren. And the work has gone forward. The little church of one hundred and fifty souls, of whom less than one-tenth remain with us, has grown into more than six hundred, and has three times swarmed until we number in the city more than two thousand; and three new centers of spiritual life are opening. The past year fifty-seven have been added to the mother church, and over $6,000 has been raised, $1,500 of which was for missions. We have had our losses. Some have been promoted to higher things. But are not these lessons sent from God to teach greater faithfulness, richer consecration, larger liberality, loftier hope, higher faith, more heroic endeavor? Do the older workers pass? Their children and children's children must take up the work which they laid down. We are to rejoice in the fruit of their labors and go forward, building upon their foundations even nobler things. We are to have our doors all opening outward, out of self, out of smallness, out of narrowness, out of all wrong, and go, as our Master taught us, go about doing good, go forth bearing precious seed, go out into the highways and hedges, go into all the world; and so shall we go from strength to strength till every one in Zion shall appear before God.

Twenty-eight years! Well, that means we have reached a point where we must be busy. "He only is advancing in life," says Ruskin, "whose heart is getting softer, whose blood is getting warmer, whose brain is getting quicker, whose spirit is entering into a living peace; and the men who have this life in them are the true lords and kings of the earth, they, and they alone."

"Oft am I by woman told,
Poor Anacreon! thou growest old;
See, thy hairs are falling all;
Poor Anacreon! how they fall!
Whether I grow old or no,
By these signs I may not know;
But this I need not to be told
'Tis time to LIVE if I grow old!"

ORIGIN

Of a Famous Human Food.

The story of great discoveries or inventions is always of interest.

An active brain worker who found himself hampered by lack of bodily strength and vigor and could not carry out the plans and enterprises he knew how to conduct, was led to study various foods and their effects upon the human system. In other words, before he could carry out his plans, he had to find a food that would carry him along and renew his physical and mental strength.

He knew that a food that was a brain and nerve builder, (rather than a mere fat-maker) was universally needed. He knew that meat with the average man does not accomplish the the desired results. He knew that soft gray substance in brain and nerve centres is made from Albumen and Phosphate of Potash obtained from food. Then he started to solve the problem.

Careful and extensive experiments evolved Grape-Nuts, the now famous food. Grape-Nuts contain the brain and nerve-building food elements in condition for easy digestion. The result of eating Grape-Nuts daily is easily seen in a marked sturdiness and activity of the brain and nervous system, making it a pleasure for one to carry on the daily duties without fatigue or exhaustion. The food is in no sense a stimulant, but is simply food which renews and replaces the daily waste of brain and nerves.

Its flavor is charming, and being fully and thoroughly cooked at the factory it is served instantly with cream.

The signature of the brain worker spoken of, C. W. Post, is to be seen on each genuine package of Grape-Nuts.

Distinctive Features of Presbyterianism

Presbyterianism defines primarily, a polity or form of church government. It is a government of the whole church by itself through chosen representatives, acting in accordance with the supreme law of Christ. As such, it stands between Episcopacy, or a prelatical form of government on the one side, and Independency or Congregationalism on the other. As distinguished from prelacy it denies the divine right of a certain class, known as bishops, to govern the church. It holds that Jesus Christ, the only and supreme Head of the Church, has established a government in it; but the powers of government are vested in the whole body of believers, and are to be exercised through their chosen representatives. In other words, the government of the Presbyterian Church is republican or democratic, as to form. It differs from Independency or Congregationalism in maintaining the unity of the church in the sense that the majority should govern; and that the local church instead of being independent, is related to all the churches, as a part is to the whole. For this reason, Presbyterianism establishes Presbyteries, Synods and General Assemblies for the better government and edification of the church. The decision of the court of last resort, when made in accordance with the word of God, is binding on all the churches.

The ultimate authority in Independency or Congregationalism is in the local church; in Presbyterianism the ultimate authority is in the council of the whole church, assembled through its representatives. In common with Congregationalists, Presbyterians maintain the parity of the ministry; that is, that all ministers are of one and the same order. In addition, it asserts the scriptural authority of ruling elders, the chosen and ordained representative of the people in the government of the church. It also has the scriptural office of deacon for the care of the poor. Although the name would indicate a radical difference, the fact is, that the Methodist Episcopal Church in its present form of government has no radical and essential difference from the Presbyterian. It has lay representation in its church courts; its bishops are so by virtue of office, and not because they belong to a separate order. They are simply superintendents, and Presbyterians do not object to such an office.

Again, Presbyterianism is distinguished by the fact that it does not insist upon form or ritual. It demands the widest liberty as to worship. It accepts baptism under any one of its three historic forms, immersion, effusion and sprinkling, though preferring the latter. It has a directory for public worship but it is one to be observed in the spirit, rather than in the exact letter.

By S. J. Niccolls, D. D.

*Pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church,
St. Louis*

A third and distinguishing feature of Presbyterianism is its doctrinal teaching. It has always, boldly and clearly, confessed the content of its faith before the world. It maintains a scriptural system of doctrine which is set forth in the Westminster Confession of Faith, and which is known historically as the Calvinistic or Reformed Faith. This Confession, while it represents what the church teaches, is not its supreme authority. That authority is the word of God alone. The Confession says, "The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament are the word of God, the only rule of faith and obedience." The Confession of Faith is only a creed formulated by the wisdom of man, and is not infallible. In accepting it, no one is bound to believe every statement in it. The formula of subscription to it, binds only to "the essential and necessary articles." These are first, those articles which are held in common by all evangelical Christians; and second, the following special doctrines: the fall of the race in Adam, the utter inability of any man to save himself, the free sovereign grace of God manifested in electing some to eternal life and in providing for their redemption in Jesus Christ, their effectual calling and regeneration by the Holy Spirit, and their perseverance in grace until their glorification. While the Presbyterian Church accentuates this doctrinal system, it does not regard its acceptance as a condition of membership in her fold. The only condition of church membership is a credible profession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Calvinists and Arminians are alike welcomed into the communion of the church. Its teachers alone are required to subscribe to the system of doctrine, and to teach what the church believes to be the truth of God's word. All this has made it pre-eminently a doctrinal church.

Again the Presbyterian Church, as is clearly manifested in its history, has been characterized by its love of liberty. By insisting upon the sovereignty of God, it has established the sacred rights of conscience, and the liberty and greatness of the individual. Its cherished faith lies at the foundation of our modern liberty, and its form of government represents our republicanism.

The Wreckage of Life

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

While resting on the shore of life's tempestuous sea,
I watched the sad adventurers
As home they came;
Some men of age there were, some youths in rosy bloom,
That ceased their fruitless search
For name and fame.

Said one, a grizzled sage, in answer to my word,
"You wish to know the story, then,
Of my life quest?
From youth's first budding thought I longed to know all truth,
And now, my venture vain,
I seek for rest."

Humbly another spake, a man of stately mould,
"For power I thirsted—power to make
Each man my slave;
But when I saw my goal lie just beyond my reach,
I fell, and homeward come
My life to save."

"My story's all to brief," spake one in sad reply,
"I dreamed that to my name should come

Most glorious fame;
But, though indeed the world did once
my glory sound,
I come to rest in peace.
Forgot my name."

Said one of tawny face, of hue like tarnished brass,
"I longed a mount for me to build
Of yellow gold;
All other men I spurned, save as they brought me wealth;
And now for me all men
Stern hatred hold."

As still I gazed, there stepped from off her storm-tossed bark
A woman sad of face, and she
Her story gave;
"For years my quest has been for beauty's gift supreme;
Defeated in my hope,
I seek my grave."

And still, upon the shore of life's
tempestuous sea,
I watched the sad adventurers
As home they seek;
Some men of age there are, some
youths in rosy bloom,
Who leave with saddened soul
Life's ocean bleak.

Teaching the Word.

By Charles E. Underwood.

In his final instruction, "teaching them (the nations) to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," Jesus put into the great commission a living power. Upon the infant church his disciples left the strong impress of Christian teaching. Even the Jewish high priest acknowledged that the apostles filled all Jerusalem with their doctrine. By the same sure methods Paul carried the gospel to the cultured Gentiles. To the Ephesian elders he said, "Ye yourselves know how that I shrink not from declaring unto you anything that was profitable; and teaching you publicly, and from house to house." He knew, too, that sound teaching would fortify the church against perils within and without. In the ripeness of experience he wrote to Timothy that the bishops must be apt to teach, and added: "The things which thou hast heard from me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also."

From lip to lip should echo the story of the love of Christ, until the whole world ring with praise, or reverently, silently bow in worship to the Prince of Peace. Everywhere should faithful men teach the beautiful symbolism of Christian baptism—death to sin, burial with Christ, resurrection from the watery grave to walk in newness of life. Everywhere should they teach the impressive memorial of Christ, wherein we "show forth the Lord's death till he come again." Everywhere the strong faith that "this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality." Everywhere that men consider "whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report."

When the first wave of missionary enthusiasm spent its force, Christian teaching began to decline. The author of the Hebrew letter laments bitterly that "when by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that some one teach you the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God." The next missionary wave lost some of its crystal purity. Soon the whole sea, though it still swept onward, gathered from its depths the dark deposits of ignorance and superstition.

Luther and Calvin and Wesley taught the word. But between that word and the people their followers erected the great wall of human creeds. Thomas and Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott and Barton W. Stone, men of clear vision, saw beyond this wall. These great preachers taught again "the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God." To-day, those who build upon the teaching of Christ and the apostles number more than a million and a quarter. For a world conquest God has given us the holy scriptures and a risen, glorified Redeemer.

Religion to-day tends to find its center and circumference in the church organization. We meet for public prayer, public preaching, and sometimes for public teaching. Often the only instruction the weak Christian receives he gets from the public service. When we make that public service a public entertainment, how soon will the babe in Christ be ready for the strong meat of the word? How soon will the soul, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, be filled? In our Lord's day schools we use methods that our public schools do not tolerate. If in two years the child knew as little about numbers as many a Sunday-school pupil of ten years' training knows of the Bible, he would be dismissed as a dolt. If the church is to oversee Christian instruction, let us preach Christ and teach the scriptures in a way that will impress Christians and convince sinners.

On the other hand, shall the public service bear the whole burden of Bible education? Peter and John and Paul taught in the homes of the people. Aquila and Priscilla in their own home expounded to Apollos the way of God more carefully. In our daily intercourse with men hundreds of opportunities arise for teaching the word. Yet on this subject our lips are sealed. Let them come to the service, we say. In our own homes the Bible gathers dust and the family altar crumbles. When those poor, starved, spiritual lives under our care snap the last cord that binds them to the church, who shall answer for the homicide? "Preach the word, be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching."

Face to Face.

By David H. Shields.

It is a cold heart that is not warmed and quickened by the narrative of the Jewish hosts making their pilgrimage to the great national gatherings at Jerusalem. As the farmer comes from his little narrow patch of ground in distant Dan, the shepherd from his lonely vigil in the hill country, and the wanderer returns from faraway lands, the enthusiasm and joy rise till on the last great day of the feast the assembled multitudes fill the vaulted skies with hosannas to God. And centuries of exile and persecutions have failed to erase the vision from the life of that farmer, that shepherd, and that wanderer. Having seen face to face his brother, his national leaders, the hosts of the Lord and the temple of his God, he went back to his farm, his flock, and his wanderings with a new force in life. Each one took up the humdrum duties of life with a lighter heart and greater courage, and the nation gained in unity and strength of purpose.

What these national gatherings did for the Jew, they will do for us, with the augmented force of a cosmopolitan people, and the advantages of multiplied centuries of progress. Doubtless life has never been quite the same to any man who entered into the first song service in Music Hall at the Cincinnati Jubilee Convention. There was an uplift of life and an exaltation of vision not soon to pass away. And this is what most of us need to make us more effective. We toil in our own little field till our hearts fail and our outlook becomes cramped. We need the courage which the touch of elbows brings. We need the uplift of multitudes. We need to see each other face to face in order that our sympathies may be widened, our hearts mellowed, and our judgments clarified. By coming face to face with our brethren we learn that some whom we had been led to believe had spiked tails and cloven feet, and others whom we imagined had wings long past the pin-feather stage, are simply fellow servants with us.

Then let us gather at Detroit with songs on our lips and love in our hearts. Let us rejoice in our liberty, and plan and do greater things for men, by the help of our God.

JUST ONE A DAY.

How the Coffee Crank Compromises His Health.

Some people say: "Coffee don't hurt me," and then add: "Anyway I only drink one cup a day."

If coffee really don't hurt why not drink more? There is but one answer and that is coffee does hurt them and they know it. When they drink it once a day they compromise with their enemy. There are people whom one cup of coffee a day will put in bed, if the habit be continued.

"Although warned by physicians to let coffee alone, I have always been so fond of it that I continued to use it," confesses an Ohio lady. "I compromised with myself and drank just one cup every morning until about six weeks ago.

"All the time I was drinking coffee I had heart trouble that grew steadily worse, and finally I had such alarming sensations in my head (sometimes causing me to fall down) that I at last took my doctor's advice and quit coffee, and began to use Postum Coffee in its place.

"The results have been all that the doctor hoped, for I have not only lost my craving for coffee and enjoy my good Postum just as well, but my heart trouble has ceased, and I have no more dizzy spells in my head. I feel better in every way, and consider myself a very fortunate woman to have found the truth about Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Commemorating The Dictator

By W. Durban

What a wonderfully interesting part of the world is Central England, the ancient Mercia of the Anglo-Saxons, comprising the counties of Warwick, Leicester, Stafford and Nottingham! The antiquarian, archæologist, historian and ecclesiastic have boundless and incomparable opportunities of romantic and thrilling study in such places as Stratford-on-Avon, Leamington, Coventry, Warwick, Bosworth, Kenilworth, Leicester, Birmingham, Huntingdon, Stafford, Lichfield and a host of other spots full of mingled charms of scenery, ancient association and personal tradition. The real making of Anglo-Saxondom had its scene in the English Midlands, and there is no sections of the world's surface more intensely attractive to the British or American pilgrim than this district known as the "Heart of England."

Every time I have traveled from London or back again by the Northwestern Railroad, I have looked with admiration at those three spires called the "Three Ladies of the Vale." They belong to that gloriously beautiful old structure, Lichfield Cathedral. Lichfield is this week the scene of a most interesting celebration in honor of Dr. Samuel Johnson. His 194th birthday anniversary is being observed on Sept. 18. He was born on that date in the year 1709. Thus, in six years' time the bicentenary of his birth will be due, but the citizens of Lichfield are not disposed to wait for that, as they have purchased the house where Johnson's father kept the historic bookshop, and where Samuel was born and brought up till he went to study at Oxford. The mayor of Lichfield is to open the house to the public, and to give a supper, and at a great meeting Mr. John Morley will give an address.

There are very few of the great literary heroes of the past whom we seem to know so intimately and to love so well as the "great Cham of letters," as Smollett styled Samuel Johnson after the appearance of the famous dictionary. That event made the author a dictator, seated in the chair previously occupied by his namesake Ben, by Dryden and Pope in succession. The world of literature has since that time become too large for such authority. But it is not too much to say that notwithstanding the derision which wittlings have leveled at the somewhat pompous Latinism of the Johnsonian diction, yet we may justly claim that he is the vertebral column of our prose. No one can study his writings without being profoundly impressed with the dignity of his character, the keenness of his insight, the boldness and breadth of his criticism, and the range of his sympathetic humor. The highest possible perfection of English prose was possible only to the Elizabethans. But what was left for Johnson to do, he achieved with consummate power. To him it was left to establish a code, to evolve order out of disorderly materials, to found a new ideal of style in absolutely logical precision, adding to that precision dignity and eloquence and force. To ascribe to him a slavish propensity to cumbrous and pedantic sesquipedalianism is to mistake the travesty for the original.

Though some few characteristics of Samuel Johnson's style are obsolete, for a lighter touch has superseded his classic ponderosity, the fascinating influence of his personality is ever growing. Of course it can rarely fall to a man of genius to win a fidus Achates in the shape of a Boswell. That extraordinary biographer was not a parasite, but a satellite. In immortalizing his idol, the faithful follower everlastingly distinguished himself. A dip into Boswell's pages is one of the most refreshing exercises that can be indulged in by lovers of realistic romance. The Johnson legend lingers lovingly in Lichfield, and it has been immeasurably strengthened by Boswell's wonderful work.

Everything about Samuel Johnson savors of that degree of romance which allures because of the combination of the grave with the grotesque. He became a massive scholar, but the direction of his studies was partly determined by the discovery of a folio of Petrarch, lying on a shelf where he was looking for apples. His intellectual resembled his physical appetite, for he gorged books, tearing the heart out of them, but he never studied with any approach to system. Poverty drove him to London after his course at Oxford, which he left, like Samuel Taylor Coleridge, without taking a degree. In the metropolis he plunged at once into Grub Street. But what a galaxy that was which coruscated in Grub Street during the years when Garrick, Savage, Goldsmith and Johnson were sustaining their desperate struggle for fame and competence. In that same Grub Street period, when Johnson was supporting his beloved wife, "Letty," by strenuous labor as a hack writer, he was also constantly exerting himself to save Savage from the results of the insensate arrogance and consummate folly which disgusted all other friends. No faults in those whom he loved could ever alienate Johnson. His fidelity was absolutely perfect. Though his wife, a Birmingham widow, Mrs. Porter, was 48 when he at the age of 26 married her, although she was, according to Garrick, very fat, with cheeks colored by both paint and cordials, flimsy and fantastic in dress and manners, he treated her with elaborate deference. And during all the lonely years that followed her death nothing effaced her image from his soul. Like all good men, Johnson loved good women, and he even liked to have a flirtation or two on hand, but he was a consistent moralist and never passed beyond the bounds of decorum.

Johnson was almost everything that a writer could become—poet, philosopher, critic, dramatist, lexicopher and novelist. It is astonishing how many different things he attempted and how excellently he performed them all. He came up from Lichfield with a play in his pocket. It reached a second edition in a week. But he received only ten guineas for it. "His Vanity of Human Wishes" is the finest poem written since Pope's time in Pope's own style with the exception of Goldsmith's still finer performance of the same school. "Rasselas," the beautiful didactic romance written in the evenings of a single week to defray his mother's funeral expenses, was only excelled by Voltaire's "Candide" as a literary feat. The two are singularly alike in aim. In his "Lives of the Poets" Johnson comes to the front as a first-class critical philosopher. Whatever may be said of his diction, his language never for a moment obscures the idea intended to be conveyed. He never employs a parenthesis. This noble and chivalrous soul was unique in his manners. His personal habits were altogether individualistic. He would drink over 20 cups of tea in a day, and would eat eight peaches before breakfast. "He laughs like a rhinoceros," said Tom Davies. But he had no unkind prejudices, kept his loving friends around him for life, lived as a true-hearted Christian, and after winning fame by real genius nobly exercised in an evil age, was buried in Westminster Abbey, the consecrated Valhalla-Pantheon of England.

Sunshine and Music.

A laugh is just like sunshine;
It freshens all the day,
It tips the peak of life with light,
And drives the clouds away.
The soul grows glad that hears it,
And feels its courage strong;
A laugh is just like sunshine
For cheering folks along.

A laugh is just like music:
It lingers in the heart,
And where its melody is heard,
The ills of life depart;
And happy thoughts come crowding
Its joyful notes to greet;
A laugh is just like music
For making living sweet.

—Christian Work.

Idolatry in Japan.

By Laura De Lany Garst.

The sight-seer in Japan might feel constrained to exclaim with Jeremiah, "It is the land of graven images and they are mad upon their idols!" and with Isaiah, "Their land also is full of idols; they worship the work of their own hands, that which their own fingers have made; and the mean man boweth down and the great man humbleth himself."

Conspicuous in the majority of homes is the idol shelf with its more or less scrupulously arranged decorations of flowers, fruits and wines and lighted tapers. Temples abound. As with Israel of old, the high places, and the most beautiful nooks that nature has designed are consecrated to smaller or larger temples and shrines.

The second-hand shops are crowded with idols for sale. Shady lanes show grim processions of filthy images much defaced by the rubbing of thousands of diseased and maimed individuals seeking healing.

Christian art has enriched the world with beautiful Madonnas, exquisite cherubs, magnificent architecture. The devil's coat of arms seems laid upon the productions of idolatry. At the temple gate glares hideous demon-like monsters, designed to out-devil the devil, and so conceived to be very efficacious in keeping evil spirits from the place. With red eyes and hideous grin the impossible monster stares at one. Straw sandals ornament the cage he occupies and indicate that some of the votaries of that temple-god desire to have as muscular limbs as the gigantic image displays.

Beneath the temple eaves lurk representations of writhing serpents and heads of dogs and feline creatures with repellant features.

The great goddess, "Kwan-non," (goddess of Mercy,) counts her devotees by the million. Tradition tells us she was the daughter of a Chinese monarch. Because she refused to marry in accordance with her father's royal will, she was put into a convent and ordered to be executed. The executioner's sword broke and she was smothered and sent to hell, which, changed to heaven at her arrival, much to the disgust of the reigning sovereign there, who sent her unceremoniously back on a lotus leaf. Her father falling ill, without a thought of the unkind way in which he had treated her, she nursed him back to life, feeding him with flesh cut from her arms. When an image was ordered made of her, a mistake was made in one word, "complete" being interpreted "thousand," and the statue was made with a thousand arms and eyes, and so she is represented in the many images of her that grace Japan. In one temple in Kyoto there are thirty-three thousand images of her, over one thousand of them being more than life size. At one temple erected to her in Tokyo thousands worship daily, and on festival days these are multiplied by tens. Pope and peasant, king and knave alike unite their entreaties for the healing of the sick. In the rear of this temple, within the sacred(!) precincts, are houses where "wine, women and song" regale the erstwhile worshiper who has left his religion at the temple door with his nickel and his mumbled prayer.

Over seventy-five thousand priests serve in connection with the idolatrous worship of Japan, or one to every two hundred and forty inhabitants, in round numbers. (There is one missionary to about sixty-two thousand of population!) Ten thousand young men are training for priests. Many priests are the sons of misguided women who, at the instigation of their parents have yielded their bodies for commercial gain, thinking filial piety required even this supreme sacrifice from them. These boys are put into temples as errand boys and general roustabouts and evolve into priests. When men, they are often seen in the evil haunts from whence they hailed.

Places of a low moral character are as often adorned with the idol shelf as any. Imagine "family worship" in a house of ill fame under the Christian regime! There seems nothing incongruous about idolatrous devotions amid the most immoral surroundings.

The delicate vegetarian would-be-Theosophist expatiates upon the beauty of the Buddhist faith that prohibits the taking of life, and is usually blissfully ignorant of the fact that a Buddhist father would consign his daughter to life-long slavery of the most loathsome nature, without a pang, simply to liquidate a troublesome debt of ten or twenty dollars!

Where the word "sin" is mainly suggestive of insect killing or flesh eating, the word "holiness" suggests pilgrims visiting a shrine or a religious fanatic doing penance till some member rots off or the mind is crazed, and the mention of God but produces mental pictures of myriads of idols. The Christian worker has much to do in the way of preparing soil in which to sow the Seed of the Kingdom.

Church Music.

The subject of church music is of vital importance to every church and is receiving all too little attention, and leaders of song and musicians devoting their time to this department of church work are sorely neglected. It is the hearty co-operation of pastor and people that the leaders of song most need and hope for. While we are longing for their advice they are needing and expecting our very best efforts. Happy is the pastor who "hears the joyful sound" of a good choir of sensible, consecrated Christians under efficient leadership; but woe to that man who has either incompetency or performers turning classical somersaults to deal with. Well may he envy the old-time parson who, with tuning fork, led the congregation.

An article from the pen of J. M. Philpott some months ago struck a key-note, to which will respond the hearty amens of our musicians when he says, "It seems to many that the time is ripe for a new up-to-date hymn book, better suited to the needs of our people. Attention should be given to the sentiments which the people sing." We at least need a recompilement of our Christian Hymnal, retaining only those hymns of "truthful, healthy Christian sentiments."

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST addresses itself to a large musical, as well as literary circle, and we feel that we have a claim on our great religious weeklies for their support in this large and almost uncultivated field. Those of us who heard the great convention at Omaha sing,

"We shall see the truth so glorious,
Over all the earth victorious,
For the banner lifted o'er us Is loyalty to Christ," as it swung from rank to rank, reverberating and re-echoing through the old coliseum, will never forget the inspiration and spiritual uplift they received. Can we not do more to bring this mighty power of music to bear with greater force upon a sin-cursed world? And to him who was heralded by the halleluiahs of the heavenly choir be given all the praise and glory.

MRS. C. E. McCANN.

[Sister McCann, and many other persons, will be pleased to know that the Christian Publishing Company has had under consideration for some time the publication of such a hymnal as is suggested by Bro. Philpott and endorsed by her, and we hope to make more definite announcement very soon.—EDITOR.]

A Protest.

There is a practice quite common among certain religious teachers of these times, which to many thoughtful people is not only doubtful propriety, but positively evil in result. Many of our modern evangelists—both great and small—seem to think themselves called upon to hold meetings, write books, and sell them, ostensibly in the interests of social purity, but which contribute more frequently, it is to be feared, to social impurity. Having been regularly educated as a physician and for some years engaged in the practice of medicine, no one can better know the need of safe and sensible effort in the direction of greater virtue in the home and community than this writer. But by reason and observation I am persuaded that the policy of men holding "meetings for women only"—and women for men—is wholly bad in principle and practice. In the first place, few, if any of these evangelists are competent to speak on such matters. Much that they give out for superior wisdom is scientifically false and injurious in result.

But were all these deliverances in exact accord with truth, it is a false notion that all the truth is of physical, moral or religious advantage to all classes. From direct testimony as well as a priori judgment the conclusion is reached, that much of this pseudo-religious teaching is suggestive of vile stuff that many people have never thought of until hearing it from the lips of some supposed religious teacher. The greatest good that can ever come to a young man or woman is a mind unpoisoned by such suggestions, with the modesty that refuses to speak or be spoken to of many things that are deplorably common and unquestionably evil.—A. O. Ebright in Central Christian Advocate.

News From Many Fields

Baltimore.

The contract has been let for the erection of the chapel of the Christian Temple. Its size will be 40x65 feet, and with the gallery, which goes around the entire building, the seating capacity will be seven hundred. It will be built of granite. There will be class rooms, reading room and other rooms in the basement. It will be completed by March 15, 1904.

We held a tent meeting on the site of this new building during the summer, and we had large crowds through the entire meeting. The pastor of the Calhoun Street Church preached every night for a month, excepting two nights, when M. E. Harlan, of New York, and Flournoy Payne, of Baltimore, preached. We expect to try this tent work next summer, if the Lord wills.

W. R. D. Winters, of Indiana, has become pastor of the Fulton Avenue Church, this city. J. O. Shelburne, of the Riverside Park Church, who has been absent for two months on account of sickness, has returned, and his work is starting up well. Flournoy Payne, who has been pastor at the 25th Street Church for nearly two years, has resigned. Brother Payne has done most acceptable work in this field, and he is held in high esteem by the Disciples of this city. S. R. Maxwell, of Georgia, is expected to begin a meeting at the 25th Street Church the second Sunday in next month. B. A. Abbott is at his post at the Harlem Avenue Church. We hear indirectly that he is being spoken of as the successor of Carey E. Morgan at Seventh Street Church, Richmond. The work at Calhoun Street Church goes well. Our audiences have kept up through this summer better than usual.

By the will of the late Alexander Newcomer, of Beaver Creek, Md., the Christian Tribune Home for Working Girls of this city, which is under the control of the Disciples, receives $1,000 now, and later another $1,000. Brother Newcomer was an elder in the Beaver Creek Church and greatly beloved. He fell asleep in Jesus last week in his seventy-third year.

The convention for Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia will be held at the Vermont Avenue Church, Washington, Oct. 6-9.

The writer, being on a tour of the churches, is of the opinion that a man who can't find a climate to satisfy him here, is indeed hard to please, for we have most everything except frosts, tornadoes, blizzards and the like. I am finding it warm just now up the Sacramento Valley. Have addressed the congregations at Vallejo, Napa, Rutherford, Vacoville, Winters and Madison in the past week.

Bro. G. T. Meeker could not resist the pleading of Hollister and goes there Nov. 1.

Bro. Wm. C. Thompson, of Apache, Okla., has accepted a call to the Madison Church and begins there Oct. 11. From the work done by Brother Thompson and his wife the last two years at Apache, we welcome them with outstretched arms to our state.

Bro. Eli Fisher has resigned at Pacific Grove.

Sister Hazellrigg now has three meetings arranged for out here after the holidays. If you want the fourth speak promptly. Woodland, Healdsburg and Vacoville each want meetings in October and are trying to get evangelists from the east.

The church at Richmond is going up this week. They expect to have it sufficiently enclosed by next Lord's day to meet in it.

The church at Dinuba is going up rapidly. One brother writes, "It is the biggest thing in Dinuba."

Brethren, we are going to roll up an offering in November for state work that will surprise many people. Let every one do his or her part.

New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

Since we last wrote, a meeting has been held at Burts Corner, N. B., resulting in six additions. Sixteen additions are reported from West Gove, Wants county, N. S., and nineteen from South Gauge, Digby county, N. S. Our annual convention was held in August at Picton, N. S., and was a grand success socially and spiritually, and also strengthened the church at Picton in its standing among the people there.

The Woman's Missionary Board reported forty-two additions for the year, and the total number of additions for the year, as reported, was one hundred and sixty-one, or about ten per cent increase of membership. This does not seem large, but you must remember we are working against the wind. This small progress has probably taken more steam than many meetings showing double the number.

Receipts for home missions (state only) amounted to $1,114, or about sixty three cents per capita of membership.

The Home Missionary Society has been placed upon a new and more effective footing, new blood infused into its management, and greater results are looked for this current year. Our determination is as deep as our courage is high. H. A. MILLS, Sec. & Treas.

Bible-School Workers of Nebraska.

The apportionments for our Bible-schools for "Nebraska Christian Missions" will be mailed to you soon. The "King's Treasury" needs the free will and liberal offering of the "King's Subjects" for the "greater works" of which Jesus prophesied. All together now for plans and work, to get the best results possible. "Nebraska Day" for mission monies, and offerings of yourself, your prayers and your store of information on Nebraska missions is Lord's day November first. Now, don't forget, or neglect it. Let us all raise our apportionments on that day. Clear it up. Why? It will save time, money and the strength of your secretaries for other work. It will put our evangelists into the fields when souls are now dying and wrecking the souls of others. It will speedily glorify our Father in Heaven and preach Jesus earlier to a lost and sin-cursed people. The responsibility rests on you, friends of Christ. Do your duty. Yes, your loving service for Christ, our Lord, by gathering your offerings on Nov. 1, and send it at once to W. A. Baldwin 1529 South 18th St., Lincoln, Neb. Meet your apportionment in full if possible. Now, say, don't forget "Boys and Girls' Rally Day," Nov. 22. Have a program. Great worth can come to our schools by observing the day for our children and Home Missions. Make as much of it as you ever did of "Children's Day." Get your supplies free, gratis from B. L. Smith, the friend of our Lord, Cincinnati, O. Order programs and information at once.

D. M. Walker has left Vanceburg and accepted work at Charleston, W. Va. They say that he will marry one of Lewis county's bonniest lassies soon.

R. L. Porter has resigned at Butler.

The writer has resigned at Elizabethtown and will probably go to Missouri next year. It is not yet known who will succeed him. The church is in a prosperous condition. During the year 142 have been added to the membership here and Glendale, and no debt encumbers us. This has been a pleasant work, and may God bless the man who ministers to this people in the days that are to come, and may the people be as loyal to him as to their humble servant of to-day.

J. M. Vawter, of Jeffersonville, Ind., will assist J. E. Payne in a meeting at Hodgenville, beginning to-night.

Recently there have been some changes made in the pastorate of some of our preachers. C. M. Schoonover has resigned at Greenville and accepted the pastorate of the Gainsville church: L. D. Anderson goes from Ennis to Palestine, and H. W. Laye from Orange to Crockett. These changes leave the churches thus made vacant without pastors.

President E. V. Zollars has been engaged to preach for the church at Waco until the pastorate can be filled by permanent engagement.

Texas Christian University has the largest student enrollment it has ever had. Every room in the main building and in the girls' home has been taken, and many of the students have been forced to room in the private homes near the campus. The Board of Trustees and President Zollars are now planning for the enlargement of the buildings that they may be able to care for the hundreds of young men and young women who will desire to attend next year.

District missionary conventions have recently been held at the following places, to wit: Graford, Ladonia, Italy, Lufkin and Longview, which were enthusiastic and well attended. The spirit of missions is growing in this state and within a few years this immense territory will have been evangelized and churches planted in all sections of the state, and for which we are working, praying and hoping.

Homer T. Wilson has just published a book entitled, "Sparks from the Anvil," which contains some of his popular lectures, and many of his addresses delivered before the "Travelers' Protective Association of Texas." This book is a gem, rich in thought and beautiful in language, and when known will have a large sale.

What is more inspiring than a body of college students? A visit to Hiram on the opening of the fall term was like drinking at the fountain of youth. Everything and everybody was hopeful. The smile "that wouldn't come off" was everywhere. Everybody was "getting busy."

The Geneva Jubilee and the Ashtabula County Yearly Meeting were combined this year. The Geneva Church has had a bothersome debt. It was not large, as debts go, but it was a bugbear. Ten months ago they said it must be paid. Heroic work was done. The victory was won. Saturday, Sept. 19 was jubilee day. W. F. Rothenberger, of Ashtabula, made a splendid address in the forenoon. In the afternoon various members of the congregation told of how it was done, and also of the history of the church. Then "Jimmie" Jones, the jolly treasurer of the church, burned the mortgage. The Ohio scribe was there to speak peace to the ashes and bring a message for the future. Saturday night E. B. Wakefield spoke. Sunday Brooks Voorhees and Ira Durfee preached. It was good to be there. H. L. Atkinson, the local bishop, was busy as a nailer, happy as a lark, and the same sturdy bachelor as of old. The outlook at Geneva is hopeful. A good house, 210 consecrated people, no debt and forty new families reading the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

From things published in our religious press, there will be "something doing" in Detroit, Mich. Oct. 16-22. You are going, of course, and take your wife. Be sure to see that your preacher goes. Put a purse in his hand to pay the freight. It will be a good investment for the church. He'll preach better and work harder. Try it and see.

If you want a good man to hold a meeting drop me a postal card. There are some good men available. If you want to hold a meeting do likewise.

Granger and Ghent Churches have not yet found a successor to Wm. McCartney. He left the field in fine condition. A worthy successor is desired. Twelve years ago there was a fine farm southwest of Akron. To-day on this farm stands the city of Barberton with 8,000 people. More matches are made in a day in Barberton than all the preachers of the United States make in a month. It is the home of the Diamond Match Co. The prospect for "our" synagogue was never so promising. The debt is heavy, but a good man in the person of D. P. Shafer is now at the helm. The property is worth $6,000. Wadsworth has been resurrected from what was almost a grave. The State Board and Robert Strickler on the field are responsible for the new life. The Bible-school has doubled, and a fine hearing for preaching has been gained.

The Broad Street Church in Akron will have to soon broaden their building. The walls are now in the way of the people. What to do is being carefully considered by G. W. Moore and his flock. The opportunity is fine.

The Third Church, Akron, has the Sunday-school revival fever, and has gone to 350 delegates at last account.

Alfred W. Place is proving himself to be in the right place at the Fourth Church, Akron. By his sacrifice and devotion the debt will soon be down to $2,000, and will become an extension loan.

Of course things are moving at the High Street Church in Ak this time of year. This church now supports six workers in all. Three in Ohio and three outside. $1,500 has just been spent for repairs. $625 was offered for missions Sept. 20. The Sunday-school averages about 650.

H. N. Allen goes back to his first love. Thirty-four years ago he began his ministry at North Royalton, and served them five years. He begins his second pastorate at once.

Geo. A. Ragan is now with the Lakewood Church, Cleveland, in a meeting. This will be a hold-on meeting lasting till the Detroit Convention.

The Canton Sunday-school had a doubler's day Sept. 13, and something over 700 were present. The church now uses the opera house until the new church can be built. The motto for rally day at Steubenville is 1,100.

The Cleveland preachers will resume their fortnightly meetings at the Y. M. C. A. building, Monday, Oct. 5. M. L. Streater will read on that occasion. All preachers within reach are urged to attend.

Next month will be the time to prepare for the Ohio offering which will be made Nov. 1.

If you are doing anything worthy of note or contemplate anything, drop a card to the undersigned and let it be passed on to the multitude that reads the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

DEAR SISTERS:—My "notes" this week will rather be a "personal" letter to each woman who reads, and I wish every one of our members could do so.

Our board set a high aim in special work. Its recommendation of $2,500 for special work was adopted by a representative audience, and we call upon all our workers to ratify their action by a hearty, prayerful co-operative effort to achieve.

It was decided that $1,400 should go to one of the most promising of our missions. Monterey, Mexico; $600 for Brother Alderman's salary; $400 for Sister Alderman as teacher; $100 each to their four children; auxiliary and individuals pledged for a child $100; a month's salary $50, or a half month $25. We could not leave India out of this special gift, and so $500 must go there. We decided upon Deoghur, as much is needed there. Instead of furnishing salary for a missionary, we chose teachers and native workers. For convenience we divided this into 20 shares of $25 each. Pledges were taken for a share, or a half share. We felt we could not let any other state adopt Mattie Burgess, whether she works in the home land or in India. So we have undertaken to pay her salary, $600, as assistant to our secretary, Mrs. Helen E. Moses. Pledges for a month's salary, $50, or a half month's, $25, were taken, until $385 of the $600

All Stuffed Up

That's the condition of many sufferers from catarrh, especially in the morning. Great difficulty is experienced in clearing the head and throat.

No wonder catarrh causes headache, impairs the taste, smell and hearing, pollutes the breath, deranges the stomach and affects the appetite.

To cure catarrh, treatment must be constitutional—alterative and tonic.

"I was afflicted with catarrh. I took medicines of different kinds, giving each a fair trial; but gradually grew worse until I could hardly hear, taste or smell. I then concluded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after taking five bottles I was cured and have not had any return of the disease since." EUGENE FORBES, Lebanon, Kan.

were promised at Columbia. Of the $2,500, $1,122 are already pledged. Auxiliaries not pledged may send in the amount they will stand responsible for to the secretary, increasing, I trust, your last year's special gifts, to indicate that you are growing. Those failing in this, will hear from us later in form of apportionment suggestions.

We were so happy and enthusiastic, our interest was centered, our prayers ascending for these dear workers who had gone from our own state, who were to still be our very own. But how our hearts were saddened when we learned that even while we planned, the death angel already stood beside the bed of our Brother Alderman. He died Wednesday, Sept. 23, on the firing line—as truly a martyr as those of old. He might have run before the foe,—yellow fever,—but he stood by those with whom he had cast his lot. Now there is a stricken woman with her fatherless little ones about her, to whom our sympathy and love go out most tenderly.

A soldier has fallen at the front. What shall we do? Leave a vacant place and thus weaken our cause? I think I hear, coming up from all parts of Missouri, growing stronger and stronger as it rolls along, gathering strength through added numbers, until at last, with one voice, one hope, our sisters say, "No, send another to take the fallen soldier's place. We honor our faithful dead, but our Master's cause must go on." So well I know the loyalty of our women, that this fancy becomes conviction that they will stand by this pledge to Mexico, just the same as if our brother had not fallen; that all pledges made to these workers, and many others, shall go for the salary of those our national board shall send to fill their places. We must be patient if there is some delay; missionaries are not found on every corner. Let us pray that God will speedily raise some one to go to Mexico, that the work may suffer as little as possible.

Are you going to Detroit? You should if you are to give your best service this year? Will you not consider this a duty as well as a joy, and go, even at a sacrifice?

New York State Convention.

The forty-second annual convention of the New York Christian Missionary Society, with annual sessions of the New York Christian Ministerial Association and the New York Christian Woman's Board of Missions, was held with the Church of Christ in Wellsville, Sept. 22-25. It was a gathering which did honor to the church and the cause. It would, of course, be impossible in any space the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST would be likely to spare me, to do anything more than furnish the merest outline of its proceedings.

The spirit of the convention was eminently devout and tender. There was a depth and fervency to the various prayers and addresses which could not be mistaken. This feeling was partly due to the wonderful solos of dear Brother Encell, who stands so near to heaven as to be able to catch something of its incomparable melodies. We were all roused and set to resolving by stirring addresses by M. E. Harlan on "The Vision of Service," Bro. B. Q. Denham on "The Big Four in the Work of Christian Endeavor," Bro. G. D. Purdy on "Jamaica," Bro. J. A. Beattie on "Christian Unity," Bro. W. C. Bower on "A Call to Deeper Spiritual Life," and Bro. E. O. Tilburn on "Problems of the Preacher's Work." Of course the big guns were there—Bro. F. M. Rains, who always shoots to bring down, and Bro. C. C. Smith, whose aim is so true and whose success is so certain.

Bro. G. L. Snively, too, gave us a rousing appeal in behalf of "Our Benevolences," and Bro. George B. Ranshaw, who made his debut as an advocate of home missions, simply captivated the convention. Perhaps one of the most practical and useful of the addresses was that made by Bro. John R. Tolar, Jr., on "The Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip," and, certainly, the most notable and beautiful act of the convention was the raising of $100 plus, for the relief of the sufferers in Jamaica. The address by Sister Laura Gerould Craig, president of the C. W. B. M., was full of spiritual flavor and practical suggestions. The report of the C. W. B. M. secretary, Mrs. Nellie Taber Dunston, was characteristic and therefore clever. I happen to know that Brother Black, of Scio, a stalwart Disciple both physically and spiritually, signalized his attendance upon the convention by handing to the president of our State Board a check for $100, the proceeds to be devoted to state work. The praise services were conducted by Bro. F. M. Huston, of Indianapolis, who greatly endeared himself to us all.

It was most unfortunate that Bro. Paul Hanks, the enthusiastic and indefatigable chairman of the committee of arrangements, should have been suddenly taken ill just before the convention assembled. However, the rest of the committee, assisted by Bro. Raphael H. Miller, a former pastor of the church, and now doing valiant things with the Richmond Avenue Church of Christ, Buffalo, who stepped into the breach and demonstrated his capability to grapple with an emergency, were able to manage the affairs of the convention in such a way as to leave nothing to be desired except the actual presence of the chairman. It was a proper act upon the part of the convention to send to Brother Hanks a formal expression of its sympathy, coupled with that of a hope for his speedy recovery.

The good people of the Wellsville Church exhausted their ingenuity in efforts to entertain the delegates, and their success was complete. Wellsville is a beautiful place, possessing many beautiful features. Our church is, just now, without a pastor, a lack which will promptly be supplied.

The next annual state convention will be held with the Jefferson Street Church of Christ, Buffalo.

The Combination Oil Cure for Cancer

Has the endorsement of the highest medical authority in the world. It would seem strange indeed if persons afflicted with cancers and tumors, after knowing the facts, would resort to the dreaded knife and burning plaster, which have hitherto been attended with such fatal results. The fact that in the last ten years over one hundred doctors have put themselves under this mild treatment shows their confidence in the new method of treating those horrible diseases. Persons afflicted will do well to send for free book giving particulars and prices of Oils. Address the home office, Dr. D. M. BYE Co., Drawer 505, Indianapolis, Ind.

DAVID'S CONFESSION.—Psa 51:1-19.

Read 2 Sam. 11, 12.

Memory Verses: Psa. 51:1-4.

Golden Text: Create in me a clean heart, O God.—Psa. 51:10.

Hebrew Poetry.

Before taking up the verses which form the lesson, consider briefly the character of the book from which they are taken, and its place in Old Testament literature. The book of Psalms is a book of lyric poetry, that is, poetry either intended to be sung or of such form that it might readily be set to music. There are in the Old Testament at least three kinds of lyrics: love songs, war songs and religious songs. The psalms belong entirely to the latter class.

The Hebrews were by temperament a poetic people. Their common speech was full of figures, and their language had that pictorial quality which encourages poetry.

The dividing line between prose and poetry in Hebrew is not a rigid one as in English. Impassioned discourse naturally rises into the realm of poetry. There is no rhyme and nothing that corresponds to poetic feet or meter, marked by a regular recurrence of short and long syllables (as in Latin and Greek) or of accented syllables (as in English). So far as form is concerned, the only thing which distinguishes Hebrew poetry from prose is what is called Parallelism.

Parallelism.

A verse of Hebrew poetry nearly always has two lines, the second repeating the thought of the first. For example (Psa. 25:4).

"Show me thy ways, O Jehovah, Teach me thy paths."

Here the second line adds no new idea to the first, but only emphasizes it by repetition. Sometimes there is an antithesis between the two lines, as:

"A wise son maketh a glad father,
But a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother."

This arrangement is called parallelism. It is a balancing of ideas and not a balancing of accents and rhymes as in our poetry.

Old Testament poetry ought always to be read from the Revised Version, which shows the division into lines and makes the parallelism visible to the eye.

Read the lesson (Psalm 51) with an eye to its poetic form, and note the parallelism. Verse 4 has four lines. The first and second are parallel, and so are the third and fourth; the second couplet moreover is in "synthetic parallelism" with the first. This "synthetic parallelism," in which the second line expresses a result or corollary of the first, is illustrated also in verses 8, 14 and 15. Sometimes a verse has three lines instead of two, as in verse 19, but the principle of parallelism holds good.

The Book of Psalms.

The Book of Psalms was the hymn-book of the temple service. Many of the Psalms were by David—who was the first great master of this kind of poetry, and the only great Hebrew poet whose name has come down to us—but still more of them are by unknown writers, and the collection of them into their present form was the work of a much later time. Many of the psalms are the expression or the outgrowth of very profound personal experiences on the part of the authors, but this has not prevented them from being highly useful for collective worship in temple and church. The most individual religious experiences often fit one for the most universal expression of religious truths. So in the case of David, whose sin and repentance led him to this outburst of confession and entreaty which David's Sin.

It is characteristic of the biblical narratives that they make no attempt to portray perfection even in the noblest human characters. Noah's drunkenness is mentioned, and Abraham's lie, and Jacob's trickery, and Moses' murder and Aaron's idolatry. In 2 Sam. 11, 12, is told the story of David's great sin. He, the greatest man of his age and God's chosen instrument, broke three of the ten commandments, first the tenth, then the sixth, then the seventh. And his sin was the more despicable because of the treacherous means which he employed to compass the death of Uriah. This man, one of the king's faithful warriors, was to be put at a dangerous post in the battle and then deserted. His loyalty to the king was to be used as the means of his undoing. The plan succeeded and David took Uriah's wife as he wished. And yet it was the greatest failure David ever made, for a successful sin is always disastrous. It was Nathan the prophet who pointed out to the king the infamy of his conduct, first telling him a story of a rich man who had meanly robbed a poor man of his only treasure, and when David's indignation was fully aroused, boldly declaring to him, "Thou art the man."

David's Contrition.

When once his eyes were opened to his own guilt, David's sorrow for his sin was as great as his sin. And this fifty-first psalm is accepted by almost all students as David's cry for forgiveness. The psalm falls into three divisions. Verses 1-9 contain the confession and prayer for forgiveness and purification from the guilt of this sin. Verses 10-12 are a prayer for purity as a permanent condition. Verses 13-17 contain vows of renewed consecration and service in return for God's forgiveness. The last two verses of the psalm, with their prayer for the building of the walls of Jerusalem, are a later addition dating, as many of the psalms do, from the time of the exile, when faithful Israelites were praying for the restoration of the holy city. These verses may be left out of account so far as the present lesson is concerned.

1. Confession and Prayer for Forgiveness.

The thought of God's mercy which was prominent in many of the psalms is the leading idea here. The only ground on which David based his appeal was the divine mercy, and he was quite satisfied that Jehovah's loving kindness and not his own merits should be the measure of his forgiveness (verse 1). The fact of his own consciousness of sin (verse 3) is cited as the reason for his confession and not as a reason why he can claim forgiveness. "Against thee only have I sinned" may seem strange in view of the wrong that had been done to Uriah. Perhaps we may distinguish between the crime which had been committed against man and the sin against God. An act when viewed as an infraction of human law may be considered as a crime, and when viewed as a breach of divine law may be considered a sin. The allusion to the divine justice (verse 4) implies a willingness to accept any conditions of punishment which justice may demand in connection with his pardon. Verse 5 is not an excuse for sin, but a further confession of complete sinfulness. In verses 5 to 10, the singular and plural (sin and sins) alternate, and the petition is that this particular sin may be forgiven and that his sinful heart, which is the source of sins, may be cleansed.

2. The Prayer for Purity.

Verses 10-12 contain the petition for purity of heart as a permanent possession; not simply the forgiveness of sins and the blotting out of iniquities from the book of remembrance, but such a cleansing of the fountains of life that he shall be freed from the power and habit of sin, as well as from its guilt and penalty. It is one thing for sins to be blotted from the record and their penalty remitted; it is another thing for the man to be freed from the dominion of sinful impulses. Note the repetition of the word "spirit" in these verses: "a right spirit" (verse 10); "thy Holy Spirit" (verse 11); "a willing spirit" (verse 12). The prayer, "Take not thy holy Spirit from me," might have special significance for David when he remembered how "the spirit of Jehovah departed from Saul" on account of his sin.

3. Vows of Service.

The only return which David proposes to make for God's mercy—and he knows it is the best that any one can make—is to make his praise contagious and teach sinners the righteousness and mercy of Jehovah. No penitence is quite deep enough which does not move the penitent to warn others against sin, and one who fully appreciates God's mercy cannot make a better acknowledgment than by showing forth to those who do not know Him the joy of His service. As for sacrifice, there is no burnt offering or sin-offering which pleases God like the wholesome sorrow of a penitent and contrite heart.

GREAT MEN OF THE BIBLE.—III. MOSES.
Ex. 34:28-35; Matt. 17:3, 4; Heb. 3:1, 5.

Moses came close to God. This was the reason of his power and the distinguishing characteristic of his person. The historian puts it none too vividly when he says that God talked with Moses face to face "as a man speaketh unto his friend." This is the true ideal of man's intercourse with God. God should be as real to us as the friend in whose presence we stand. We should feel His nearness as though He were visible to our eyes. There should be a channel, open and unobstructed, between the divine life and our own, through which our prayers can go out to God and His blessings and warnings and guidings can come to us.

To be thus near to God, so that our lives are lived over in the consciousness of His presence, is to bring one's soul into its native element where alone it can live its best life. A fish is made for the water; taken out of the water, it gasps and dies. Some animals thrive in the hot, damp atmosphere of the tropical jungle; some in the clear cold air of the Arctic. So the soul of man has its natural atmosphere; it is the clear pure air of God's presence, warmed and brightened by the sunshine of His love. Here the soul can live and grow. In any other environment it sickens and shrivels and dies.

How to come close to God, is the question. We cannot, like Moses, go up into a mountain and see Him face to face. But we can come closer to Him than Moses ever did. Through the revelation in Jesus Christ we may see His face more clearly than Moses saw it. Through prayer we may seek His presence. Through study of His Word we may understand His will. Through service to His needy children we may come into closest touch with Him, and without this we cannot really be near Him at all.

When Moses was admitted to the presence of God, it was not merely for his own sake. It was not that he might "sit and sing himself away to everlasting bliss." It was that he might carry down to the waiting multitude the reflected brightness of the divine glory and impart what he had learned of God's will. There is such a thing as spiritual selfishness. It was this which caused Peter on the mount of transfiguration to suggest, in a moment of spiritual ecstasy, that they abide there and make the glory and joy of that hour perpetual. But the Master remembered the world below that needed Him, and He knew that even then the demoniac boy awaited His healing touch.

So we must get spiritual strength by living close to God, and we must use it by living close to men.

Another trait of Moses' character was his devotion to his own people and his unwillingness to forsake them even to enjoy the pleasures of Pharaoh's court. He was a Hebrew. He realized that his nation had a great work to do for God and he recognized his own obligation to join his fortune with theirs. His own people were a nation of slaves, but their need only emphasized his duty. It was the same spirit which should arouse us to enthusiasm for home missions. Our own people need our help. They are in bondage to sin. They are in religious destitution. The obligation to free them rests upon those who have already been made free. There is a world-wide obligation, but there is also a special duty which we owe to our own kindred and people.

V. A CURE FOR ANXIETY.—Matt. 6:26-34;
1 Pet. 5:7.

The Master leads us to-day among the lilies of the field, and bids us listen to the twittering birds. And it is pleasant to go with him; pleasant, especially when the head is hot and the heart faint. There is infinite sympathy in his voice, and his words drop like honey from the comb.

Gently, but firmly, he reminds us that anxiety is useless. There is a tender satire in the question, "Which of you, by being anxious, can add one cubit unto the measure of his life?" Why, it is like trying to lift one's self by tugging at the boot-straps! It is preposterous. Anxiety never mends a break, nor heals a wound, nor eases a pain. Anxiety does not bridge the torrent, nor offer wings to the wayfarer. What pure folly it is!

And then, there is a cumulative waste in it. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." If you allow to-day's care to reach into the future, it adds to the future's burdens. There will be trial and difficulty to-morrow, and the next day, and the next; so do not form a procession of anxieties, and keep the black battalions always marching through your soul. Settle the affairs of to-day by themselves; they are to-day's heritage, and they are enough. Then when to-morrow comes, you will have a clear deck for action.

If he had talked no further into the subject, he had said enough to cool many a fevered brow. There is wisdom in his message, and it is enriched by his own personality. He never doubted, nor fretted. He never quailed before his enemies. And his words tell of the calm depths of faith which mark him as Master and Savior. But he does not so much as pause with these weighty words. He tells us that the life is more than the food, and the body than the raiment. Hence, why consume the greater with anxiety about the less? Be patient; mind the chief concerns.

Therefore we must seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Until we have become citizens of the eternal kingdom, there is nothing else that really merits our attention, certainly not our deep concern. Men are saying, "Wait till I have amassed a fortune, and can be of some service to the church, then I'll come in." The church is here to show him that business itself requires religion. You might as well attempt to sail the Kaiser Wilhelm down Broadway as to float your business enterprises in any other element than that of faith in God.

So it is evident that the reign of God comes first, because it adjusts all other things. Besides, it is intrinsically the most important. John G. Paton says it makes no difference whether his body is eaten by worms or by cannibals at last, if only he is faithful in doing the will of God.

"Your heavenly Father knows!" Here is the cure; God the Eternal, the Most High, the Possessor of heaven and earth, is our Father, and he knows our needs. He feeds and nourishes the birds that flutter their little lives out under the blue sky; he clothes the lilies of the field in more than Solomon's loveliness; much more will he take care of his own dear children. The argument is irresistible; we accept the conclusion. Let our enterprises miscarry, if they will. Let the banks fail, and wicked partners abscond and hard-earned savings go. Faith is the victory. We will sing the Doxology, in the midst of financial panic and ruin. We will trust him forever, and not be afraid.

PRAYER.

We bless thy name, O God, for this inspiring declaration of divine care. We accept it; we take thee at thy word, and lay down our weary burdens, for thou wilt bear them and us. Amen.

Our hearty sympathies are extended to our old friend and teacher of other days. Mrs. Hall was said to be a woman of great social and Christian worth.

—The Home Society has prepared an exercise for Boys' and Girls' Rally Day which will be a great help in making that day a joyous and profitable one for the children and young people. It contains a full program for the day—songs, readings, recitations, etc. It is intended, however, only to be suggestive. Every school may improve on it if it can. The society received from this rally day this year $6,897.13 of the $102,246.10 it has gotten from all sources. The secretaries are striking for $10,000 this year, and we believe they will get it.

—T. N. Kincaid, pastor at Hot Springs, Ark., spent a day or two in the city on his way east to Indianapolis and Cincinnati, in the interest of his work at that national watering place. The brethren there have bargained for a lot in a fine location, but must have help to pay for it. There are few places in the country of more strategic value than Hot Springs. A good church there would make its influence felt throughout the country, and would be a great blessing to hundreds of our invalid members who go there for the recuperation of their health. The church there is doing its utmost and deserves the assistance of the brotherhood.

—"On the first of October, 1893, I was sent to Peru, Ind., by the State Missionary Society to organize and build up a new congregation. Began with thirteen members. In a little over a year we went into a church building, purchased from the Congregationalists. It was necessary to assume a good sized mortgage indebtedness. On Sept. 27, 1903, the congregation was able to pay the last dollar of indebtedness, and invited us to come back and burn the mortgage. It was a day of joy. There were two accessions, and we took a special offering of $10.60 to help the American Christian Missionary Society over the $100,000 line. The church is now talking of a new $10,000 building. Those churches that failed to get their offerings in for the September report should send as early in October as possible.

—Those who are planning to attend the Detroit Convention should take notice that the convention begins later than usual. There will be no reception on Thursday night and no public service on Friday morning. The first public service will be on Friday, 2 P. M. The convention closes on Wednesday night. There has been complaint in the past that the convention lasted too long. For this reason an effort has been made to shorten it. This notice is given because some parties are getting up excursions to reach Detroit on Thursday morning.

—James Small, of Columbus, Ind., suggests that there should be a "Tea Meeting" in connection with the Detroit Convention for the English contingent and those who have been in England. Such a meeting was held in connection with the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati, and it was a delightful hour. Probably such a meeting would be still more largely attended at Detroit, where there are many persons from England and Canada. Bro. E. M. Todd, of the West London Tabernacle, will attend the Detroit Convention as a representative of our English churches.

—Among other things crowded out in our very full and newsy paper last week were some paragraphs concerning the Missouri Convention. They must be condensed here: E. M. Richmond, of Fayette, was elected next president, and the convention goes to Carrollton—a splendid church in a splendid section. The convention passed a resolution endorsing Hon. Joseph W. Folk's work in ferreting out and prosecuting boodlers and other violators of law, and another memorializing Congress to make additional appropriation for providing schools for the children in Indian Territory, who are destitute of school privileges.

—The church at Carthage, O., Chas. M. Fillmore, minister, had a unique service recently that was very popular. It was called a "Mothers' Memorial Meeting." The program was made up of the following special songs: "My Mother's Bible," "The Songs My Mother Sang," "Nobody Knows but Mother," "Think of What Mother has Said," "My Mother's Photograph," "Has Mother's Prayer Been Answered," and "Tell Mother I'll be There." The congregational hymns were: "Silently the Shades of Evening," "Lead Kindly Light," "Tarry With Me," and "Shall We Gather at the River." Cowper's fine poem "On the Receipt of My Mother's Picture," by a fine reciter, a short memorial address on "Honoring Mother."

—The books of the Foreign Society closed for the missionary year September 30, with receipts amounting to $210,005.68. This is a gain over the previous year of $31,685; and this is the largest gain in any one year in the twenty-eight years' history of the society. Marvelous advances have been made in every department of the society's work during the year. Pres. A. McLean's face is radiant with smiles and his trumpet voice will now sound new clarion notes for the evangelization of the whole wide world. The reports at Detroit will send a thrill around the world. The interests this year have been even greater than during the Jubilee Year. There is no mistaking the fact that there is a rising tide of missionary interest throughout the brotherhood.

—One of the largest Bible-school rallies that has ever been held among our people was witnessed last Sunday at Steubenville, Ohio, where H. H. Moninger is the minister. Everyone thought their motto was far too high, but when the count was taken instead of having 1,100 they had 1,146. Such a school has never been known in that part of the state. The offering is not all reported, but it already runs over $100. The pastor's Bible-class had 571 in it. The Cradle Roll under the leadership of Mrs. Moninger, was one of the features of the day. They alone gave $44.48. This marks the beginning of another year's hard work of the Steubenville Church. Last year over 100 persons came from that Bible school into the church. Since rally day one year ago, over 240 have been added to the Steubenville Church. The pastor is booked to hold a meeting in Iowa City, Iowa, to begin the second week in November.

H. H. MONINGER.

—"I want to thank you for calling my attention to Clark's 'Outlines of Christian Theology.' That book gives me more satisfaction than any other book I have ever read, outside of the Bible. You have done me, and many other preachers here whom I have induced to read the work, a great service. That book alone is worth the price of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for ten years to me.

"L. A. CHAPMAN."

Grand Valley, Ont., Sept. 24.

We print the foregoing that others may be induced to read the work. It is worth a ton of the ordinary popular novels now pouring out of the press. Dr. Clark is a Baptist, but when his Baptist brethren all get to his position, the middle wall of partition between Baptists and Disciples will disappear.

—Here is another piece of good news for the Missouri Bible College of Columbia. Bro. C. M. Sharpe, who is working in the interest of that institution, writes from Columbia that Bro. B. F. Lowry and his sister, Eliza Lowry, of that place, have agreed to give $15,000 as an annuity gift to the Bible College building. This, Brother Sharpe says, makes the success of the building enterprise certain. This is indeed good news, and taken in connection with the recent gift of $5,000 to the endowment fund, it looks as if the Lord was opening the hearts of the people toward the work of ministerial education and Bible training. Now, if Columbia will raise enough more to complete the building fund, we feel sure the brotherhood of the state will come forward with an additional endowment of $100,000. The proposed building, besides containing recitation rooms, offices, auditorium, etc., will also contain in the upper stories rooms for rent to students, which will make it a perpetual source of income to the institution.

—A widely-known evangelist writes: "I have been thinking of writing you for some time to express my mind, and a recent paragraph in your Easy Chair caused me to determine to write at once. Like some others, I once thought you were 'too broad' in your views. I feared that you were so 'liberal' that our plea was in danger of being compromised, and so fearful was I, that I had my paper discontinued for a year. All the time, however, I attributed the error to your head, and not to your heart. But let me say, my dear brother, I have no apprehensions whatever of that kind now. I am fully converted from such chimeras or hallucinations. My conversion was gradual, but I think I am soundly converted. I can see now that you saw into the great questions of our day much farther than I did, and that your judgment was as sound as your purpose was pure. I have been reading after you very carefully what you have said in reference to 'Higher Criticism,' 'Federation,' 'Christian Union,' etc., and believe you to be as loyal to our plea and to the Scriptures as any man in the brotherhood; and that you love the cause of Christ as dearly, and emphasize the great principles of the Christian religion as strongly and uncompromisingly, as any other man among us. I never would have felt satisfied if I had not written this letter."

What is Christian Baptism?

By George C. Hicks.

In the issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for Aug. 29, the editor places before his readers some general arguments, seeking to show that immersion is the only mode of baptism authorized by the New Testament. In that article three points are made to which I will reply in the order in which they are found.

1. It is assumed that the word baptizo, used to express the act of baptism, means, in its classical signification, "to immerse, plunge or dip."

Even conceding this to be so, it fails to be conclusive as to the "form or action" of Christian baptism, and among other reasons, for the following:

First, the definition above given is limited absolutely to the action specified and leaves wholly undecided the medium into which the immersion or dipping is to be done; and for aught implied in this classic definition, that immersion might be in blood, oil, vinegar or any other liquid whatever. In the classic definition no water is implied; and Dr. A. Carson, one of the ablest of the Baptist writers, says: "The idea of water is not in the word at all."

Were it otherwise, its use would often involve the most glaring absurdities. "He dipped the vessel in boiling oil" should be read, "he dipped the vessel in water in boiling oil." If water be an essential part of the definition of baptizo, the latter would be the correct reading.

But secondly, the question is not "what is the classical meaning of the word baptizo," but "what is the New Testament meaning?" That the classical meaning is retained in the New Testament is a wholly gratuitous assumption, and one utterly opposed to the facts of the case. Hundreds of English words even, change and take on new meanings in the course of a single generation. Such words as Theos (God), Christos (Christ), pistis (faith), hamartia (sin), sarx (flesh), ouranos (heaven), and scores of others, convey to the Christian reader ideas that never entered the minds of Homer or Thucydides. And as no word was found in the classic Greek to express the idea of ceremonial purification by water, the word baptizo was, by the New Testament writers, converted to that use. This we may show more fully hereafter.

Another consideration is the indisputable fact that there are many New Testament baptisms which, by no logical exploitation, can be made immersions. The Israelites were baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea. That immersion should take place at the same moment in the cloud and in the sea is a physical impossibility. The narrative forbids immersion in the sea, for the waters stood in heaps on this side and on that, and the Israelites passed through on dry land. What, then, was the baptism in the case? The 77th Psalm furnishes the answer: "The clouds poured out water;" that is, the multitude passed over amid a storm of lightning and thunder and the baptism was one of the "pouring out" of rain—one of sprinkling after all! Please read the entire Psalm.

Then, there is the baptism of cups, brazen vessels and tables; also of Jewish baptisms before meals in which the idea of the immersion of the whole person is ridiculous; there is likewise the baptism of suffering—the latter specifically in the case of Christ in which he would be made by the immersionists to say, "I have an immersion to be immersed with;" that immersion being his elevation on the cross—a very singular immersion indeed!

2. As to the second point in the article referred to, in which it is assumed that "the apostles and first preachers" baptized by immersion, the instances given prove nothing to the point—such expressions as "going down to the water," "going up straightway out of water," "baptizing in Jordan," are wholly indefinite as to what was done "in the water" or when the water was reached. The Greek word eis and apo are susceptible of such various meanings and are so variously translated that nothing can be argued as to their use in our English version. The 20th of John illustrates this. Peter and John, it is said, came to (eis) the sepulchre, John arriving first. If eis means into, then John, on approaching, went into the sepulchre. But the 5th verse contradicts this and states that John saw the linen clothes lying; "yet went he not in." Thus, the immersionist translation of eis makes one verse of scripture flatly contradict the one immediately preceding.

There is but one way in which to express unequivocally the entering into an object, and that is by the use of eis compounded with the verb as a prefix, either alone, or as is often the case, followed by a preposition. As in the above instance when, in the 8th verse, it is said that Peter went into the sepulchre, eiselthen is employed.

And note this fact—this only method of expressing absolutely the idea of entering into, is never used of entering the water in the act of baptism. Let any immersionist furnish an instance in denial.

3. The third and last point made in our brother's article relates to Rom. 6:1-4 and Col. 2:12: both passages expressing the same idea, only the first needs attention.

It is here contended that the burial with Christ in baptism relates mainly to the form of the administration of the baptism—immersion in water. But the latter point is really wholly incidental and aside from the main argument of the apostle.

The burden of the entire chapter is death to sin. Nothing is buried until dead, and the fact of our death to sin is illustrated in three different methods or by the use of three separate figures. First, that death to sin is illustrated by our baptism, by whatever mode that baptism is accomplished; in the use of this solemn rite we profess to be dead indeed unto sin, but "alive unto God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Then, the figure changes—we are planted in the likeness of his death—planted in a new soul, in a new atmosphere and amid new environments—facts that shall insure our continued death to sin and our resurrection to a new and holy life. Here again the figure changes and this sin-death is illustrated as a crucifixion—as Christ was crucified, so "our old man (the man of sin) is crucified with him that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin."

Now, the planting and crucifixion spoken of by the apostle all concede to be figures of speech—on what principle of logic or of fair interpretation is the burial insisted to be a literal one?

Besides, the mere dipping in water for a moment as a religious rite is in no sense an actual burial, and is, at the utmost reach of logical license, but a figure of speech. To talk of a man or of any other object as "buried" when merely dipped in water to subserve a momentary and symbolic purpose, is to confound the literal with the figurative, the spiritual with the material, the typical with the actual and to become lost in a labyrinth of logical confusion and bewilderment.

REPLY.

[In agreeing to publish a reply to our position on the subject of baptism from Brother Hicks, it was with the understanding that he had come into possession of some new light on the subject, studying the problem from our own point of view, that is, as to what Christ had ordained and what it was our duty therefore to practice. We learn now that Brother Hicks is an ex-Congregational minister, a graduate of Oberlin College, who, having left the ministry and for purposes of business locating in a town where there was no congregation of his own denomination, united with one of our churches and for a while, in the absence of a regular pastor, filled its pulpit. This is not said to disparage his argument, but to show the point of view from which he writes, which is that of the pedobaptists. His line of argument is the familiar one which our preachers have met with in discussion from the beginning of our movement. It is not necessary, therefore, that we should attempt to answer the arguments at any great length.

1. We only "assumed" what the world's scholarship declares in saying that the original meaning of baptizo is dip, plunge or immerse. We also assumed that our critic, being a scholar, knew this. He does concede it, but affirms that "the definition above given is limited absolutely to the action specified, and leaves wholly undecided the medium into which the immersion or dipping is to be done." This may be admitted, but it does not affect the root idea of the word under consideration. The medium was a liquid of some kind, unless the word was used metaphorically. Let it be noted that our critic admits that there is an "action specified" by the word baptizo. That is important. But he claims that the question is not "what is the classical meaning of the word baptizo, but what is the New Testament meaning!" True, that is the immediate question, but Brother Hicks cannot be so ignorant of the laws of language as not to know that the two questions are so vitally related, that the latter is largely determined by the former. The New Testament writers did not invent a new language or invent new meanings for well-known words. It is true, of course, that many of the words in the New Testament took on a deeper or wider meaning in their religious use, but the root idea remained, as for instance in all the words mentioned by our critic.

It would have been in point for Brother Hicks to have named some of the "many New Testament baptisms which by no logical exploitation can be made immersion." The unproved statement is without force. The instance cited, that of the figurative baptism of the Israelites unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea, presents no slightest difficulty to the generally accepted meaning of the term. It is an expressive figure of speech, the meaning of which is far clearer in the light of the original meaning of the term. Why should it be thought a thing incredible that cups, pots and brazen vessels should be cleansed by immersing them in water? (The word tables is not in the passage in the Revised Version. Mark 7:4.)

As to the "Jewish baptism before meals in which the idea of the immersion of the whole person is ridiculous," it is possible that this appearance of ridiculousness may arise from non-acquaintance with Jewish customs. According to Smith's Bible Dictionary, "A bathing chamber was probably included in houses even of no great rank in cities from early times; much more then, in those of wealth in latter times." Dr. Stier says: "It was generally speaking customary before meals, especially for guests at a feast, to enter the bath." Ainsworth says: "By the Hebrew canon all that are unclean, whether men or vessels, are not cleansed but by dipping or baptizing in water." This may be "ridiculous" according to our western customs, but it was a very ordinary procedure among the Jews of Palestine.

The figurative use of the term in which Christ speaks of his baptism of suffering, is said to be "a very singular immersion indeed!" It was, indeed, a very unique and singular overwhelming of the soul in suffering, an experience most fittingly expressed by a term which means complete submergence.

2. The attempt made to parry the argument based on the circumstances surrounding New Testament baptisms is very feeble, and needs but brief reply, especially as our readers are very familiar with the answer to such argument. No attempt is made to explain why John baptized where there was "much water," nor why the people who came to him were "baptized in the River Jordan;" why Jesus when baptized "went up straightway out of the water," nor why Philip and the eunuch "went down into the water" and "came up out of the water," unless what is said about the Greek preposition eis is supposed to answer all this. The rule suggested, that the preposition eis in connection with the verb, does not express the idea of entering into except it be combined with the verb, will not stand critical examination. There are numerous instances in which this idea is clearly and definitely expressed by the preposition in connection with a verb of motion without any such conjunction with the verb. Note the following instances:

See Luke 19:30: "Go your way into (upagettis) the village;" Mark 14:54: And Peter had followed him afar off, even within, into (eis) the court of the high priest, Mark 4:37. "And the waves beat into the boat (epeballen eis to ploion), inasmuch that the boat was now filling," Mark 4:1. "He (Jesus) entered into a boat"—eis ploion embanta. These passages are selected at random as we glance through our Greek Testament, and the list could be greatly extended if necessary.

3. It was not "contended" by us that Rom. 6:1-4 "relates mainly to the form of the administration of baptism." The argument of the apostle, as we distinctly stated, relates to something very different and the reference to baptism is incidental, and is all the stronger for this reason for the purpose for which we used it. The whole force of the apostle's argument in his reference to baptism, hinges on the fact that it sets forth, symbolically, death to sin, being a burial at the end of an old life and a resurrection unto a new life. What our brother says here about literal and figurative uses of the words employed does not obscure the manifest fact that there is an unmistakable reference here to the form of baptism and its symbolical significance. We put over against what our brother says, the comment of the well-known Episcopalian scholars and commentators, Conybeare and Howson, who, in commenting on this passage say, that it cannot be understood "unless it be borne in mind that the primitive baptism was by immersion." All Bible commentators of any note, so far as we know, see in this passage a reference to the original form of baptism.

The conception of Christianity, which this passage presents, is so profoundly spiritual, that it is a great pity that its significance has been lost sight of by many, in consequence of a departure from the original practice. The continuance of a sinful life, Paul argues, is impossible, because of the profound and radical change in character which has been brought about through faith in Christ, and this very fact of a radical change of life, he says, is set forth in our baptism—a burial and a resurrection—the end of the old life and the beginning of the new life. But this is made possible only through the resurrection of Christ from the dead—a fact to which baptism in its original form bears perpetual testimony.—EDITOR.]

Denver's Charter Vote.

Denver voted on a new charter Sept. 22. The instrument which was prepared by twenty-one carefully chosen persons who spent fifty-four days and nights in its preparation, was rejected by a majority of more than 7,000 votes. The whole number of votes cast was 36,100. The number who registered before the election was 50,870. There were, therefore, 14,770 who did not vote.

A study of the votes by wards shows that the charter was defeated by the worst elements in the town. In the lowest wards—lowest as to intelligence and morals—the vote stood as follows: 222 for to 1,257 against; 471 for to 1,868 against; 377 for to 1,848 against; 396 for to 2,322 against; 418 for to 1,726 against; This is the record of votes where the dens of vice, the gin mills and the gambling-houses are. In the well-to-do residence wards the votes were, 1,568 for to 716 against; 2,014 for to 1,237 against; 1,631 for to 1,342 against. The South Broadway Christian Church stands near the center of the ward last referred to.

The new charter was especially severe on gambling, wine rooms and saloons. This fact explains in a measure the vote. The law requires that another vote shall be taken in thirty or sixty days. It is not probable that any attention will be paid to this law by those who are in authority. Colossal frauds were perpetrated. The testimonies in at least one prayer and conference meeting the evening after the election, recited the frauds of which those who spoke were cognizant. It is proposed to carry the matter to the courts. There is, however, but little expectation of justice from them. R. E. PORTER.

Armourdale (Kans.) Church.

The First Christian Church of Kansas City, after the recent flood, undertook to restore the badly damaged house of worship of the congregation in Armourdale, just across the Kansas line. In the quite heavy expense of this work we have received aid from several churches and brethren in this and other states, and we ask space to make acknowledgement of their generous gifts, which were as follows:

Church at Cedar Rapids, Ia., $51; Barnett, Ill., $5.25; Pontiac, Ill., $7.35; Plattsburg, Mo., $43; Martinsville, Mo., $38.70; Forest Avenue, Kansas City, Mo., $38; Kansas Christian Missionary Society, $50; R. A. Long, Kansas City, Mo., $163.20; D. O. Smart, Kansas City, Mo., $50; A. R. Knox, Hinsdale, Ill., $3; total, $449.50.

For these gifts we join with our Armourdale brethren in earnest thanks. We have placed their church home in good condition again, except seating, at an expense of about $1,000. Hope to have it seated soon.

2. If through tickets cannot be procured at the starting point, tickets should be purchased to the nearest point where through tickets can be obtained, and then purchased through to the place of meeting, and a certificate from the ticket agent showing that said ticket has been purchased.

3. Return rate. Tickets for the return journey will be sold by ticket agent at the place of meeting at one-third the first-class limited fare to those who hold certificates signed by the ticket agent where the through ticket to the place of meeting was purchased, and countersigned by the secretary of the convention.

Note.

It is absolutely necessary from this Association that a certificate be procured indicating that a ticket costing not less than seventy-five cents has been purchased for the journey.

Certificates can be procured not more than three days before the meeting begins and not more than two days after the first day of the meeting. Tickets will be available for continuous passage only. No stop-over privilege will be allowed on said tickets. Certificates will not be honored unless presented within three days after the adjournment of the meeting. It is understood that Sunday will not be reckoned as one of the three days, either before the opening date or the closing date of said convention.

A validation fee of twenty-five cents will be collected upon each return ticket by the Joint Agent.

Very Important.

No refund of fare can be expected because of the failure of parties to obtain certificates or to have them properly signed by the special agent for the return journey.

Please note in what Association you are located, and be very careful to observe the rules of that Association. In order that no mistake may be made, it would be wise if you would inquire of the railroad agent at your town or city, asking him if he has received instruction to sell tickets at the reduced rate. Do this at once, so that if he has not received such instructions he may ask for them at once.

Extension of Tickets for Side Trip.

Tickets deposited with Joint Agent at Detroit on or before Oct. 23, will be extended to Oct. 26, 1903, to permit of side trip to Niagara Falls and return, on payment of fee of fifty cents, such side trip tickets, Detroit and Niagara Falls and return, to be sold to holders of Joint Agency receipts at rate of one fare for the round trip on Oct. 22 and 23, with return limit to reach Detroit not later than Oct. 26, 1903, which is the final date on which passengers may leave Detroit for original starting point.

M., just at close of first session. We would like to have all who can throughout the south join us, that we may enjoy each other's fellowship. We will have a special car, and if enough write us in time other cars will be added.

All Aboard for Detroit.

THE LAST WORD.

Before this paper reaches its readers again, the convention will be in session in Detroit.

That we may aid all as much as possible, we make a few suggestions, which, if followed, will be of great value to you as well as the local committee.

Upon your arrival you will be met at the depot by members of the depot division of the reception committee. They will wear white caps and badges. They will assist you to the right cars, in order that you may reach the headquarters with the least possible delay.

At the headquarters you will go first to the registration committee, where a record will be made of your name and home address. From there you will go to the committee on assignments, where you will be given a card with the name and address of the family with whom you will make your home while here. From there you will go to the badge and program committee, and upon receiving your badge and program, the committee of guides will see to it that you are shown to your temporary home.

Every one should arrive in Detroit as early in the evening as possible. It will be necessary for those arriving on the very late trains to go to the hotels for the night, as it would not be possible to get from the late trains to your stopping places before midnight, and we can hardly ask those who have so kindly offered to assist us, to remain in readiness to receive you at so late an hour.

Wherever possible, we would like to have all, whether met at the depot by friends or not, go at once to headquarters and register.

Let it be understood that the advance guard of the reception committee will be on duty at the depots, night and day, from the early morning of the 15th till late Saturday night, the 17th. They will be ready to give all the needed information and in every way render any assistance in their power. Look for them when you leave the train, and make yourselves known, and do not be at all backward in asking their help.

For information regarding rates, trains and connections, ask your ticket agent.

Excursion rates to Niagara Falls have been arranged for Thursday, Oct. 23.

If weather is favorable, arrangements will also be made at a nominal rate for a boat trip down the Detroit River and up to the Flats. This is one of the most beautiful trips you can possibly take.

These trips, however, should be side issues. Let the convention be the great object of your coming. Pray earnestly that God may richly bless our efforts and that great good may result.

A. B. JENNINGS,

Chairman Executive Committee.

DON'T WAIT UNTIL TOO LATE.

Do you know what it means to cure constipation? It means to turn aside and throw out of the body all the woes and miseries caused by a clogged up system, and they are many. Constipation means that the bowels are weak, so that they cannot keep up that constant motion the doctors call peristaltic action. When that stops passages cease, the blood begins to absorb the poisons through the walls of the intestines, and thus disease is scattered everywhere. Death often lays its foundation in this way. Torturing diseases like dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney troubles, liver complaints, heart disease, headaches and a hundred and one other complaints start that way. A cure must come through toning up, strengthening and invigorating the bowels. This can be easily, gently and permanently done by Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine. Not a liquor or patent medicine. A full list of ingredients and explanation of their action with each package. It is a tonic laxative of the highest class. It builds up the bowels, restores the lost action and adds new strength and vigor. Only one small dose a day will positively cure constipation of any degree, by removing the cause of the trouble. Try it. A free sample bottle for the asking. Write for it to-day. Address, Vernal Remedy Co., 19 Seneca Building, Buffalo, N. Y.

All leading druggists have it for sale.

From Nebraska to Detroit.

The knotty problem of the proper route to Detroit has at last been solved in Nebraska. The Union Pacific, Illinois Central and Wabash railroads have been chosen. There will be just enough of us to make it necessary to all go together as far as possible. Omaha union depot will be the rallying point, and the start will be made in the evening of Oct. 15, which will bring us to Detroit on the evening of the 16th, about 24 hours after leaving Omaha. Those not in reach of the Union Pacific or connecting lines should buy tickets to read over the Illinois Central from Omaha, and over the Wabash from Chicago. Don't let the agents route you over any other lines. The through rate is one fare plus $2 for the round trip. This amounts to $22.40 from Lincoln, and $21.50 from Omaha. Ask your agent for rates.

It is desirable that those who are going, let me know at the earliest possible moment. Not later than Oct. 14 anyway, so that I may arrange for proper accommodations. If you would like a tourist sleeper, that will cost $1.50 more. Advise me also what you think you will need in the way of rooms and accommodations at Detroit.

Cannot a number of the churches that have given the pastors no vacations this summer get up a purse and send their preacher? It would be a gracious and timely thing to do. The good resulting to the church will more than pay for the outlay. W. A. BALDWIN.

BRICKERT.

On Sept. 19, at his home near Franklin, Ind., my dear old father passed to his reward. He was one of the noblest old men that I had ever known. Many years he has been a servant of the Lord. My first recollection of him was at the family altar. He was the only man in the community who had family worship. My aged mother and five children survive him. I will not get to be with mother now, but all the other children will. Pray for us. E. W. BRICKERT.

CRUM.

This church lost a godly member when Bro. Wm. Crum entered into rest. He was our senior elder, beloved of all who knew him. He and his faithful companion had gone to El Campo, Texas, for a better climate, where now he is buried. The church here remembered him in a beautiful memorial service, decorating the church and his pew, singing his favorite hymns and renewing the memory of his earnest words and loving deeds. He lives again in the goodness of his children in the flesh and in the spirit. W. E. SPICER.

HEDGE.

Died of paralysis, in Lincoln, Neb., Sept. 5, 1903, Porter Hedge, son of George M. and Belinda Hedge. The funeral was held at the First Christian Church, conducted by the pastor, Rev. N. E. Haynes, assisted by the Rev. J. Z. Briscoe, of Bethany. Brother Hedge was born in Coshocton Co., Ohio, June 21, 1848. He entered the military service of the government in 1864, having first enlisted in the 142nd Ohio volunteer infantry and afterwards in the 51st Ohio regiment. His discharge was after the close of the civil war. He joined the family who had preceded him at Eddyville, Iowa, in 1865, when he became a member of the Christian Church under the preaching of N. A. McConnell. On March 7, 1875, he was united in marriage to Miss Martha E. Kisor. One son blessed this union. Both wife and son survive to mourn the sudden death of husband and father. He was a member of the board of officers in the Lincoln Church at the time of his death. In all his dealings with men, his first thought was loyalty to Christ. * *

JUDY.

Kate A. S. Judy, wife of Col. J. W. Judy, passed from earth to her reward at her home near Tallula Ill., Sept. 12, 1903, at the age of 70 years. For 57 years a member of the Tallula Church, she lived before the community a life of rare beauty. In the vigor of her life she was especially interested in Sunday school work, and was often heard in our conventions. She contributed to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST over twenty-five years ago under the head, "My Chimney Corner." She leaves a husband and one son, Charles, to mourn her loss. The funeral was conducted from the Christian Church at Tallula, S. pt. 14, by the writer, assisted by Chas. E. Smoot, of Petersburg. She belonged to the class of whom Paul affirmed, "Our citizenship is in heaven." RUSSELL F. THRAPP.

HARVUOT.

The people of Panama were greatly shocked to receive word of the sudden death of Mr. Lewis Harvuot, which occurred Saturday morning at a hotel in Hendley, Neb., where he was temporarily staying. He was apparently as well as ever up to within a few minutes of his death. He had just come down from his room at the hotel and went out on the porch and sat down. Someone spoke to him but he did not answer. This somewhat surprised the speaker, who looked at Mr. Harvuot and found that he was ill and suffering. He was assisted into the house and a physician summoned at once. A friend there, Mr. H. F. Austin, who knew Mr. Harvuot for several years, was also summoned and was with him when he breathed his last, which was in a very few minutes. His trouble seemed to be of the lungs and heart as he spoke a few minutes before his death of his lungs filling up, and that he must lie down.

In Mr. Harvuot's death, Panama loses one of her prominent citizens, one who from an early day in the history of the town has been a familiar figure to the people who have lived here. Mr. Harvuot was actively identified with the growth and upbuilding of Panama and used his means freely to that end. He was a liberal contributor to the church of which he was a member, and was ever active in all its work, and probably less than any other member when at home, absent from its services. He was generous to his friends, and several young men now leading useful lives and in places of profit and honor, could testify to Mr. Harvuot's general helpfulness, while many others have good reasons for thankfulness for the practical expressions of his good will.

In the enterprises of the church, Mr. Harvuot always gave with a lavish hand. The present splendid Christian Church in Panama, is the gift of himself and wife, now also deceased. He was a liberal giver to Drake University, and was a member of the board of trustees of that institution and always took an active practical interest in its welfare. He was a member of the Foreign Missionary Society of the church, and gave to that enterprise with the same liberality which always characterized his giving.

Lewis Harvuot was born in Ashland Co., Ohio, Jan. 1, 1830, where he lived until 1854, when he came to Iowa and located in Panama May 3, of that year, and has made his home here ever since. Sept. 5, 1870, he was married to Miss Annetta Shamp. To them were born two children, Mrs. Carrie Campbell and Mrs. Esta Jenkins, both living. His wife died in October, 1886. His second marriage occurred in 1888 to Miss Sallie E. Garvin, of Mt. Pleasant, who died in June of 1902. Mr. Harvuot became a member of the Christian Church in 1854, and was an elder in that organization and always kept in active touch with the work of the local church as well as in its wider field.

He bears an honorable record as a soldier, as a member of Company I of the 29th Iowa Infantry, and was promoted from this regiment to the rank of first lieutenant in the 52nd U. S. Infantry. He was mustered out of service in the summer of 1865 at the end of the civil war.

The year Mr. Harvuot came to Panama, 1854, he was appointed county treasurer and recorder. These offices needed so little attention, that he was able to attend to them on Saturday and a few extra hours, while he taught school the rest of the week. It is worthy of remark that Mr. Harvuot taught the second term of school in Panama in the little building now occupied by Allen & Doyel, at a salary of $12.50 a month.

The funeral services were held yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Rev. J. Irving Brown preached the sermon and conducted the services. He was assisted by Pres. Hill M. Bell and J. Mad. Williams, of Des Moines, Le Grand Pace, of Onawa, and M. Deardorf, of Yale, Iowa.

Shelbyville, Oct. 2.—I am in a good meeting with Bro. L. H. Otto, the pastor, and the congregation here. We have added 25 in 5 days; there is a great prospect for a splendid meeting. Brother Otto is a man of splendid public pose and the equal of any pastor I have worked with as a personal worker.—JAMES SMALL.

Fairbury, Sept. 28.—Two were added yesterday morning on confession. The work is going on nicely; interest is increasing.—WM. WARD.

Quincy, Sept. 28.—The vacation season is over and our work is very encouraging. We can report 10 additions for September. Our Endeavor Society is the largest in the city, and the meetings are the most enthusiastic I have ever attended.—W. W. BURKS.

Centralia, Sept. 27.—Observed Decision Day in the Sunday-school; 5 confessions. One baptism and 9 by letter recently.—S. E. LOOMIS, clerk.

Brazil, Sept. 29.—Four baptisms Sunday. Meeting continues.—ALLEN G. SHAW, Knights-town, Ind.

State Line, Sept. 28.—Just closed a short meeting here. Six added, four baptisms. Was assisted by Bro. C. E. Wagner, of Kirksville, Mo. His services as soloist and chorister were of superior order. I began a meeting at Old Union, Vermilion Co., Ill., Sept. 30.—CHAS. E. SHULTZ.

Waynetown, Sept. 29.—On Sunday, Sept. 20, we dedicated a beautiful new church building at Ridge Farm. The building cost $1,500, and is entirely paid for. Seven hundred dollars was raised dedication day. J. C. Burkhardt, pastor of the Christian Church at Connersville, Ind., preached the dedicatory sermon. Last October a revival meeting was held in a schoolhouse at Ridge Farm which resulted in 33 additions and an organization. During the year the church here has been conducting this work as a sort of mission work; but it is now strong enough to take care of itself. I began a series of meetings immediately after dedication, and in the week that has elapsed, twelve more have come in with us; five were confessions; the rest came by statement and letter.—H. O. PRITCHARD, pastor.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—South McAlister, Oct. 1.—The Territorial Convention recently held at Vinita shows the Master's cause prospering throughout this great country. G. T. Black is retained as corresponding secretary; T. R. Dean, recording secretary. I began a meeting last Lord's day with home forces. Four additions to date. We need preachers in this territory.—I. H. TELB.

IOWA.—Woodbine, Sept. 29.—Our tent meeting closed with nine accessions; seven by confession. One Sunday was given over to a farewell to a former pastor, Dr. Pickett, who, with his wife, was en route to the Philippines as medical missionaries under our F. C. M. S. Brother Ridenour, our singer, did splendid work and pleased all. I commend him heartily. The pastor did the preaching, three of the other churches joining with us in the Sunday night services.—J. H. WRIGHT, pastor.

KANSAS.—Wellington, Sept. 28.—One added here yesterday. Three others recently not previously reported. Two by letter and one by baptism.—H. M. BARNETT.

Effingham, Oct. 1.—Have just closed a great and good meeting with 47 additions; 35 of them were by baptism. The preaching was done by evangelist Sister Hazelrigg, of Topeka.—Z. S. HASTINGS.

KENTUCKY.—Earlington, Sept. 28.—Our meeting one week old with 11 additions. A grand day yesterday. Church crowded and many turned away.—W. R. JINNETT.

Petersburg, Sept. 26.—We begin our meeting at Warsaw, Ky., to-morrow. H. D. Smith, of Hopkinsville, Ky., is to do the preaching. The Warsaw brethren have recently raised about $250 for repairs and improvements which will be made at the close of the meeting.—MILO ATKINSON.

MASSACHUSETTS.—Boston, Sept. 29.—A week's meeting with the church at West Pawlet, Vt., resulted in the baptism of three—a gentleman and his wife, and a young lady who, up to the time of her baptism, had never seen any person immersed. Charles Forster has been the minister there only a short time, but long enough to win the love of all hearts. Next Thursday the New England convention will begin at Springfield. We are praying for a great meeting and hoping for large results from its consultations.—J. H. HARDIN.

MINNESOTA.—St. Paul, Oct. 1.—Work opening well. Rally day next Sunday. Church Extension last Sunday. More than met our appointment.—C. C. DAVIS, 89 Leach St.

Joplin, Sept. 28.—Fine audience yesterday. Eighty-nine additions to date. Will continue this week.—W. A. MOORE.

St. Louis, 1133 Hamilton Ave.—Two additions to-day: one from the Presbyterians and one by confession.—FRANK J. NICHOLS.

Plattsburg, Sept. 28.—Three additions yesterday. Eight others recently not reported; 24 at regular meetings since January, and 58 away from home, making 82 thus far this year. Am to hold two meetings yet this year. A. R. Hunt, of Savannah, is assisting me here, then I am to assist him at Savannah.—B. F. HILL.

Mound City, Sept. 29.—District-evangelist Conner, assisted by Prof. G. A. Butler, just closed a meeting at Elmo, Mo., resulting in nine accessions to the church, three by confession and baptism, five by statement, and one from the Baptist. The weather was bad most of the time, or we should have had more additions. Brother Conner's preaching has strengthened the church in every way, while Brother Butler's solos were sweet and soul-stirring. We expect to reap much yet from the meeting. Three added by letter at Fairfax during September.—J. N. COLE, pastor.

MONTANA.—Central Park, Sept. 26.—Three additions recently to the Central Park Christian Church. All departments of church work are in fine condition.—G. F. BOOTH, pastor.

Morris, Sept. 24.—The Disciples of Christ in this locality have just organized a church of 28 members. The work was started by a Ladies' Aid Society organized for that purpose, who secured Bro. A. L. Chapman, of Butte, Mont., for a series of meetings held in our schoolhouse. He was with us eight days and baptized 18, four of whom did not take membership with us. We think very highly of him and his work here. We have no pastor as yet, but are praying for the right man. We are in the country, 25 miles from town.—MRS. L. C. DANA, clerk.

NEBRASKA.—Edgar, Sept. 30.—Three more confessions at Ox Bow last Lord's day. I closed my five years' and nine months' work, which has been very pleasant and successful. Nearly 100 have been added, and all at regular services, except two weeks' meeting when we dedicated our new building. We leave the work in excellent condition for our successor. I will move to Mountain Grove, Mo., Oct. 5, to take up the work. I want to do evangelistic work this winter.—E. W. YOCUM.

OHIO.—North Eaton, Sept. 28.—Chas. A. Pearce, of Galion, O., is assisting me in a meeting here. The meeting has been in progress one week, with 11 additions. The Red and Blue contest closed Sept. 27 with an attendance of 170. There were 48 present the day the contest was begun. Everything is in a flourishing condition.—ROBERT B. CHAPMAN.

OKLAHOMA.—Norman, Sept. 28.—We had three added yesterday by letter and one by confession of faith. We can report 15 additions for the month of September. Mrs. Tannehill, who is doing rescue work among fallen women, was with us yesterday and we gave an offering of $12.34 to the work. We have just secured 100 new song books and will order a new organ this week. Brother Wherry is leading our music. I preached at Rocky Point schoolhouse two nights last week, where Bro. J. G. Ethridge is in a meeting with five confessions to date.—J. G. CREASON.

Perkins, Sept. 29.—We have just returned from Coyle, where we preached Sunday morning and evening. At the evening service we had a full house, and two ladies made the good confession and will be immersed at my next visit there. I preach half time at Coyle and Perkins.—J. W. GARNER.

Blackwell, Sept. 28.—Our first year's work with this church closed yesterday with one more confession. We have had a total of 87 additions during the year. Our junior society, which started with 20 members, closed the missionary year with 107, and captured the banner at the territorial convention.—C. H. HILTON.

ONTARIO.—Bowmanville, Sept. 30.—Two more added by baptism, making six at regular services since July. We have been delighted by visits and sermons of two former pastors—F. D. Butler and E. B. Barnes; and also of Prof. C. F. Paul, who spent much time at his home here. Prof. Paul also greatly pleased an audience of eight hundred at the M. E. Church here, on his great theme, "World-Wide Evangelization."—B. H. HAYDEN.

TEXAS.—Melissa, Sept. 24.—I lately held a meeting at Danna, in this county, with 54 additions. Will soon organize a congregation and build there.—J. P. HOLMES.

Fire and Sword in Shansi. The Story of the Martyrdom of Foreigners and Chinese Christians. By E. H. Edwards. (Revell.)

During the summer of 1900, when the foreign legations were besieged at Peking, the whole world was in a fever of anxiety, and there was great joy when it was learned at last that the representatives of the Powers had escaped with their lives. But at that very time, and even after the allies entered Peking, the representatives of a greater Power were being massacred almost without resistance in the far western province of Shansi. In this province alone 159 missionaries lost their lives. The record of their experiences is a modern Book of Martyrs. The author of the volume has been for twenty years a missionary in Shansi, and owes his life to the fact that he happened to be home on a furlough at the time of the massacres. As soon as the news was received, he hastened to the scene of the atrocities and gathered up these memorials of those who had fallen.

Mission Methods in Manchuria. By John Ross, D. D. (Revell.)

The success of Presbyterian missions in Manchuria has been enough to justify a general interest in the methods which their workers have used. Dr. Ross, who is a missionary at Moukden, one of the cities soon to be opened to foreign trade as a result of Secretary Hay's diplomacy, gives in this volume a comprehensive statement of the characteristics and conditions of the people of Manchuria and of the methods by which the native membership of his denomination in that country has been increased from three men to twenty-seven thousand in less than thirty years. Manchuria is the sore spot of the east, the tender point in the present struggle between China and the western nations and the still more desperate struggle among the western nations over China, and Dr. Ross's book is a contribution to the knowledge of the current problems there as well as to the study of systematic missionary methods.

The Educational Conquest of the Far East. By Robert E. Lewis. (Revell.)

The awakening of Japan, a phenomenon scarcely paralleled in the history of the race, has been very largely an educational movement. Few, perhaps, appreciate how intimate and direct has been the connection between strictly academic education under the influence of foreign ideals in Japan, and the commercial, political and religious renaissance which has marked the past half century in that country. The first and most interesting part of this book is a study of the governmental system of education in Japan. The second describes education in China, especially the old-style education which, for the most part, still prevails in the schools maintained by the government. The concluding section discusses some of the educational problems of the Orient, with special reference to their religious bearings. The book will be of interest and value to all who are interested in the evangelization of the east and to all students of educational progress.

Into All the World. By Amos R. Wells. (United Society of Christian Endeavor. Cloth 50 cents, paper 35 cents.)

This is the best of all brief and comprehensive books about missions. It gives within brief compass a general sketch of each mission field, a rapid survey of the missionary work that has been done, and a large number of short biographies of great missionaries. Not many writers can, like Mr. Wells, compress so much matter into little space without squeezing all the juice out of it, but this little book is lively, entertaining and anecdotal in spite of the vast amount of condensed information which it contains. An appendix of many pages gives practical directions for using the book in a mission study class, test questions, bibliography, suggested outlines for further study, historical and statistical charts, and index. We have no hesitation in saying that this is the biggest half-dollars' worth of missionary information ever offered to the public.

The Magazines for October.

The Atlantic Monthly opens with a discussion of "The Power of the Senate," which shows that the power of that body is entirely out of proportion to its practical efficiency, and that its tendency is toward undemocratic government. An article by Booker T. Washington on "The Fruits of Industrial Training," is a timely reply to certain criticisms which have lately been given an undeserved currency in some parts of the south. Lyman Abbott writes a sketch of Henry Ward Beecher, to whose pulpit and editorial chair he succeeded, and tells some new and good anecdotes of the great preacher. During the past year there have been several articles in the Atlantic portraying, with varying degrees of charm and convincingness, what might be called the higher values of out-of-door sports. This month the theme is "Walks and Walking Tours." Henry Van Dyke has a desultory but instructive article on "The Study of English Poetry."

That Christian missions and missionaries have played an important part in drawing together the nations of the earth, and especially in bringing the uncivilized peoples into contact with civilization, is not a new idea. Dr. James S. Dennis, in an article in the Missionary Review of the World, summarizes the evidences of this fact. The same magazine contains a brief but important article by a missionary in the Congo State denouncing the government of that State as conducted by the King of Belgium. Hitherto the missionaries have had but little to say on the subject for fear worse things would befall them, but this writer believes that the time has come to speak out. It is unquestionably an outrageous government, conducted solely for profit by the most unprincipled monarch in Europe.

The best pictures of Alaska, and especially of the Klondike region, that have yet been published appear in The World's Work. There is an informing article with them, setting forth the wonders and resources of the "Empire of the North," but the pictures are the main thing. This enterprising magazine completes its third year with this number. Its success during that time has been so pronounced that its publishers have been compelled to erect a large new building to accommodate this and their other business.

The most beautiful of American magazines is more beautiful than usual this month. We mean, of course, Country Life in America. It is a double number and is devoted to the planning and building of country homes. Persons who are building or are contemplating building houses on earth, and those who take delight in the less expensive sport of building houses on paper, will find this number helpful and enjoyable.

The Delineator has become much more than a fashion magazine, though it is still that in the largest sense. But it is so much more that even a "mere man" need not be ashamed to be caught reading it. This month's issue has some good fiction, and a great many practical suggestions about the making and furnishing of a home.

The Review of Reviews as usual gives an able editorial summary of the events of the past month and presents articles on live themes. A review of Mayor Low's administration in New York is of special interest in view of the impending campaign for his reelection.

The Pulpit

The Place and Power of Preaching.

2 Tim. 4:2.

By W. S.
PRIEST

The beginning of one's ministry in a new field of labor is an event of more than passing moment—at least it is of deepest significance and most vital interest to those more nearly concerned in it, viz.: the congregation which has called, and the preacher who has accepted the call. On the one hand the church wishes to know something of the man whom it has chosen to serve in word and in deed. Is he a good man—a spiritual man? Has he been prepared for the successful discharge of the functions of the gospel minister by such culture of mind and heart, without which no preacher in these days may hope for the largest usefulness? Is his record without blemish? Is he well spoken of by those who know him? Is he capable of leading a congregation with tireless enthusiasm, with wisdom and consecration into still larger service for the Master? Is he a well-balanced man, a safe counselor, one who may be trusted implicitly? These are some of the questions which naturally and rightfully come into the minds of the members of the church which for the first time hears its minister. On the other hand, the preacher would like to be assured that the church which has called him to its leadership is such a church as he fondly desires every church to be. Are the members loyal and devoted to the cause of Christ? Are they seeking to exhibit the mind and the spirit and the character of the Master before men? Do they count as a moral and spiritual force in the community? Will they stand lovingly and helpfully by their minister, willing to be lead into constantly enlarging activities for Christ and the Church? Do they have large visions of gospel service, "attempting great things for God, expecting great things from God?" These are some questions every real minister asks concerning the congregation which has called him to its pastorate.

Let us, both church and minister, believe that in each other we have found what each desires, and that the "courtship," which has been carried on for two months and more, is this day consummated in the "marriage rite" which shall bind us together for a most blessed fellowship in labors abundant in the Lord. I very greatly rejoice that this church has been served by some of the strongest and best men amongst us, and I only trust and hope and pray that in the years to come there may be no letting down of that high standard which has characterized the history of the Central Church. I have thought that I could choose no more important theme for my first sermon to you than "The Place and Power of Preaching in the World of To-day," basing the discourse upon the very brief, yet withal very pertinent text of 2 Timothy 4:2—"Preach the word."

Believing as I do that the preaching of the word of God is of paramount importance in this present world, I would wish to set the key-note of my ministry among you, around which all the sublime harmony of the song of redemption in Christ Jesus our Lord must ever center, in the thought that the faithful, earnest and enthusiastic preaching of the unsearchable riches of Christ will be crowned with the blessing of heaven in the conversion of men to that righteousness which is in Jesus Christ and the building of them up in the faith once for all delivered to the saints. Let us consider then

1. The Place of Preaching in the World of To-day.

That the preaching of the gospel of Christ has so important a place in these later days, as it has ever had, is most certainly believed by all Christian people. No matter if sometimes we hear it said that the pulpit is losing its power; that not nearly so many people, especially men, attend the services as formerly; that the preacher does not count for nearly so much in the community as he used to do; that there is nothing to interest and attract men to the churches and keep them there as in former years, and, hence, that the people are drifting away from the houses of the Lord—all of which may be easily disproved by facts which are within the reach of all who care to investigate them. Perhaps, some pulpits are losing their power—and they ought to!—and some preachers are losing their grip on men—and this is not to be wondered at—for when the pulpits and the preachers are concerned about everything in the heavens above and on the earth beneath and under the earth except their apostolic duty of preaching the gospel; when sermons consist of sentimental twaddle or empty and vain theological hairsplitting, or are based upon the latest novel of the day; when church services degenerate into spectacular performances, instead of being sincere and humble worship of Almighty God; when vital piety is branded as a relic of the past and not the thing for up-to-date people; when professing Christians cannot be distinguished from those making no profession of religion whatever—then, of course, that pulpit and that preacher and those people are already in the process of decay and presently will be as though they were not.

But nothing in all this earth can ever take the place of the real pulpit—that pulpit which constantly and with ever-widening influence sounds out the gospel of hope and of life and of love; which knows the Word of God and is not afraid to preach it fully, giving saint and sinner his portion in due season; which knows what it believes, whom it believes and why it believes, and in the strength of the Holy Spirit preaches that belief to all the world. The public press will never supplant the pulpit. I allow no man to excel me in my appreciation and praise of much of our splendid American journalism—not the "yellow" kind, however! I am a friend of the newspaper man. He has always treated me right. The influence of many of our metropolitan papers for good is tremendous. They do mould public sentiment to a wonderful degree. Many of their editors are among the brightest and best of our citizens, who are just as anxious for the welfare of the people as are the preachers. They are real public servants. But every intelligent editor knows that his paper does not and cannot take the place of the pulpit. Each occupies its own legitimate field, and they ought to be, as in many cases they are, allies in the moral toning up of the community. They must stand shoulder to shoulder in pleading for individual and civic righteousness and cleanness. There is no need for antagonism between the two. Let the preachers recognize the good and the value of the press. Let the press help the pulpit to become still more effective in its teaching of religion, then will this present world the sooner accomplish what both pulpit and press most devoutly wish, viz.: the betterment of all the people.

Nor will the lecture-platform ever drive the pulpit out of business. Great themes, great lecturers, there will be; but these, too, have a field all their own. The pulpit is not, particularly, a lecture-platform from which matters of political economy, of sociology, of business and other relationships are to be constantly discussed, although, believe me, the preaching of the gospel of Christ has much in every way to do with these great problems, which, in my judgment, will never be satisfactorily and permanently solved save in the application of the principles and the teaching of the Carpenter of Nazareth. But, on the other hand, the pulpit is the place for the preaching of Jesus and him crucified; for the holding out of a helping hand to sin-burdened humanity; for the pointing of the world to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world; for giving rest and peace and joy and hope and light and life to the weary, foot-sore pilgrims of earth. Ah, beloved, as long as hearts ache; as long as tears flow; as cares oppress; as sin and suffering and crime and death roll like sea-billows over our common humanity, so long will there be a place for the pulpit; for tender, loving, helpful preaching of Him whom to know aright is life everlasting; a place for people to come to pray for themselves and for one another; for "More things are wrought by prayer Than this world dreams of. Wherefore let thy voice

Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friend?

For so the whole round world is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God."

Nor can the pleasures of this world, nor business, nor the deceitfulness of riches, nor anything, ever take the place of the preaching of the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Since the Founder of our faith said to his disciples in the long ago: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation;" since the great apostle to the Gentiles said: "For seeing that in the wisdom of God the world through its wisdom knew not God, it was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of the preaching to save them that believe;" we need not fear the extinction of the pulpit. God is back of it and Christ is with it and the Holy Spirit is guiding it and it will continue to live and accomplish its holy mission in all the earth. Let us consider,—
